In view of this array of facts no appropriation carrying the same expense would have more merit than the one for the cable from Sleeping Bear Point to South Manitou Island. The Government has just completed two life-saving stations, one located on Sleeping Bear Point, the other on South Manitou Island. They will be manned in the spring of 1902; then there will always be some one on duty at these points. Weather signals could be displayed at the islands and vessels get information that would be of essential value in time of storm. Relying on their own judgment, as masters are now compelled to do, they many times move too soon or wait too long, when they could have much more safety and much better dispatch could they be served with the information obtained from the weather bureaus.

Yours, truly,

D. C. WICKHAM.

Hon. R. P. BISHOP,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAYNE. I am satisfied, without any further reading.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, the report is an ample explanation. South Manitou Island lies some distance from the mainland. Upon this island there is a life-saving station and light-house. There is also one on the main island. The south end of this island is called the graveyard of vessels for Lake Michigan. I presume there is more traffic passes this island than almost any other point on the Great Lakes, except through Detroit River. It is of very great importance to the shipping interests. Personally my district is not interested. I only speak on behalf of the vessel owners and great shipping interests of the lakes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BISHOP. I simply want to insert one word in line 8 as an amendment. After the word "telegraph" insert the word "cable."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, after the word "telegraph," insert the word "cable."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BISHOP, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REDIVISION OF THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11599) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions.

Be it enacted, etc., That the district of Alaska be, and the same is hereby, divided into three recording and judicial divisions, as follows:

The first division shall include all that portion of said district east of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude.

The second division of said district shall consist of all that territory lying west, northwest, and north of that certain line described as follows: Commencing at the mouth of the Colville River, on the north coast of the district of Alaska; thence following the Colville River south and west to a point where said river crosses the one hundred and fifty-fourth meridian line the second time; thence following the one hundred and fifty-fourth meridian line south to the west side of Tohtankella Mountain and to the Yukon River; thence in a southeasterly direction to the western side of Mount McKinley; thence in a southwesterly direction to the most northern point of Lake Clark; thence along the northwest side of Lake Clark to the sixtieth degree of north latitude; thence west along said degree of latitude to Kuskokwim Bay. This division shall also include the mainland west of said bay and all the islands north of the fifty-ninth degree of north latitude.

The third division shall consist of all that portion of the district of Alaska not included within the first or second divisions of said district as hereinbefore described.

This act shall take effect and be enforced from and after July 1, 1902.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LACEY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to explain what changes this makes in the present district of Alaska. Does it make any change in the numbers?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No, sir; there is no increase in the number.

Mr. LACEY. There is a No. 1, a No. 2, and a No. 3?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. There is a No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3 in this bill.

Mr. LACEY. Are they substantially the same?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It enlarges the third district. On account of the population filling up the country, it has developed that the work in the second district has become something like two or three times like that in the third district.

Mr. LACEY. Does this transfer Nome to any other district?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think not. That is my recollection of it. There is no transfer to any other district. It leaves Nome where it now is.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a still further question. Have the committee investigated the propriety of remodeling the law in some respects, so as to take away political powers from the court, so as to relieve the court from the necessary taint that is liable to attach to any court that exercises political jurisdiction?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No, sir; the committee did not investigate that question.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think there ought to be an amendment in this bill which will require that these recorders, which are purely political officers, shall be appointed by the governor or executive rather than by the judges, so as to relieve the judges of the political complications that have arisen there by reason of the political power given to them that does not properly and should never belong to a court.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to express an opinion on this subject. Generally speaking, I may say, I am not in favor of vesting political power with the judges, but this measure came to the committee with the recommendation of the Attorney-General and the whole of the judges of the district of Alaska.

Mr. LACEY. I would commend to my friend the propriety of taking out of the courts of Alaska the political powers that have given so much trouble there.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I am quite sure if such a bill were introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary it will take pleasure in giving it a full and fair consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF CRIMINAL IDENTIFICATION.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10068) for the creation of a national bureau of criminal identification.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established and maintained in Washington, D. C., in connection with the Department of Justice of the United States, a division to be known as the national bureau of criminal identification, where shall be collected and filed, so far as may be practicable for record and report, plates, photographs, outline pictures, descriptions, information, and measurements of all persons who have been or may be convicted and imprisoned for violating any of the military, naval, or criminal laws of the United States, including the laws in force in any of the Territories or possessions of the United States, violations of which are punishable by the United States courts.

In said bureau shall also be collected and filed for record and report, so far as may be practicable, such plates, photographs, pictures, measurements, information, and descriptions of persons who have been or may be convicted and imprisoned for crimes committed in any State or Territory: Provided, That the constituted authorities of the several States and Territories, or of the municipalities thereof, shall provide the same for such purposes: And provided, That all such plates, photographs, outlines, measurements, information, and descriptions shall be transmitted to the director of said national bureau of criminal indentification, with a duly prepared certificate from an authorized officer or officers of the law having in charge such convicted person or persons: And provided, That the plate, photograph, outline, measurement, information, or description of any person wanted by the United States or State authorities for violation of any military, naval, or criminal law of the United States or any State or Territory may also be filed in said bureau as aforesaid: And provided, That before receiving, filing, or recording any such plates, photographs, outline pictures, measurements, information, or descriptions the director of said bureau shall be furnished for record with a certificate from the executive of any such State or Territory, or the mayor, town clerk, or recorder of any municipality therein, setting forth the fact that such State, Territory, or municipality is duly authorized by law or ordinance to cooperate and exchange such plates, photographs, outline pictures, measurements, information, and descriptions of persons who have been or may be convicted and imprisoned for crimes with said national bureau of criminal indentification. Said certificate shall also contain the name of the official or officials who may transmit such plates, photographs, outline pictures, measurements, information, or descriptions as duly authorized to provide the same, and to receive such in return as said national bureau of criminal identification may have to furnish.

That all such plates, photographs, outline pictures, measurements, information, or descriptions which may be received, filed, and recorded shall be placed in a systematic manner for ready consultation and comparison, and any information pertaining to the same, or any identification of person upon description furnished by any official aforesaid, through comparison with such plates, photographs, outline pictures, measurements, information, or description already filed and recorded, shall be furnished on request to any United States official duly authorized to receive the same, or to any State or municipal official, as aforesaid, who shall certify that the same is wanted in the interests of public justice and not for any private or personal use.

The several departments of the United States Government shall forward for record and file in said bureau any plates, photographs, outline pictures, descriptions, or information pertaining to any person who has or may in any way design or indicate that he or she may contemplate the violation or is known to have violated any military, naval, or criminal law of the United States or the criminal law of any State or Territory, when it shall have been determined by the principal official of any such department that the same is necessary for the prevention or detection of crime, or in the interests of the public welfare.

That there shall be a director of said bureau who shall be appointed by the Attorney-General of the United States, who, in order to better secure harmonious cooperation in the prosecution of the work herein contemplated, shall first confer with the chiefs of police composing the board of governors, as appointed by the National Association of Chiefs of Police of the United States, together with the Chief of the Secret Service and the chief inspector for the Post-Office Department, after each of whom shall have been legally qualified to participate in the privileges of said bureau as hereinbefore contemplated, and said director may be removed for cause at any time by the Attorney-General after an opportunity has been given him to be heard on written charges.

Said director shall be experienced in criminology, and have a general knowledge of professional criminals, and shall be expert in the several kinds of criminal measurements which may be in use in the United States.

He shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum, be furnished with 1 stenographer at $1,200, 3 clerks, 1 of whom shall be a practical photographer, at $1,000 per annum each, and a messenger at $900 per annum, and shall be authorized and empowered to employ 4 skilled operators in the detection and prevention of crime, at a salary of $1,500 each per annum, who may be assigned to any confidential work in the prevention and detection of crime, securing of information, etc., in connection with said bureau which may be necessary, and actual traveling expenses incurred shall be paid from the fund provided for the general expenses of said bureau, and all requisite furniture, stationery, and apparatus for maintaining such bureau, at a cost not to exceed $10,000, which several sums are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend page 2, line 22, by inserting after the word "mayor" the words "town clerk, or recorder."

Amend page 4, lines 11 and 12, by striking out of said lines, after the word "who," in line 11, the following: "in order to better secure harmonious cooperation in the prosecution of the work herein contemplated."

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"The records and information in possession of said bureau shall be open to the inspection and examination of all persons engaged in scientific investigations, or in the study of criminology, under the direction of the Attorney-General."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not desire to object, but I should like a full explanation of the operations of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object,

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

JOSEPH M. SIMMS.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3360) for the promotion of First Lieut. Joseph M. Simms, Revenue-Cutter Service.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to advance Lieut. Joseph M. Simms, Revenue-Cutter Service, one grade, from first lieutenant to that of captain, on the "Permanent waiting orders" list in the Revenue-Cutter Service, for meritorious acts of public service and wounds received in the United States service as appears upon the public records of the volunteer service of the Army and Navy and of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read:

At the end of the bill insert:

"Provided, That this act shall not increase the pay of said Simms above that provided for a first lieutenant on the retired list, to wit, $1,875.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, the explanation is that the bill passed a short time ago providing for the Revenue-Cutter Service gave no power to the President of the United States to make the same promotion as in the naval and Army service. The gentleman from New York will understand that this carries no possible increase in salary whatever. The lieutenant is receiving $1,890 per annum, and it is merely a reward for his services in promoting him to the rank of captain. It has the unanimous support of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and is believed to be due him as a recognition of the meritorious services of the gentleman during the war of 1861–1865.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment I wish to offer.

The SPEAKER. Is it an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. CONRY. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, in the committee amendment, strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert the word "ninety."

Mr. CONRY. That is merely to cure a clerical error.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CONRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF AN ARMY OFFICER.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 5213) providing for the selection and retirement of medical officers in the Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to select one from such medical officers of the Army as have served forty-one years or more, nine years of which shall have been as Surgeon-General, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him a major-general of the United States Army, for the purpose of placing him on the retired list.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the House bill was reported in the same language by the Committee on Military Affairs after conference with the War Department. Very briefly, it places the Surgeon-General of the Army on the same basis as the Surgeon-General of the Navy. General Sternberg will be the beneficiary of the bill. He has served over forty years and rendered distinguished services. By an act of Congress the Surgeon of the Navy has been retired with increased rank. The medical profession all over the United States has asked the same recognition for the Surgeon-General of the Army, the War Department has recommended it, and it seems to me but an act of justice to a man who has rendered such conspicuous service during all his life to give him the same recognition that has been accorded to a like officer of a sister branch of the service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that the House a few days ago repealed as far as the House is concerned the statute by which naval officers were retired at a higher grade.

Mr. HULL. That is true; but it will not affect those already retired. I will say that in my judgment the services rendered by General Sternberg during his life, not only for the Army but for the cause of science, make this recognition a fit one for Congress, notwithstanding the House has repealed the provision put in the personnel bill. The officers largely who would receive the benefit of such a provision have received it, and that is especially true in the case of the Surgeon-General who retired last year and was succeeded by Dr. Rixey. Of course, Dr. Rixey would not come in under the provisions of the bill even if it had not been repealed. It seems to me in the interest of justice and fair dealing that this bill should pass in order that the Surgeon-General of the Army may receive the same benefit as is accorded to the Surgeon-General of the Navy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did all the Democrats on the committee vote in favor of it?

Mr. HULL. I think they were all in favor of it, as far as I know; there was no yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did it meet the approval of all the Democrats?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, it meets with my approval, and, as far as I know, it met with the approval of all the Democrats that were present when the bill was up. This bill has a peculiar basis. General Sternberg has rendered peculiar services to the cause of science, notably in the case of yellow fever and discoveries of that character, and I really believe that the bill ought to pass, and I hope my friend from Alabama will not oppose it.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, pending unanimous consent for its consideration, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to the Greenleaf bill and the Smith bill. Those are two men both of whom have had over forty years of service, and the cases are pending before the Military Committee. Both of them have the same record that Dr. Sternberg has, and they only ask to be made brigadiers. The Sternberg bill is called up to make him a major-general. I will ask if these bills have been considered and why they can not be reported and considered together?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, they do not stand on the same basis, because these gentlemen are on the retired list, and while the cases have been discussed informally, there has been grave doubt as to the advisability of invading the retired list. It opens up a much larger field—one that will give a great deal more trouble. The measure involves different questions, which are not all to be considered in the same connection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that I think this is unquestionably a class of legislation that ought not to be indulged in—the singling out of particular men as favorites and promoting them above other men. As I understand from what the gentleman from Iowa has just said, there are other officers in the Army and in this corps who are now seeking this class of promotion, and if we pass this bill they will expect similar action in their cases, and if they do not get it they will feel that injustice has been done to them. I ask the gentleman to let this matter go over for the present. I would like an opportunity to look into the report further.

Mr. HULL. Then I will withdraw the report. The gentleman's request is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I put it in the form I did because I did not wish to imply that I intended necessarily to insist upon the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL. I withdraw the request until the gentleman from Alabama may have time to examine the report.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an objection.

WATER POWER AT MUSCLE SHOALS, ALABAMA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 14051) granting to N. F. Thompson and associates the right to erect a dam and construct power station at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

FALSE MARKING OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 9960) to prevent the false branding or marking of food and dairy products as to the State or Territory in which they are made or produced.

The amendments were read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be nonconcurred in and a conference with the Senate asked.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly; and the Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama as conferees on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. In connection with the bill just acted on the Chair desires to state that the rule adopted last evening does not apply in a case of this kind; and it would have been in order to bring up the bill by a motion. The Chair makes this statement in order to avoid any misapprehension on the subject.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

GEORGE F. GREGG.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4990) granting an increase of pension to George F. Gregg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension rolls the name of George F. Gregg, late private in Company G, Third Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 a month from and after the passage of this act in lieu of the pension he is now receiving under certificate No. 90579.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George F. Gregg, late of Company G, Third Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY WELCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5152) granting a pension to Mary Welch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Welch, widow of Richard Welch, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES B. MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8149) granting an increase of pension to James B. Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James B. Martin, of Henry County, Mo., late a private in Company C, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James B. Martin, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN MURPHY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14146) granting an increase of pension to John Murphy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Murphy, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ABNER H. LESTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12430) granting a pension to Abner H. Lester.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abner H. Lester, late of Company I, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month, the same to be paid to him under the rules of the Pension Bureau as to mode and times of payment without any deduction or rebate on account of any former erroneous payments of pension.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 11 strike out the word "any."

In same line, after the word "former," insert the words "alleged overpayments or."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JULIA B. SHURTLEFF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13063) granting a pension to Julia B. Shurtleff.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia B. Shurtleff, widow of Edward Selfridge Shurtleff, late acting master, United States Navy, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Selfridge" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "S."

In line 7 strike out the word "to."

In line 8, after the word "month," add the words "in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Julia B. Shurtleff."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOUTELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On May 22, 1902:

H. R. 5096. An act to place the name of Paul Crum on the muster rolls of Company B, First Regiment North Dakota Volunteer Infantry;

H. R. 4393. An act reserving from the public lands in the State of Oregon as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States, and for the protection and preservation of the game, fish, timber, and all other natural objects therein, a tract of land herein described, etc.; and

H. R. 9037. An act to allow the commutation of and second homestead entries in certain cases.

On May 23, 1902:

H. R. 1681. An act granting a pension to Emma G. Harvey;

H. R. 3277. An act granting a pension to Frances J. Abercrombie;

H. R. 4622. An act granting a pension to Frank W. Lynn;

H. R. 4927. An act granting a pension to George Tucker;

H. R. 4993. An act granting a pension to Mary Shelton Huston;

H. R. 6434. An act granting a pension to Mary J. Fitch;

H. R. 7901. An act granting a pension to Dewitt Clinton Letts;

H. R. 8351. An act granting a pension to Matthew V. Ellis;

H. R. 9777. An act granting a pension to Helen F. Lasher;

H. R. 10496. An act granting a pension to James T. Steele;

H. R. 11181. An act granting a pension to Alice D. H. Krause;

H. R. 11787. An act granting a pension to John J. Manner;

H. R. 11894. An act granting a pension to Hannah A. Timmons;

H. R. 12552. An act granting a pension to Erwin A. Burke, alias Burt A. Erwin;

H. R. 12788. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth McDonald;

H. R. 13093. An act granting a pension to Eliza A. Brownlow;

H. R. 1380. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Tate;

H. R. 1479. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael Marname;

H. R. 2129. An act granting an increase of pension to Warren W. H. Lawrence;

H. R. 2436. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Roath;

H. R. 2486. An act granting an increase of pension to William Matthews;

H. R. 3756. An act granting an increase of pension to James C. G. Smith;

H. R. 5110. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Dixon;

H. R. 5183. An act granting an increase of pension to William Holdridge;

H. R. 5190. An act granting an increase of pension to Alvin J. Hartzell;

H. R. 5217. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth P. Sigfried;

H. R. 5254. An act granting an increase of pension to Enos G. Budd;

H. R. 5600. An act granting an increase of pension to John G. Sanders;

H. R. 5870. An act granting an increase of pension to Oscar W. Lowery;

H. R. 6441. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Wood;

H. R. 6645. An act granting an increase of pension to Ann E. Austin;

H. R. 7507. An act granting an increase of pension to James M. Ashley;

H. R. 7840. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver Kerr;

H. R. 7982. An act granting an increase of pension to William T. Peterson;

H. R. 8007. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Lewis;

H. R. 8016. An act granting an increase of pension to Hannibal C. Saint Clair;

H. R. 8788. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob Weidel;

H. R. 8913. An act granting an increase of pension to Rachel S. Lyman;

H. R. 9156. An act granting an increase of pension to Uriah Garber.

H. R. 9656. An act granting an increase of pension to Lunsford Y. Bailey;

H. R. 9819. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Pinn;

H. R. 10122. An act granting an increase of pension to John S. Burket;
H. R. 10396; An act granting an increase of pension to Elvin A. Esty;
H. R. 11051. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry E. Williams;
H. R. 11117. An act granting an increase of pension to William T. Hamilton;
H. R. 11325. An act granting an increase of pension to James Merrick;
H. R. 11662. An act granting an increase of pension to Albion P. Stiles;
H. R. 11665. An act granting an increase of pension to Cable C. Briggs;
H. R. 11695. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Hatton;
H. R. 11783. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Montgomery;
H. R. 11850. An act granting an increase of pension to Susan A. Volkmar;
H. R. 11920. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Wertz;
H. R. 12015. An act granting an increase of pension to Edgar T. Daniels;
H. R. 12145. An act granting an increase of pension to Caleb W. Story;
H. R. 12148. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick O. Clark;
H. R. 12239. An act granting an increase of pension to Agnes Clark;
H. R. 12713. An act granting an increase of pension to Bernard McCormick;
H. R. 12855. An act granting an increase of pension to Milton Brown;
H. R. 12899. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Rightmire;
H. R. 13416. An act granting an increase of pension to Isabella H. Thompson; and
H. R. 13439. An act granting an increase of pension to William Blanchard.

JOHN L. MOORE.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10339) granting an increase of pension to John L. Moore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John L. Moore, late a sergeant in Company A, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John L. Moore, late of Company A, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have any particular objection to the bill that is now before the committee, or to probably ninety-nine out of every hundred that is considered by the committee. There was a time when I devoted some little effort in endeavoring to call the attention of the House to a character of legislation which, to say the best, is vicious. I speak upon this claim particularly, because I picked this claim out among a dozen or fifteen others. It is no worse than many that have gone before; it is no worse than many probably that will follow after it; but I can not refrain from calling the attention of the country—not of the committee, because the committee does not care—to this particular claim, which is a sample, I believe, and a fair sample, of the pension claims which Congress is now considering.

This is a bill to give John L. Moore a pension of $30 a month. No allegation is made that John L. Moore contracted disability in the service. Two or three other reports contain similar language to this. I quote:

Following established precedents to increase to $30 a month the pension of those who are shown to be helpless and in destitute circumstances, your committee recommends a like increase in this case and reports the bill back with the recommendation that it pass after the same shall have been amended as follows.

Now, John L. Moore, as I said, it is not claimed was ever disabled in the service of his country. It is claimed that some twenty years ago he was injured while mining coal, and I am perfectly willing to admit that the man is totally disabled. I accept the report upon that, but when the committee say here, as they say in other reports that I have, "following established precedent"—that is, the Committee on Invalid Pensions have established the precedent, and Congress has indorsed that precedent to give, not in all cases, but in such cases as can be brought before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, a gratuity of $30 a month—I think it is going too far. I think that that legislation is absolutely wrong. If John L. Moore is entitled to $30 a month because he is at present disabled, after Congress shall adopt it, then I say Congress is recreant to the duty that it owes to every soldier who is at present totally and permanently disabled, and it is a character of legislation which a self-respecting body, in my opinion, never should countenance.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I want to suggest to the gentleman from California that there is now a favorable report by the Invalid Pensions Committee, a unanimous report, recommending the passage of a bill that obviates this class of legislation, giving all old soldiers of at least one year's service who are totally disabled by reason of paralysis, locomotor ataxia, or blindness, to the extent of requiring the constant aid of an attendant, a pension of $30 a month. That is now pending.

Mr. LOUD. Pending where?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. In the House.

Mr. LOUD. Been reported from the committee?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Been reported from the committee, yes; and it is now on the Calendar, and it is the policy of the committee to press that to final action.

Mr. LOUD. Then why is it not called up and passed?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The Speaker had not recognized us, and that is the only reason.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I apprehend that he never will.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. He has promised that he will, and I have no doubt that he will early next week.

Mr. LOUD. And if he shall, I apprehend that Congress will hesitate long before it will pass any such legislation.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope not.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I know the gentleman has honest views regarding men who served in the Army from 1861 to 1865. I have watched the course of the gentleman here and I have found him always honest, earnest, and sincere. He never has failed in his duty to the old soldier as he sees it, and never to my recollection when he has been upon the floor of the House has there been a rule adopted or a motion made to make a special order that the gentleman has not arisen in his place, in order that the House may know that he is ever vigilant, and asked if this order about to be made will in any way interfere with pension day.

As one member of this House, Mr. Chairman, I never should advocate any such legislation. It is not right simply from the fact that a man has rendered service in the rank and file or shall have had a commission and shall in ten or twenty or thirty or forty or fifty years afterwards become disabled—it is not right that he should be entitled to any more consideration than the man who never entered the service, and I speak as a man who saw some service, comparable, I think, with the average soldier who performed his duty in the ranks.

I know that has been doubted. I know that my record has been examined in the War Department no less than 12 separate times. I know that the rule of the War Department will not permit the average citizen to go and endeavor to ascertain what the record of any soldier shall have been. The Committees on Pensions, however, are accorded the privilege, and I believe that is as far as it extends. They have been accorded the privilege of calling up the record of any person. Now, why, in God's name, any member of the Committee on Pensions or of the Committee on Invalid Pensions ever should desire to call up the record of E. F. LOUD I can not understand. He never has yet been an applicant for a pension before either of those committees. So it must have been with the evident intent to see if something could not be found in the record of E. F. LOUD whereby he could be attacked on the floor of this House.

Now, this is not new. It is a year or two old. I say again, as a man who rendered some little service—small, it is true, one of two million seven or eight hundred thousand—lost in that great mass of men, I speak regarding what I believe a country owes its soldiers. A man volunteers in defense of his flag, it is claimed, out of patriotic motives. He only returns to that government which protects him and his what little service he can in time of danger. If during his service he shall receive any disability that will in any manner prevent him from earning a livelihood, then the rest of the people of the country should be taxed to repay what has been taken away in defense of that country's flag. But if the man shall come out of the service as good as he went in, he has simply rendered a duty that every man owes his country and the debt is canceled.

I believe the act of 1890 was going to the very extreme of madness. I hope the act the gentleman contemplates may never receive the sanction of Congress; but perhaps it may. We have been going along step by step. We will go, perhaps, far enough so that the people of this country may ultimately rise up in their might and madness and retire to private life men who are implicated in acts of that kind, where, in my humble opinion, they should be permitted to reside for the rest of their lives. We have in our charge here the interests of seventy-five or eighty millions of people.

No nation on the face of the earth has ever rewarded as beneficently as we have those who rendered service during wars. I say again we have gone beyond the point of reason in rewarding men who did their duty to their country. When I rose here I was unaware that even the Committee on Invalid Pensions had the nerve and hardihood to attempt legislation that the gentleman from Indiana says they have reported, and a measure that is now upon the Calendar. I would like to ask the gentleman what rate per month the bill proposes?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Thirty dollars a month.

Mr. LOUD. That bill proposes to put upon the pension roll ultimately at $30 a month 95 per cent of the living ex-soldiers. When the average man arrives at the age of 65 he is incompetent to earn a livelihood, wholly incompetent by reason of natural physical conditions. Many become incompetent long before that, and under your bill they will be put on the pension roll at $30 a month, to swell a roll now larger than the amount of money spent by any nation of Europe to support its whole army and its pension roll.

I will say this to the Committee on Invalid Pensions: That if they have reported a measure of this kind they have done what was their duty, because if John Smith is entitled to $30 a month because he is unfortunate and disabled then every man who serves his country, when he reaches that condition, is entitled to the same. Pension legislation, to my mind, has become a disgrace to this legislative body. During this session of Congress we have, on eight days, passed 1,169 pension bills, probably not exceeding twenty hours having been spent to pass 1,169 bills. Most of these cases have been examined by the Pension Bureau very carefully, by a body that we constitute, that have used deliberation with all the means at their command and have rejected them. They come to Congress.

Now, what is the routine? Let us be fair with ourselves and frank with the country. Representative Smith or Jones is entitled to so many bills. He goes to the member to whom his bills are referred, and I think I am speaking correctly of what is actually done, and says: "I wish you would report that bill." I think in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred that bill is reported, and the man himself selects the bill which shall be reported; and without desiring to criticise particularly the Committee on Invalid Pensions, let us see how it works there? A member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions introduces a bill. He refers it to himself. He orders a report made. It goes upon the Calendar. It has there in front of it or back of it 100 or 150 other bills.

The chairman of the Committee of the Whole works as if he was working for a thousand dollars a minute [laughter] and speaks as fast as he can; the Clerk begins, the perspiration showing in his face, and his actions show that he feels that "We have got this day and we must get through as many as we can," and the bill is passed; and one member of Congress and no more knows the merits or demerits of that bill.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. Does not the gentleman think that for that reason it is best to have some general legislation and submit a bill upon which this body can pass, and, if it has a mind to, pension soldiers of that character; that we should have some general legislation, and that that is the very reason that a bill of this kind should be reported by that committee and have an opportunity to be considered?

Mr. LOUD. I want to commend the Committee on Invalid Pensions for having the courage of their convictions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than to get an unmeritorious bill through that committee. I have had some experience in trying to get good cases favorably reported, and know whereof I speak.

Mr. LOUD. I am not making any statement against the Committee on Invalid Pensions. But there is but one member on the floor of this House that has any conception of the merits or demerits of a claim that we pass upon here on Fridays. Now, I may be mistaken.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Do you know of any bill reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to this House that has not been supported by affidavit, proof filed, and considered by that committee?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know anything about that. I know it is a physical impossibility, my friend from Indiana, for any one committee, sitting as a committee, to investigate the evidence which must be submitted in a case of this kind to pass upon eleven hundred and sixty-nine cases in less than four months.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does not the gentleman think it is quite unfair to make a wholesale charge that nobody knows anything about the merits of these bills; and does he not think that for his charge to have any respectful consideration, either in this committee or by the country, that he ought to be prepared to cite some case out of the eleven hundred which has been passed without proof?

Mr. LOUD. Why, the case we brought up here has no proof in the world, not even an allegation that the man is entitled to a pension.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think it is proper that the gentleman thoroughly understand that this wholesale charge ought not to go unchallenged, when he says we do not know anything about these cases. I do know something of the situation in that committee, and can say that not a single bill reported by that committee is not known to more than one.

Mr. LOUD. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. OVERSTREET. A bill is not reported by the committee until it has been considered by the committee and is substantiated by affidavit proof.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care anything about that. I say as a rule the bill is referred to one member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and as a matter of fact it is a physical impossibility for the Committee on Invalid Pensions to consider with care or an attempt at care 1,169 pension bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I have been on the Committee on Pensions in the Fifty-sixth Congress and in this Congress, and I can say for that committee that whenever a bill is introduced and sent to that committee it is referred to a subcommittee, and all the facts are gone into and laid before the entire committee and the chairman, discussed, considered, and weighed properly before any action is taken relative to any single bill. There has not been an exception.

Mr. LOUD. That committee has not reported more than 125 cases.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. You named both committees.

Mr. LOUD. I am talking about the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. You said Committee on Pensions, too.

Mr. LOUD. If I said Pensions, I did not so intend it. My information is that the Committee on Pensions do examine the cases that come before them with some care.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am obliged to you. You did say Pensions. I know it was an accident.

Mr. LOUD. If I said Pensions I am perfectly willing to withdraw so far as that committee is concerned.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Did you say, "with some care?"

Mr. LOUD. I said "with some care."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Only some.

Mr. LOUD. Well——

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman that they are examined with great care in that committee.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I do not care to discuss the technical meaning of "great" or "some."

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. Has the gentleman introduced any private pension bills?

Mr. LOUD. I have not.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say to the gentleman if he had and either of these committees treated him the same as they do me, he would not get a bill reported from the committee until he had produced all the proof necessary to show the merits of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I do not doubt that. I have not claimed that there was not proof required to be presented. Oh, I have claimed from information in my possession that the rule of the Invalid Pension Committee is to have a case referred to one member, and he is a subcommittee, and the report to the committee is formal.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman permit me an interruption?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. LANDIS. I was going to ask the gentleman if, in his judgment, there is more than one committee in this House that gives careful consideration to all the questions that come before it?

Mr. LOUD. Yes; possibly two. [Laughter.]
Mr. LANDIS. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is one, and which is the other?
Mr. LOUD. I was not positive about more than one. [Laughter.]
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me suggest to the gentleman from California that the committee have rules governing the granting of pensions, and the individual member who first considers it, the subcommittee that thereafter considers it, and the Pension Committee that considers pension cases are governed by the rules, which have practically the force of law in this House, and none will be granted unless they are within those rules, these rules regulating the consideration of the cases presented.
Mr. LOUD. I admit that. But what right has the Committee on Invalid Pensions to establish a rule that they will pay $30 a month to a man that is disabled and not the result of service?
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is rendered necessary because we have no general law to pension in cases equally meritorious, it seems to me, as those class of cases rejected by the Bureau of Pensions.
Mr. LOUD. Why did not you have a general law years ago?
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think it is ample if we have it at this time, if we can secure it and relieve Congress.
Mr. LOUD. Yes; and if you pass these bills on the Calendar your Committee on Invalid Pensions will continue to grind as long as there is water to turn the wheel.
Mr. GIBSON. I wish to state to the gentleman that his informant is very much mistaken about the practice and the rule of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
Mr. LOUD. Well, let us see about that. How many days a week does your committee meet?
Mr. GIBSON. Twice a week.
Mr. LOUD. How long are they in session?
Mr. GIBSON. Two hours. That is, while the committee is in session. Many of us are in there a large part of the day.
Mr. LOUD. I do not doubt it at all.
Mr. GIBSON. We investigate the cases, and instead of the case being referred to 1 member it is referred to 3 members, and then it is reported to the full 15 members, who all pass upon the case.
Mr. LOUD. Now, if that is all of the gentleman's statement, at the best he states that they are in session four hours between pension days. I know it has been my experience on committees that it is seldom a quorum appears before 11 o'clock, but I suppose the Committee on Pensions are always there at 10 o'clock sharp. Well, there are eight hours in which you have reported to this House on some occasions more than 100 cases, and I say it is a physical impossibility for the committee to give any consideration whatever to at least 25 pension cases an hour.
Now, I only take the conditions as they are. It does not make any difference what anybody may have said to me, I believe that to be the policy of your committee, because it is impossible for it to give due consideration to every one of these cases. Every one of the committee knows and must know that it takes time to examine the history of one of these cases and read the testimony and understand what it is. I know that when the committees that I have the honor to be on pass a bill a day we are doing pretty well. We more frequently take one, three, four, and five days to consider a bill than we do when we pass one bill a day.
Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. LOUD. Yes; if you have not asked me one already.
Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the Post-Office Committee is required to consider the expenditure of more money and nearly as many items in preparing the Post-Office appropriation bill as the Invalid Pension Committee is in preparing all of these pension bills?
Mr. LOUD. I do not think so.
Mr. MANN. That committee decides how many clerks you have in a great many different offices, and you have to decide a great many questions upon which you do not have a full hearing, and you have to take the opinion of somebody.
Mr. LOUD. We have fifteen thousand clerks this year and the increase in the business of the Post-Office Department has been so much, and we always increase by percentage. So in carrying it on from year to year the work is not done in the detailed case.
Mr. MANN. I am not criticising the gentleman in the work of the Post-Office Committee; quite the contrary. If the gentleman supposes the Invalid Pension Committee takes up a particular pension claim and refers it to a member of the committee, and that that bill is therefore reported with a favorable recommendation, the gentleman is entirely mistaken, because I dare say that more than one-half of the bills are reported with amendments.
Mr. LOUD. There is no doubt about that; they correct things that are palpably wrong.
Mr. MANN. Well, a very large proportion are reported with the amounts decreased.
Mr. LOUD. Perhaps so; I do not know anything about that.
Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman let me make a statement?
Mr. LOUD. Certainly.
Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman from California know that the Invalid Pensions Committee and also the Pensions Committee have constantly in their employ an expert to make up the abstract of each of these cases so as to present it to the committee in a concrete and compact form?
Mr. LOUD. Yes; and I know that this very case has been through the hands of several experts, has been examined time and again by a department which costs us some million dollars a year to run, and that they have reported against the case. The expert in the room down here in the corner of this building can take up these cases and brief ten or fifteen of them a day and pass upon them. I will venture the assertion that the expert has mighty little to say as to whether a case shall be reported favorably or not.
Mr. RUCKER. That is the gentleman's opinion.
Mr. LOUD. Well, I will venture that assertion.
Mr. RUCKER. My observation has been very much the other way.
Mr. LOUD. I will venture the assertion that when he is told to make up a favorable report he makes it favorable.
Mr. RUCKER. With all respect to the gentleman from California, I want to say that I believe that remark is absolutely and totally unwarranted with reference to either of these gentlemen. I have found them to be technically accurate and very conscientious with every report that they have passed upon within my knowledge.
Mr. LOUD. Well, then, let us take the other supposition—that the expert passes upon these cases against the judgment of the committee. It must be either one way or the other.
Mr. RUCKER. He submits the facts to the committee.
Mr. CLARK. I will tell you what this expert does. He goes to the Department and hunts up evidence. I was on the old Pension Committee a few years ago, and I know they could hardly get along without such assistance as a man in this position rendered.
Mr. LOUD. I am not condemning the assistant; I think he is very valuable. I think that if we only had a few more such men we could pass more pension cases.
Mr. CLARK. You and I were both on that committee some years ago.
Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; not I.
Mr. CLARK. I mean on the old Pensions Committee.
Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; do not charge me with that. [Laughter.] I have been charged with enough things. I was on the Committee on Claims, I think, with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] some years ago; and that was bad enough. [Laughter.]
Mr. GIBSON. I wish to inform the gentleman from California that if our expert were told in any case that he was expected to write a favorable or an unfavorable report, he would insult the man who undertook to tell him so, even if he were a Congressman; and the Invalid Pensions Committee would sustain him.
Mr. LOUD. Now, let us take the other horn of the dilemma—that this expert runs the committee. It must be either one way or the other. Either the committee directs him to make the report or this man directs the committee how to make the report. Which way do you gentlemen choose to have it? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] says that this man would scorn to make out a report in the manner he was directed to make it.
Mr. GRAFF. Is it not possible for this expert assistant to make a report of the facts and then for the committee to make up its mind whether or not the proposed beneficiary is, on the facts, entitled to the pension?
Mr. LOUD. Well, at the end of every report, as my friend from Indiana knows, there is a recommendation written by somebody. Now, are we to suppose that this expert, if he were told to write out a certain recommendation, would not do it?
Mr. GRAFF. I know this, giving my own personal experience: I have had a number of bills submitted to this expert and he has gone over the evidence submitted. In a number of those cases I have been satisfied in my own mind that the beneficiary was entitled to a pension, and have been very anxious to have the bill favorably reported; yet this man has reported adversely time and again.
Mr. LOUD. And you had nothing to say about it?
Mr. GRAFF. No; I am not expected to have anything to say about it.
Mr. LOUD. Then the expert is the committee?
Mr. GRAFF. No; the expert reported the facts, and reported that in his judgment the evidence did not justify the committee in making a favorable report.
Mr. LOUD. Well, I want to say that I would have been through half an hour ago if gentlemen had let me alone. They will have their own opportunity to put themselves on record.

Mr. KLEBERG. The gentleman stated a while ago his belief that the experts in these cases are instructed to make up a report that will suit the member or the committee making the request. Now, in that proposition the gentleman from California is laboring under a total mistake. The expert of course makes up the case—makes up the brief of the facts; he states the facts as they are, for nothing escapes him. That is his business, and we have a very efficient man in that position. Then he answers every question that any member or the entire committee may raise, and the committee decides whether the bill shall be reported favorably or unfavorably.

Mr. LOUD. Now, which makes up the report—the individual member or the committee?

Mr. KLEBERG. The committee makes the report.

Mr. LOUD. Which is it that examines the report of this expert—the individual member or the committee?

Mr. KLEBERG. Any individual member and the committee, too. This man is constantly in the room of the committee.

Mr. LOUD. What is the custom in that respect?

Mr. KLEBERG. Well, every member has a right to make an examination for himself and report it to the full committee or to a subcommittee.

Mr. LOUD. Are you on the Invalid Pensions Committee?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I have great respect for you as a member of Congress, although I believe that good men's judgments may be warped. I think we have pursued this subject until even the best men in Congress have lost their judgment and have forgotten that there are seventy-five or eighty millions of people who must earn this money by the sweat of their faces to pay men and women a gratuity to which under the law they are not entitled.

Mr. KLEBERG. Now, I wish to reply to that. Does the gentleman call this a gratuity?

Mr. LOUD. I do.

Mr. KLEBERG. Then you must charge the entire Congress with passing these gratuities for the last twenty-five years.

Mr. LOUD. So I have.

Mr. KLEBERG. And do not charge the members of the committee with it.

Mr. LOUD. Well, the committee reports it.

Mr. KLEBERG. This is a precedent that has been established by Congress, and we are following the precedent.

Mr. LOUD. The committee starts it.

Mr. KLEBERG. And the country would condemn a man who would not stand by that precedent. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Well, so far as the "gentleman from California" is concerned, he will take care of his part of the country, and the gentleman from Texas may take care of his.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am able to do it.

Mr. LOUD. And when the gentleman from Texas shall have been here as long as I have, he will probably think he has been here long enough.

Mr. KLEBERG. I think so.

Mr. LOUD. I have characterized this character of legislation in years gone by as vicious. I am of the same opinion to-day. Now, let us see. There are in my district men who have written me this year—36 up to the present time—who claim to be totally disabled, unable to earn a livelihood—disabled not as the result of their service. As a member of Congress, looking at my duty in my own way, I believe that the Government has no right to take money out of the public Treasury unwarranted by law. Now, these men are unfortunate. Men that never have been in the service are unfortunate, and they are around us everywhere. Every place you go you find cripples, you find paralytics, and men wholly unable to support themselves.

Now, should Congress go into the business of relieving every person in the United States who has been unfortunate? Oh, you say, no; but if he happened to have been in the Army for ninety days, however, he has got a claim upon the whole people, which is what I deny. I hold that he has no claim on the whole people, because he has done only his duty; and if he were in the Army for ninety days or a hundred days or for six months, he has done but a small portion of it. My God, if every person in this country must be paid in dollars and cents for doing his duty, where are you going to find the people to tax to pay for it?

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman speaks of a gratuity.

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Now, I want to suggest to him that every dollar paid out by reason of one of these special bills is paid by reason of enactment of law.

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. That is law. It is not a gratuity. It is a law passed by Congress, and is just as binding and effective as the law under which the gentleman draws his salary and I draw mine.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; but my law happens to be general, however. I am not paid any more than the gentleman is paid as a member of Congress. It is a law general in its character, and there is a law general in its character which applies to men who served in the Army and received injuries who, under the law of 1890, are paid a maximum pension of $12 a month, but to pension a man who is disabled, whether it be the result of his being in the Army or not, is vicious.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. BOWIE. I want to ask the gentleman a question, if he thinks the Commissioner of Pensions never makes any mistakes down yonder in examining these cases?

Mr. LOUD. I think, as a matter of fact, that the Commissioner of Pensions knows but very little of the individual pension case that goes through that office.

Mr. BOWIE. Then the man that examines the file. Do you think that he never makes mistakes?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly those men do. Man is not infallible.

Mr. BOWIE. Does the gentleman not think that Congress ought to have the jurisdiction to correct it?

Mr. LOUD. Ah, but my friend perhaps does not know anything about the history of pension claims.

Mr. BOWIE. Yes; I know a good deal about it.

Mr. LOUD. John Smith applies for a pension to-day. He is examined by a board of medical examiners. His case goes up to the office here and he is examined by wholly disinterested parties. He is rejected——

Mr. BOWIE. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Now, one moment. Is that the end of it? No, he goes, and he goes, and he goes, and his case is not submitted to the same man. He is refused. His case has been before the office for years; it is rejected by many medical boards and examining boards and examiners, and yet he comes to Congress, and his case is submitted to one man, substantially, with only the evidence that all these men have had before who rejected his claim, and this one man says, "All these who examined his case before were wrong; I am infallible; I am right."

Mr. BOWIE. Is not that exactly what is done in every case in an appellate court, where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a lower court. The Supreme Court corrects the errors of the lower court.

Mr. LOUD. But I do not believe a legislative body is a proper appellate court.

Mr. BOWIE. Does the gentleman not think jurisdiction ought to rest somewhere to correct mistakes in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. LOUD. Not in a legislative body, my friend.

Mr. DINSMORE. I will ask the gentleman from California if he ever knew of a case that was rejected where the man did not come to Congress immediately?

Mr. LOUD. I would not say about that; perhaps some. I never investigated that phase of the case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if our friends have gotten through I will now in a word close. This House, or gentlemen who have been members of this House for years, have known my position upon pensions for some years. My principal object to-day was to again enunciate what I believe to be the truth: That this legislation is debauching the nation—debauching the nation because it teaches people to look to the Government to care for them. The act of 1890 taught people to look to the Government because they had rendered some service until that sentiment has permeated substantially the body politic, and it surrounds us on every hand.

The cry that comes to us to increase salaries and to put upon the pension roll and to care for the unfortunates who have been compelled during their lifetime to labor for Uncle Sam is the result, in my humble opinion, of the adoption of this character of legislation. John Smith, in a community, comes to Congress with a bill for a pension, and he gets $20, $30, or $50 a month. It excites every other man who ever was in the Army to the same action; and when there are so many men in a community who are receiving the gratuity, I say again, of this great Government it dissatisfies those who have to work from sun to sun to earn the money to pay the gratuity that these people receive.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] attacks the Committee on Invalid Pensions and their method of doing business. I have heard him do it before. There is nothing new or original to me in what he has stated here to-day; but I feel that it ought not to go to the country unchallenged, and I want to say to him that there is not a committee connected with this House that devotes as much time, that gives as careful attention to the consideration of bills before it, in my judgment, as the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

I do not like to speak of myself, but as a matter of fact I think there has not been a day during this session, after the committee was appointed, that I have not been in that committee room at 8 o'clock in the morning, if I was able to be outdoors, and I know that members of that committee, or the examiner connected with it, have been there at 11 and 12 and 1 and 2 o'clock the next morning examining these matters; and to have a gentleman who knows nothing about our work evidence the fact that he is absolutely ignorant on the subject by making charges such as have been made here to-day against us is certainly enough to make us feel that those charges at least should be contradicted and denied.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not desire to reflect on any member of the committee. I know that you are a hard working, too hard working, if it can be, body of men. I know that the gentleman from New Hampshire labors early and late in his committee. I condemn the work that comes from the committee, not the gentleman himself.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Then the gentleman condemns the fact that we consider these bills carefully.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no.

Mr. SULLOWAY. And that they are reported after deliberate and careful consideration, and his complaint is that we are too careful, and that we accomplish too much, if I understand him.

Now, the gentleman from California asserts that only one member reports bills. Nothing could be further from the fact. The country is divided up territorially among the committee, and a bill coming from a certain section goes to a subcommittee of three members. The bill goes to that subcommittee when it comes into the committee room and is referred to them, because it comes from their territory. Those gentleman have the examiner call up the evidence from the Pension Bureau. He is of that Bureau, and he is the most expert man in that Bureau—a man who can tell you every act that has ever passed this Congress with reference to pensions; a man who can tell you every ruling that any Commissioner ever made or that any Secretary ever made; a man who in my experience with him has never erred or made a mistake. That man goes over the evidence that comes from the Pension Bureau. He briefs any additional evidence that is filed, and without any recommendation or suggestion makes a plain, strightforward statement of the facts as they appear.

Then the subcommittee, if they think there is merit in it, recommend that bill to the full committee, and it does not take a great while to read the statement of facts, in which we have learned to place such confidence. Usually that statement does not make more than a couple of pages. It may be one page or it may be three. That is the manner by which we do business in our committee.

The gentleman says that when a beneficiary here has been turned down time and again by the examining board, he comes here and says to a member of Congress, "I want you to get me a pension by a subcommittee acting," and that that is all that is necessary to be done. I challenge him or any man living to point to a case where, if a man had a pensionable status, there has not been a recommendation by one, two, three, or four examining boards in favor of the pension. Yet they were turned down at the Bureau by the late Commissioner of Pensions. Those are the cases that we consider, those are the cases that we recommend when the evidence satisfies us that we ought to.

The gentleman alludes to a bill that has been referred to here. I do not propose to discuss general legislation. He says that that bill would let in 90 per cent of all the soldiers; that 90 per cent of them will soon be pensioned at $30 a month. I want to say here and now that there is not a day that this Congress is in session when so little money is appropriated or ordered to be expended as on the days when you are working on these private pension bills. The appropriations made on those days are the smallest and most economical of all.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say this: The small appropriations paid on these bills that we pass on Fridays carry more sunshine into the homes of more people and produce more joy than any other appropriations made by Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. SULLOWAY. I believe that, or I would not put in so many hours at work on these bills. The gentleman has attacked this bill, and I am not going to take time to defend it at length. What are the facts? Here was a soldier for three years. For three years he gave service to his country, as did the gentleman from California. He differed from the gentleman from California, and his condition differs from the condition of the gentleman from California, who is receiving $5,000 a year as salary and mileage across the country. If he did so he might not be a claimant here to-day. I do not know him. He is a stranger to me. He gave his service to his country, and is a pensioner at $12 a month under the act of 1890, which act the gentleman from California denounces as vicious. The evidence shows that he is totally unable to labor; not only that, but that he is unable to move about, as the report shows. He has no property whatever. He is a total wreck. He is transported in an armchair. I am one of those who believe that those men who preserved and perpetuated this Government ought not to be paupers.

Mr. GIBSON. He is totally paralyzed from the waist down.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Certainly, the report shows that. I do not regard the pension as a gratuity. I regard its payment as a matter of duty. The veterans are the wards of the nation, and this nation ought to care for them. They should never cross the threshold of the almshouse, nor should they ever be obliged to ask any town, city, or neighborhood to contribute to their support. This is a meritorious bill; it is like those we have passed for years; and I do trust the gentleman from California will be the only gentleman on the floor who will vote against it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to defend the Invalid Pensions Committee. I believe it needs none. I do not desire to discuss general legislation, but I propose to do so in the committee and on the floor when it comes upon its passage. I simply want to call the attention of the House for two minutes to this particular bill, as I do not wish to take the time of the House.

This old soldier served from May 31, 1862, to June 4, 1865. The last medical examination, made on January 28, 1891, found him to be suffering from paralysis of the lower extremities, with nearly complete anchylosis of all joints on the lower extremities from want of use, and that he uses a chair or the walls as a means of locomotion, with legs extended at full length in front of him. His physician, Dr. Augustus F. Culley, of Brazil, Ind., who attended him nearly all the time, states that his lower extremities are paralyzed from the effect of an injury of the spine, rendering him wholly helpless, and that he has no property from which to derive any income whatever.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the rate of pension that is allowed in the Pension Office?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Twelve dollars.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What reason is assigned in the Pension Office for not allowing him more?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Because he was unable to prove that his present disability is of service origin, and he is allowed $12, the full limit under the act of June 29, 1890.

Mr. LOUD. He has never claimed that his injury was due to service origin.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. He never claimed it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He has never presented any proof that it was of service origin.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. He has never claimed that his present disability is attributable to service origin. He simply presents the case that he has been in his present condition for fifteen or twenty years. Here is an old soldier who served his country from 1862 to 1865. He is now totally helpless and can not move about. One of two things has to be done. He has either to be taken over the hill to the poorhouse, or else Congress has to recognize the right and give him $30, as we have been doing this entire session and last, to my certain knowledge.

For one, I am not willing to see any old soldier who served his country for three years, who is totally helpless, is entirely blind, who has to have some one to feed and move him about, turned down or put off by a meager pension of $12. I believe the American people demand, not simply of the Pension Bureau, but if it is not done there, it demands that this House shall give him a small pittance, not as a gratuity, but as one of the highest duties that comes to it. My motto is fair treatment to the old soldier, and one who gave his country's cause three years of his life shall now be kept out of the poorhouse. I want to say that not only in this case, but in every other like it, as long as I remain on the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I shall not only vote for it in the committee, but I will do it on the floor of the House. I believe this to be a very meritorious bill. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to occupy the attention of the committee for more than a few moments. My sense of duty compels me to rise in my place in this House now to enter my protest against the wanton attack the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has made on the old soldiers of the Union—the men who saved the Union. I deprecate that attack. It comes with bad grace from the gentleman from California, and is most unfortunate.

In my opinion the soldiers who saved the Union and who are now destitute and in poverty ought to be cared for by a grateful Government.

The Republic owes its life to the soldiers of the civil war. These brave and patriotic men went to the front and sacrificed their lives; they went to the front amid the rain of shell and became maimed, wounded, and diseased in defense of their country, and in their old age, during their last days on earth, when they have no friends to care for them, no relatives to support them, when it is simply a question of their going to the poorhouse and the potter's field, it seems to me that every patriotic representative of the people in this House ought to stand by the old soldiers of the Union and vote to make the Government suitably provide for them.

Let me say, sir, that I am now, always have been, and always hope to be a friend of the soldier, of the soldier who carried our flag to victory, of the soldier who saved the Union and fought for its preservation in the darkest hour of its trial. I would be false to myself, false to every principle I hold dear, false to every sentiment of my heart, if I did not rise in my place and enter my emphatic protest against the slander uttered by the gentleman from California against the brave men who have fought our country's battles in every war. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, upon an occasion of the Printing Committee asking for the passage of a resolution authorizing the printing of extra reports of the Commissioner of Pensions on the 7th day of March, 1902, an objection was made by reason of the fact that it contained pictures that were inappropriate to be printed. I merely rise now to place against the distinguished member of the Appropriation Committee [Mr. LOUD], for whose services and ability we have the highest respect, the statements then uttered by the distinguished chairman of that committee [Mr. CANNON], upon the subject which shows the necessity for Congressional action in many of these cases and the reason why it is needed. Mr. CANNON said:

I was going to inquire if there is anything in the illustrations that shows the medical board of the Pension Office as it is engaged in the daily performance of its duties casting every possible doubt against the applicant for a pension. If there is any illustration of that kind it ought not to be omitted.

WILLIAM M'DANIEL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8573) granting a pension to William McDaniel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William McDaniel, late of Green County (Mo.) Home Guards, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Of William McDaniel, late of Captain Alred's company, Greene County, Mo., Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES OLSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 12305) granting an increase of pension to Charles Olson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Olson, late of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $32 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-two" and insert the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FANNIE REARDON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 14012) granting a pension to Fannie Reardon, widow of Patrick Reardon, alias Dunn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie Reardon, widow of Patrick Reardon, alias Dunn, late of Company B, Second New York Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Dunn," insert the word "Patrick."
In line 7, after the word "York, insert the words "Provisional Volunteer."
In same line, before the word "New York," insert "Regiment."
In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Fannie Reardon."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ALEXANDER MURDOCK.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 14208) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Murdock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander Murdock, late of Company B, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN S. UPSHAW.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8576) granting a pension to John S. Upshaw.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Upshaw, late captain of independent cavalry company, Douglas County, Mo., Home Guards, in the war of secession, 1861, and also late private in Captain Jay's company, Missouri Volunteers, Osage Indian war of 1837, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Upshaw, late captain Independent Cavalry Company, Douglas County, Mo., Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN T. MULL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 12968) granting an increase of pension to John T. Mull.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, auth rized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John T. Mull, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT HARGREAVE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 13594) granting an increase of pension to Robert Hargreave.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Hargreave, late of Company H, First Regiment Pennsylvania Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Hargreave" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Hargreaves."
In same line strike out the words "of Company H" and insert in lieu thereof the words "principal musician."
In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Robert Hargreaves."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARGARET ANN WEST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R, 13944) granting a pension to Margaret Ann West, a nurse of United States Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Ann West, a nurse in the United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6 and 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Margaret Ann West, late nurse, Medical Department, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Margaret Ann West."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BENJAMIN ZANE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2477) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Zane.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin Zane, late of Company B, Ninety-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

AMELIA ENGEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2551) granting a pension to Amelia Engel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amelia Engel, widow of Valentine Engel, late of Company G, Seventy-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM HARRINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4706) granting an increase of pension to William Harrington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Harrington, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES H. HAZZARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4732) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hazzard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles H. Hazzard, late of Company G, Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and paymaster's clerk, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EMMA L. KIMBLE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3998) granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Kimble.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emma L. Kimble, widow of Thomas V. Kimble, late of Company F, Third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and major Thirty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HELEN M. WORTHEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4871) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Worthen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Helen M. Worthen, widow of Harry N. Worthen, late lieutenant-colonel Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN W. SMOOT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4983) granting a pension to John W. Smoot.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Smoot, late of Company A, Washington Light Infantry, Fourth Battalion District of Columbia Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

OLIVER K. WYMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4655) granting an increase of pension to Oliver K. Wyman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Oliver K. Wyman, late of First Battery, Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES WELCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4862) granting an increase of pension to James Welch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Welch, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

NANCY J. M'ARTHUR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14221) granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. McArthur.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy J. McArthur, widow of James R. McArthur, late captain Company A, Fourteenth Regiment Indiana Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, the same to date from the death of her late husband, which occurred on the 17th day of December, 1899.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, which I will ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 13, the word "twelve" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

Amend also by adding the word "captain" before the word "of," in line 12.

Mr. KLEBERG. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that I have consulted the members of the committee in regard to the amendments, and they are practically committee amendments. I hope they will be adopted.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of Company A, Fourteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

AUGUSTUS BLOUNT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11339) granting a pension to Augustus Blount.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Augustus Blount, father of Alfred Blount, late of Company C, Thirty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Troops, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "father," insert the word "dependent."

In line 7 strike out the word "Troops" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CATHARINE FREEMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11453) granting a pension to Catharine Freeman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Freeman, dependent mother of Daniel W. Freeman, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; Company B, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company G, Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of Catharine Freeman, dependent mother of Daniel W. Freeman, late of Company E, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN A. ROBERTSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11865) granting an increase of pension to John A. Robertson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions

and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John A. Robertson, late of Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WALLACE K. MAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12424) granting an increase of pension to Wallace K. May.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Wallace K. May, late of Company K, Twenty-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Wallace K. May, late of Company A, Twenty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BAILEY O. BOWDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12632) granting an increase of pension to Bailey O. Bowden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Bailey O. Bowden, of Livingston, Tenn., lieutenant in Company A, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Infantry, in the war between the States, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of the one he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bailey O. Bowden, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE FUSSELMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14052) granting an increase of pension to George Fusselman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Fusselman, late private, Company E, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Fusselman, late of Company E, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH J. EMERY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13227) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Emry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Elizabeth J. Emry, widow of Merrell D. Emry, late of Company M, Third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, and 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of Elizabeth J. Emery, widow of Maril D. Emery, late of Company M, Third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. Emery."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN W. CAMPBELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3768) granting an increase of pension to John W. Campbell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Campbell, late regimental quartermaster Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Campbell, late regimental quartermaster Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HIRAM S. LEFFINGWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5205) granting an increase of pension to Hiram S. Leffingwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hiram S. Leffingwell, late surgeon, Sixty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ESEK B. CHANDLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6991) granting an increase of pension to Esek B. Chandler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Esek B. Chandler, late of Company F, Fifty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $72 per month, said pension to be in lieu of the one he now receives.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Esek B. Chandler, late principal musician, Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS M. OWENS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8146) granting increase of pension to Thomas M. Owens.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas M. Owens, late private in Company G of the Forty-fifth Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas M. Owens, late of Company G, Forty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES M. TRAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5446) granting a pension to James M. Travis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of James M.

Travis, late of Company D, Seventy-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $15 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. Travis, late of Company D, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to James M. Travis."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH J. EAGON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R, 9710) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. Eagon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth J. Eagon, widow of Lafayette A. Eagon, late of Company N, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES E. DICKEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3770) granting a pension to J. E. Dickey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. E. Dickey, who served in Capt. Joe McClintock's company of Kentucky Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James E. Dickey, late of Captain McClintock's company, Kentucky Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to James E. Dickey."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

PIERSON L. SHICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8780) granting an increase of pension to Pierson L. Shick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Pierson L. Shick, late of Company G, One hundred and ninety-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Pennsylvania," insert the word "Regiment."

In same line strike out the word "Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In same line strike out the word "which."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE BAKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12009) granting an increase of pension to George Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Baker, late of Company K, Twenty-third New York Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Twenty-third," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 7, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In same line, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

In same line strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM LOWE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12019) granting an increase of pension to William Lowe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of William Lowe, late of Company L, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $— per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Lowe, late of Company L, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LIZZIE DUNLAP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14087) granting a pension to Lizzie Dunlap.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Lizzie Dunlap, daughter of James W. Dunlap, late a soldier of Company B, Two hundred and fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension roll and to issue her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lizzie Dunlap, helpless and dependent daughter of James W. Dunlap, late of Company B, Two hundred and fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FANNIE S. CROSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14144) granting an increase of pension to Fannie S. Cross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie S. Cross, widow of William Cross, colonel Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "colonel," insert the word "late."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JENNIE M. HARRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10174) granting a pension to Jennie M. Harris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of of Jennie M. Harris, widow of the late John E. Sawyer, private, Company H, Second Colorado Cavalry, and grant her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of Jennie M. Sawyer, former widow of John E. Sawyer, late of Company H, Second Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ARTHUR L. CURRIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11250) granting an increase of pension to Arthur L. Currie.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Arthur L. Currie, late of Company F, Eighty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Arthur L. Currie, late of Company F, Eighty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BENJAMIN RUSSELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1797) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Russell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin Russell, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JESSE H. HUBBARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3888) granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Hubbard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse H. Hubbard, late second lieutenant Company H, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JONATHAN O. THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5371) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan O. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jonathan O. Thompson, late of Company G, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM H. HUDSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5038) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hudson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Hudson, late captain of Company H, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, war of the rebellion, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Hudson, late captain Company H, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES O. BALDWIN.

The next business on the Private Calander was the bill (S. 2168) granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Baldwin.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles O. Baldwin, late second lieutenant Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving, to be paid to his legally constituted guardian.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CAPT. STEPHEN B. TODD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13946) granting an increase of pension to Capt. Stephen B. Todd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Capt. Stephen B. Todd, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Stephen," strike out the word "captain."

In same line, before the word "Company," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "captain."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Stephen B. Todd."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14055) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Brown, late of Company B, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH F. BALDWIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2697) granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Baldwin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah F. Baldwin, widow of William O. Baldwin, late surgeon Second Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS GRAHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7760) granting a pension to Thomas Graham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Graham, late of Company F, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas Graham."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13675) granting an increase of pension to George W. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. White, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Arkansas Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

VESTA A. BROWN.

The next business was the bill (S. 4415) granting an increase of pension to Vesta A. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Vesta A. Brown, widow of William A. Brown, late of Company F, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM P. SCHOTT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5866) granting an increase of pension to William P. Schott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William P. Schott, alias Jacob Schott, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Schott," insert the words "alias Jacob Schott."

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cavalry."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William P. Schott, alias Jacob Schott."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY L. DOANE.

The next business was the bill (S. 4758) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Doane.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary L. Doane, widow of Gustavus C. Doane, late captain, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES G. HOWARD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 13613) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Howard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles G. Howard, late of Company A, Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Company," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "first lieutenant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DANIEL A. HALL, ALIAS WILLIAM KNAPP.

The next business was the bill (S. 4729) granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp, late of Company H, Twentieth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DENNIS COSIER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 13999) granting a pension to Dennis Cosier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dennis Cosier, of Union City, Mich., late of Company K, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "of Union City, Mich."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Dennis Cosier."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

NIMROD HEADINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4829) granting an increase of pension to Nimrod Headington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nimrod Headington, late major, Thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

AMOS MOULTON.

The next business was the bill (S. 4853) granting an increase of pension to Amos Moulton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amos Moulton, late of Company L, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIPHLET NOYES.

The next business was the bill (S. 4712) granting an increase of pension to Eliphlet Noyes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliphlet Noyes, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ERI W. PINKHAM.

The next business was the bill (S. 5153) granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eri W. Pinkham, late of Company E, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS.

The next business was the bill (S. 2511) granting an increase of pension to William Phillips.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Phillips, late of Company G, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GUSTAVUS C. PRATT.

The next business was the bill (S. 1038) granting an increase of pension to Gustavus C. Pratt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Gustavus C. Pratt, late captain Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WARNOCK having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 105. Joint resolution supplementing and modifying certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1903;

S. 641. An act to establish an assay office at Portland, Oreg.; and

S. R. 103. Joint resolution providing for the binding and distribution of public documents held in the custody of the Superintendent of Documents, unbound, upon orders of Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and officers of Congress, when such documents are not called for within two years after printing.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FAIRBANKS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. RAWLINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9544) granting an increase of pension to George W. Barry, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. PATTERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8840) granting an increase of pension to John H. Lauchly, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DEBOE, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. GIBSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 4103) granting a pension to William C. Hickox, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TURNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1172) granting an increase of pension to Catharine F. Edmunds.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 3908. An act granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Bridger, Fort Sanders, and Fort Laramie military reservations, in Wyoming, the right to purchase one quarter section of public land on said reservations as pasture or grazing land;

S. 2782. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River by the Washington and Oregon Railway Company; and

S. R. 46. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of 6,000 copies of the consolidated reports of the Gettysburg National Park Commission, 1893 to 1901, inclusive.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 13395. An act granting a pension to Arthur J. Bushnell.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9960) to prevent a false branding or marking of food and dairy products as to the State or Territory in which they are made or produced, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 10545) granting an increase of pension to Solomon P. Brockway, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. TALIAFERRO, as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8794) granting an increase of pension to Henry I. Smith, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FOSTER of Washington, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. CARMACK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 14589. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

HORACE L. RICHARDSON.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5106) granting an increase of pension to Horace L. Richardson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Horace L. Richardson, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

STEPHEN A. SEAVEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4790) granting a pension to Stephen A. Seavey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen A. Seavey, late of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month, the same to be paid to him without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. YOUNGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4730) granting an increase of pension to George W. Youngs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Youngs, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ISAAC GIBSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11711) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Gibson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaac Gibson, late major Second Battalion, Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES F. WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13684) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Wright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles F. Wright, late of Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN C. NELSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5480) increasing the pension of John C. Nelson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John C. Nelson, late captain of Company I, Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry, war between the States, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of the one he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Company, strike out the word "of."
In same line, after the word "Eleventh," insert the word "Regiment."
In line 7, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."
In same line strike out the words "war between the States."
In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."
In line 9 strike out the words "the one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "that."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John C. Nelson."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM F. STANLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13505) granting an increase of pension to William F. Stanley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William F. Stanley, late of Company G, Fortieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY NICHOLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12410) granting an increase of pension to Mary Nichols.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Nichols, widow of Richard Nichols, late of Company F, Twenty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Bennett R. Nichols, the helpless and dependent child of said Richard Nichols, the additional pension herein granted on account of such child shall cease and determine.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month and $2 per month additional on account of a minor child of said soldier until such child shall have arrived at the age of 16 years: Provided, however, That in the case of the death of the helpless child, Bennett R. Nichols, on whose account the pension of Mary Nichols is increased, the pension of said Mary Nichols shall continue only at the rate of $8 per month from and after the date of death of said helpless child."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JACOB FINDLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10856) granting a pension to Jacob Findley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob Findley, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-fifth United States Colored Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 insert after the word "fifth" the word "Regiment," and in same line insert after the word "Colored" the word "Volunteer."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN KIRKHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12326) granting an increase of pension to John Kirkham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Kirkham, late of the First Indiana Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of John A. Kirkham, late of Captain Young's company, Fourth Regiment Indiana Legion, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to John A. Kirkham."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMANTHA TOWNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14374) granting a pension to Samantha Towner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samantha Towner, widow of Justin D. Towner, late captain Company B, Twelfth Illinois Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $36 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Twelfth," insert the word "Regiment."

In same line, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EDWIN M. GOWDEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11252, granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Gowdey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edwin M. Gowdey, late of Company F, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE E. BUMP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10824) granting an increase of pension to George E. Bump.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George E. Bump, late of Company A, First Regiment Heavy Artillery Connecticut Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "Heavy Artillery, Connecticut Volunteers," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery."

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

In same line strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EBENEZER W. OAKLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12507) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer W. Oakley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ebenezer W. Oakley, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $60 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CARRIE B. FARNHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6186) granting a pension to Carrie B. Farnham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carrie B. Farnham, widow of Wilson H. Farnham, late of Company F, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

PETER DUGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14241) granting an increase of pension to Peter Dugan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Peter Dugan, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the words "United States," insert the words "United States steamship Mound City."

In line 7 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY F. HUNT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13450) granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Hunt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry F. Hunt, late of Company I, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Hunt," strike out the letter "F."

In same line strike out the letter "I" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "E."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry Hunt."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES K. BATEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13052) granting an increase of pension to Charles K. Batey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles K. Batey, late of Company A, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "Company D, Seventieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE R. BALDWIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13665) granting an increase of pension to George R. Baldwin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George R. Baldwin, late of Company C, Eighth Regiment Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Mounted," insert the word "Tennessee."

In same line strike out the words "Mounted Volunteer Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Mounted Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-five."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARTHA A. CORNISH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3986) granting a pension to Martha A. Cornish.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Cornish, widow of James M. Cornish, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment of New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 4, strike out the word "upon" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANDREW J. FOGG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14184) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Fogg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew J. Fogg, late of Company B, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "first lieutenant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WARREN Y. MERCHANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2457) granting an increase of pension to Warren Y. Merchant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Warren Y. Merchant, late of Company L, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HANNAH A. VAN EATON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5209) granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Van Eaton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah A. Van Eaton, widow of Flavel H. Van Eaton, late surgeon, Eighth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN F. COLLIER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3551) granting an increase of pension to John P. Collier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John P. Collier, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CALVIN N. PERKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4240) granting an increase of pension to Calvin N. Perkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Calvin N. Perkins, late of Company H, Thirty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN HOUSIAUX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 712) granting an increase of pension to John Housiaux.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Housiaux, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARTHA CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4759) granting an increase of pension to Martha Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha Clark, widow of James P. Clark, late of Company I, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Elmo J. Clark, helpless and dependent son of said James P. Clark, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HELENA SUDSBURG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4638) granting a pension to Helena Sudsburg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Helena Sudsburg, widow of Joseph M. Sudsburg, late colonel Third Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY J. EDGE, ALIAS JASON EDGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3063) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge, late of United States steamer Benton, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM M'CORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11374) granting an increase of pension to William McCord.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William McCord, late of Company F, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY ROGERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13886) granting an increase of pension to Henry Rogers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Rogers, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES T. CROOKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5759) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Crooker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles T. Crooker, late of Company H, Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLOTTE M. HOWE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5669) granting a pension to Charlotte M. Howe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charlotte M. Howe, widow of Rufus S. Howe, late of Company D, Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANNE DOWERY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4642) granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anne Dowery, widow of Edward Dowery, late of Company L, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANNIE E. JOSEPH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2335) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie E. Joseph, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles S. Russell and also widow of George W. Joseph, late private, Company B, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL H. CHAMBERLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5670) granting a pension to Samuel H. Chamberlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel H. Chamberlin, late second lieutenant Company B, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL MULLETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11879) to correct the military record of Michael Mullett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the military record of Michael Mullet, late a private in Company C, One hundred and fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, be, and the same is hereby, so corrected as to remove the charge of desertion, and the War Department is hereby authorized and directed to grant him an honorable discharge from said service.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "fourth" and insert the word "sixty-fourth."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SULZER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11879) to correct the military record of Michael Mullett, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This is a worthy and meritorious case. The facts are fully set forth in the accompanying papers, which are hereby made a part of this report.

No. 576 ELEVENTH AVENUE,
New York City, N. Y., December 31, 1901.

SIR. I have the honor to submit for your consideration a brief history of my service in the New York Volunteers and the United States Navy during the war of the rebellion.

On the 26th day of August, 1862, I enlisted at Buffalo, N. Y., as a private in Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteer Infantry, and served with said company and regiment in every battle and skirmish in which it was engaged up to the 3d day of June, 1864, when, at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., I received a gunshot wound in the left arm, between the wrist and elbow, and also a gunshot wound in the left hip. I was taken to the field hospital, where my wounds were treated, and after several days was sent to a hospital located about 1 mile outside of the city of Washington, D. C.

As soon as I was well enough to travel was given a furlough for forty days; went to New York City, where I stopped with an old friend by the name of John Kelly, who resided in West Forty-second street. During my stay with Kelly I went down town one day to see some old acquaintances and drank pretty freely. While under the influence of liquor I was strolling along South street, where I fell in with a party of strange men, who asked me to drink with them. After either getting me drunk or drugging me they took me to a recruiting office and shipped me in the United States Navy. This was on the 16th of July, 1864, about fifteen days before my furlough expired. When I became sober I found myself dressed in a sailor's rig and on board the United States receiving ship North Carolina, stationed at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard.

When the crew was called to muster, the officer of the deck called the name of Michael Murphy. I did not answer and did not know that I had been enlisted under that name until the officer told me that Michael Murphy was the name borne on my enlistment papers and that I must answer to that name, which I continued to do while in the service.

The next day a strange man came on board the ship and handed me $300. I do not know who he was, but suppose he must have been a State agent. He was dressed in citizens' clothes. I did not remember ever having seen him before, and I know that I never met him afterwards. At the time of my enlistment I could not have been examined by a board of surgeons, as my wounds were still running and bandaged, and no medical examining officer would have accepted me into the service in the condition that I was in at the time.

Soon after I was transferred to the U. S. gunboat Fort Jackson, on blockade duty off Wilmington, N. C. Was in the battle of Fort Fisher, N. C. (first attack), December 25, 1864; also in the second attack and capture of Fort Fisher, January 15, 1865. Was with the crew of second cutter and sent ashore with storming party.

After the capture of the fort at 10 p. m. on the night of January 15 I was detailed to assist in conveying the wounded in our boat to the several ships in the fleet to which the men belonged. In performing this duty I was drenched through and through, as we had to carry all of the wounded through a heavy surf to the boat.

Our boat's crew had to remain on the beach all night, and I contracted a severe cold that resulted in inflammation of the lungs, for which I was treated on the Fort Jackson by Surgeon Wales, United States Navy. I remained on said ship until she arrived at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, when I was sent to the marine hospital at that place. Remained there nearly two months, when I was sent to the receiving ship Vermont and honorably discharged on account of disability contracted in the service, on the 20th day of October, 1865.

I did not know, until a few years ago, that I had a charge of desertion standing against me at the War Department. I made an application to have the charge removed, and the same was denied on the ground that I had enlisted in the Navy for the purpose of securing a bounty or other gratuity to which I would not have been entitled had I completed my term of original enlistment. This is evidently an error, as I had no reason whatever for deserting from the Army, as my relations were always pleasant with my officers and comrades, and I fully intended to rejoin my company and regiment on the expiration of my furlough. I had no knowledge of my enlistment in the Navy or that I was enlisted as a substitute until I was handed the $300 by the strange man, as heretofore stated.

I served my adopted country honestly and faithfully for over three years and still suffer from the wounds that I received at the battle of Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864, so much so that I frequently am obliged to lay off from my work for weeks at a time. I am now an old man, over 68 years of age, and have a family of grown-up sons and daughters who love and honor me, and for their sake, more than my own, I would like to have this charge of desertion, which I feel to be an unjust one, removed from my record.

Very respectfully,

MICHAEL MULLETT,
Late Provost Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, alias Michael Murphy, Late U. S. S. Fort Jackson, U. S. Navy.

The SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.

The above statement was subscribed and sworn to before me this 3d day of January, 1902.

[SEAL.] JOHN QUINN,
Notary Public, New York County.

General affidavit.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Cattaraugus, ss:

In the matter of Michael Mullett, of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers:

On this 21st day of September, A. D. 1901, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, James L. Vallely, aged 52 years, a resident of Ellicottville, in the county of Cattaraugus, State of New York, whose post-office address is Ellicottville, N. Y., and ——— ———, aged ——— years, a resident of ———, in the county of ———, State of ———, whose post-office address is ———, and who, being duly sworn according to law, depose and say, in relation to aforesaid case, as follows:

That he was first sergeant of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers; that he knew Michael Mullett, of said Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers; that said Michael Mullett was enlisted at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 26th day of August, 1862, by Capt. T. W. Kelly, for three years, and was mustered into the United States service by Lieutenant Sturgeon at Buffalo, N. Y., and that he served with the company and regiment until the 3d day of June, 1864, when he was wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., and was sent to hospital.

On or about the 22d of July, 1864, Capt. T. W. Kelly received information that the said Michael Mullett had enlisted in the United States Navy at New York City, and he, Capt. T. W. Kelly, gave me orders to report him on the company roll as a deserter.

Some time, I think in August, 1863, said Michael Mullett made application to be transferred to the Navy. Captain Kelly never forwarded the papers, but destroyed them.

Michael Mullett was last paid by Major Williams to April 30, 1864. I seen Mullett after he was wounded and gave him a drink.

Affiant further declares that he has no interest in said case and is not concerned in its prosecution.

JAMES L. VALLELY.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Cattaraugus:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution.

THOS. R. ALLDRICH,
Notary Public.

(Certificate on file in Pension Office.)

NEW YORK, February 1, 1902.

DEAR SIR: I beg to recall my old-time acquaintance with you to ask the favor that you will listen to the bearer, Michael Mullett, otherwise Murphy, whom I have known for many years as an employee of my father and an honest, reliable sailor man. He has a matter of war record (civil war) which he desired to have made conform to the facts. Oblige me by seeing if you can advance his interests, as he is practically destitute of political friends, and I have to rely on those of old times.

Thanking you for any trouble, I am, with regards,

Yours, very truly,

WM. HENRY WHITE.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Member of Congress, United States, City.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following additional statement in regard to my enlistment in the United States Navy, and request that the same may be filed with other papers now before the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, in connection with the bill that is now pending for a correction of my military record.

On or about the 16th of July, 1864, while at my home in New York City on furlough, on account of wounds received in the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., I was drugged and taken to the naval recruiting station in Cherry street, New York City, where I was enlisted under the name of Michael Murphy.

When I became sober the next day, I found myself on board the U. S. receiving ship North Carolina. And when the name of Michael Murphy was called by the officer of the deck I did not answer, as I did not know that I had been enlisted under that name until the officer told me that that was the name borne on my enlistment papers and I must answer that name. I protested strongly against this, and told him that I was a member of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers; that I had been severely wounded while with my company and regiment at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., June 3, 1864, and that I was at home on furlough, and that my name was Michael Mullett, and not Michael Murphy; that I had met several friends the day before, who got me under the influence of liquor; that I was later on "shanghaied" by a lot of "bounty brokers," who were well known in South street, and asked to be allowed to go to my home, so that I could rejoin my regiment when my furlough expired.

The officer would not pay any attention to my explanation, but replied that I must stay where I was; that it did not make any difference whether I served under my right name or not. Neither did it make any difference whether I served in the Army or Navy; that I had been regularly enlisted and brought on board that vessel, and there I must stay. So, finding it useless, I made no further protest, but served faithfully, which the records of the Navy Department will show, until October 20, 1865, when I was honorably discharged, at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, on account of disability.

The party referred to in my letter addressed to the Secretary of War in December last, that handed me the $300, told me that it was "Government bounty," that it was mine and I must take it. I protested, and told him that my wounds were running and that no fair-minded medical officer would have accepted me into the service. He said, "Well, you are here now and here you will have to stay," and left the ship after handing me the money. I heard afterwards that this same man got $1,500 for sending me as a substitute.

I will also add that the facts as here related have come to my mind since writing my former statement, and that they are absolutely true in every respect, and that I never thought of deserting from the One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers and did not enlist for the purpose of securing Government or any other bounty.

MICHAEL MULLET,
576 Eleventh avenue, New York City.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 17th day of May, 1902.

[SEAL.] CHARLES HAAG,
Notary Public, New York County.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, March 11, 1902.

SIR: In reply to your request for information upon House bill 11879, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, for the relief of Michael Mullett as a private of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers, I have the honor to inclose a report from the Chief of the Record and Pension Office of this Department.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

Case of Michael Mullett, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers.

It is shown by the records that Michael Mullett was enrolled August 26, 1862, as a private in Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years. The muster-in roll of the company, dated November 19, 1862, reports him "deserted October 10, 1862, from Buffalo," and the bimonthly muster roll, dated December 31, 1862, "present; returned to duty December 1, 1862." He appears to have served faithfully with his company, after his return thereto, until June 3, 1864, when he received a gunshot wound of left hip and arm (contusion) at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va.

He was admitted to depot field hospital, Second Army Corps, White House Landing, Va., June 4, 1864, with gunshot wound left arm, slight, and left hip, disposition not stated; admitted to Finley general hospital, Washington, D. C., June 8, 1864, with gunshot wound left forearm, upper one-third, and gunshot wound left hip, and was furloughed June 25, 1864. Failing to return to hospital or to rejoin his command, which was not mustered out until July 15, 1865, he was reported on the records of his company as having deserted July 22–August 4, 1864.

He reenlisted under the name "Michael Murphy" in the United States Navy July 16, 1864, at New York City, and was discharged October 20, 1865, at the same place. Upon his enlistment he was credited to the First Ward, Brooklyn, Kings County, Third Congressional district of New York, as a substitute for James Monroe.

Applying for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge as of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, Mullett testified January 7, 1892, as follows:

"That he served faithfully until on or about the 3d day of July, 1864, when, without any intention of deserting, he left the regiment under the following circumstances: He enlisted August 26, 1862, for three years, and served faithfully until wounded in the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., July 3, 1864, and was sent to a hospital. Having received a furlough from the hospital, he enlisted in the Navy, July 16, 1864, on the U. S. man-of-war Fort Jackson, and served faithfully thereon until the close of the war. About August, 1865, he made application to be transferred to the Navy, but his papers were destroyed by Captain Kelley.

"He prays that he may be relieved of the charge of desertion and granted an honorable discharge."

On January 25, 1892, the applicant testified that he enlisted in the Navy under the name Michael Murphy, and was discharged in that name on October 20, 1865.

The application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge in this case has been denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that the enlistment of this soldier in the United States Navy (as a substitute) appears to have been made for the purpose of securing bounty or other gratuity to which he would not have been entitled had he remained under his term of enlistment in the One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Infantry Volunteers, and because the case does not come within any of the other provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, which is the only law now in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Chief Record and Pension Office.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
War Department, March 11, 1902.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I feel that, in justice to the Committee on Military Affairs and to the Committee of the Whole, I should explain the case now pending before the committee. The evidence that was submitted by this party was largely his own testimony, and the committee, if they paid attention to the reading of it, will remember that it was to the effect that this claimant was on furlough after serving more than a year in the Army, that he got drunk, that he was impressed into the service by naval officers, and that he accepted the bounty money under protest, without any evidence that he ever undertook to pay it to any party or appeal to the proper authorities for relief.

I can not believe, Mr. Chairman, that any naval officer would impress a Union soldier who had served over one year in the Army and out on furlough. The evidence submitted by the claimant to the War Department differs from that presented to the committee. The evidence, which is of his own witnesses, is to the effect that he had applied for a transfer to the Navy, and it was refused. The whole case, to my mind, is one which indicates that he deliberately went into the Navy as a substitute for the purpose of securing the bounty money.

There are before the committee 1,000 bills of this character, where, if the testimony of the parties themselves can be taken, great wrongs have been perpetrated upon them by having them all these years charged as deserters, and where they are now knocking at the doors of Congress for the purpose of getting relief so that they may have the benefit of the act of 1890, granting pensions.

Mr. KLEBERG. Was this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HULL. Not at all. My judgment does not bind me as chairman of the committee at all, nor several other members of the committee. In fact, I will say that it was never recommended by any member of a subcommittee that had the matter in charge. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we are to adopt this class of cases——

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask the gentleman how the bill came here.

Mr. HULL. It was passed by the full committee.

Mr. MADDOX. Recommended by the full committee?

Mr. HULL. Yes; by a majority of the committee. It was recommended after several sessions and much solicitation. I want to say to you gentlemen on the Democratic side that your record has been consistently to oppose cases of desertion in almost every case and especially where it was not of the very clearest evidence that the desertion was technical rather than real. Why are you now in favor of this bill? If this is to be passed by the committee, in justice to other members of the House having bills of like character before the committee their bills should be reported and passed.

I want the House in this matter to make a record of what it desires in such cases as this, where a man served in the Army up to 1864, when large bounties were paid, and deserted from the hospital or otherwise, many of them from the hospitals, as this man has, and enlisted in other regiments or in the Navy under another name for the purpose of securing the large bounty from cities like New York and elsewhere. If this bill shall be passed, it is only fair to other members of Congress who have similar bills that the committee should cease to turn them down and give them the same treatment as is accorded in this case.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, the uncalled-for opposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to this meritorious and commendable bill does not surprise me. The gentleman is the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of this House, and many here know that on his account it is almost impossible to get a bill reported favorably from that committee to correct the military record of an old soldier. The gentleman is opposed for some reason or other to a favorable report on almost every bill in that committee to remove an unjust charge of desertion against an old soldier, no matter whether the charge is true or false, no matter whether it is right or wrong.

As a member of that committee I have investigated several of these cases now before the committee, honest and just cases, in my opinion, where a stigma has been placed on the record of a worthy soldier, but on account of the influence of the gentleman from Iowa the bills are not reported to this House and will not be reported.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I decline to be interrupted at this time. I did not interrupt the gentleman from Iowa. I believe I know of another reason why he is opposed to this bill. I was one of the men who voted the other day for the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to instruct the conferees of the House to strike out of the Army appropriation bill an item that I thought was wrong. I voted then as my judgment dictated, and now the gentleman from Iowa is trying to punish me by endeavoring to defeat this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York to avoid criticising the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SULZER. Indeed, I did not know a chairman of a committee in this House was above criticism.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some reason why this bill should be passed. I shall want pretty strong evidence to secure my vote for it.

Mr. SULZER. If the gentleman will read the report, I believe he will support the bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us inquire what are the facts in this case. The complete record is before the committee. This old soldier, Michael Mullett, enlisted at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 26th day of August, 1862, as a private in Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteer Infantry. He served in his regiment faithfully until he was badly wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., July 3, 1864, when he was sent to the hospital, and during his convalescence he received a furlough of forty days to visit his home in New York City. He returned to the city of New York.

On or about the 16th of July, 1864, while at his home in New York City on furlough, on account of wounds received in the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., he was drugged and taken to the naval recruiting station in Cherry street, New York City, where he was enlisted under the name of Michael Murphy.

When he became sober the next day he found himself on board the United States receiving ship North Carolina. And when the name of Michael Murphy was called by the officer of the deck he did not answer, as he did not know that he had been enlisted under that name until the officer told him that that was the name borne on his enlistment papers and he must answer that name.

He protested strongly against this, and told him that he was a member of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers; that he had been severely wounded while with his company and regiment at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., July 3, 1864, and that he was at home on furlough, and that his name was Michael Mullett, and not Michael Murphy; that he had met several friends the day before, who got him under the influence of liquor; that he was later on "shanghaied" by a lot of "bounty brokers," who were well known in South street, and asked to be allowed to go to his home, so that he could rejoin his regiment when his furlough expired.

The officer would not pay any attention to his explanation, but replied "that he must stay where he was; that it did not make any difference whether he served under his right name or not. Neither did it make any difference whether he served in the Army or Navy; that he had been regularly enlisted and brought on board that vessel and there he must stay. So, finding it useless he made no further protest, but served faithfully (which the records of the Navy Department will show) until October 20, 1865, when he was honorably discharged at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard on account of disability. That is substantially the sworn record in this case.

Mr. MADDOX. Does the record show that he served through the war in the Navy and was honorably discharged?

Mr. SULZER. Yes, the record in the Navy Department shows that he served faithfully to the end of the war, and he was honorably discharged then for disability. He was badly wounded in the Army and also while in the Navy. This bill corrects his record in the War Department, and, all things considered, it should be corrected in this case. It is one of the most meritorious cases ever considered by the committee.

Mr. KLEBERG. Was the testimony of the man whose substitute he was obtained, or is it obtainable?

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman that it is impossible to obtain it. We do not know positively if he was a substitute. There is no evidence.

Mr. KLEBERG. Is he dead?

Mr. SULZER. I do not know, but it is impossible to obtain it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Is the record from which you are reading—is that the testimony of the claimant, or is it corroborated by other facts?

Mr. SULZER. It is corroborated by other statements of fact and by the records in the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. PALMER. What are the facts corroborated?

Mr. SULZER. I suggest the gentleman read the report.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think it would be important if there were other facts, and the committee ought to know it.

Mr. SULZER. There is no doubt the statements set forth in the report are true, and they make out a most worthy case, entitling this old soldier to the relief prayed for. There should be no opposition to this bill. Similar bills are frequently passed to correct military records. In the report you will find an affidavit made by Mr. James L. Vallely. He swears:

That he was first sergeant of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers; that he knew Michael Mullett, of said Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers; that said Michael Mullett was enlisted at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 26th day of August, 1862, by Capt. T. W. Kelly, for three years, and was mustered into the United States service by Lieutenant Sturgeon at Buffalo, N. Y., and that he served with the company and regiment until the 3d day of July, 1864, when he was wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., and was sent to hospital.

On or about the 22d of July, 1864, Capt. T. W. Kelly received information that the said Michael Mullett had enlisted in the United States Navy at New York City, and he, Capt. T. W. Kelly, gave me orders to report him on the company roll as a deserter.

Some time, I think in August, 1863, said Michael Mullett made application to be transferred to the Navy. Captain Kelly never forwarded the papers, but destroyed them.

Michael Mullett was last paid by Major Williams to April 30, 1864. I seen Mullett after he was wounded and gave him a drink.

Affiant further declares that he has no interest in said case and is not concerned in its prosecution.

And here is a letter from a well-known citizen of New York City. I will read it from the report:

NEW YORK, February 1, 1902.

DEAR SIR: I beg to recall my old-time acquaintance with you to ask the favor that you will listen to the bearer, Michael Mullett, whom I have known for many years as an employee of my father and an honest, reliable sailor. He has a matter of war record (civil war) which he desired to have made conform to the facts. Oblige me by seeing if you can advance his interests.

Thanking you for any trouble, I am, with regards,

Yours, very truly,

WM. HENRY WHITE.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Member of Congress, United States, City.

Mr. PALMER. What fact does that corroborate?

Mr. SULZER. That proves that he is an honest man; that he was a brave soldier and sailor for his country, and is entitled to credence, is worthy of belief in all he has sworn to.

Mr. PALMER. The question I asked was whether there was any affidavit——

Mr. SULZER. I have already stated that, and I read the affidavit made by Mr. Vallely, corroborating Mullett's affidavit. It is all in the report. Read it yourself.

Mr. PALMER. I did not observe that there was any testimony except the man's own statement that he was "shanghaied," as it was called, and enlisted when he was drunk. On the other hand, I noticed in the report that the man had asked to be transferred into the Navy and did not get permission, and then deserted and went there.

Mr. SULZER. That is not correct. I will read again the last affidavit that Mullett makes. It ought to be sufficient.

On or about the 16th of July, 1864, while at my home in New York City on furlough, on account of wounds received in the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., I was drugged and taken to the naval recruiting station in Cherry street, New York City, where I was enlisted under the name of Michael Murphy.

When I became sober the next day, I found myself on board the U. S. receiving ship North Carolina. And when the name of Michael Murphy was called by the officer of the deck I did not answer, as I did not know that I had been enlisted under that name until the officer told me that that was the name borne on my enlistment papers and I must answer that name.

I protested strongly against this, and told him that I was a member of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers; that I had been severely wounded while with my company and regiment at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., June 3, 1864, and that I was at home on furlough, and that my name was Michael Mullett, and not Machael Murphy; that I had met several friends the day before, who got me under the influence of liquor; that I was later on "shanghaied" by a lot of "bounty brokers," who were well known in South street, and asked to be allowed to go to my home so that I could rejoin my regiment when my furlough expired.

The officer would not pay any attention to my explanation, but replied "that I must stay where I was; that it did not make any difference whether I served under my right name or not. Neither did it make any difference whether I served in the Army or Navy."

Now, that tells the whole story—and it is a sad one—one that appeals to me.

Mr. KLEBERG. What the gentleman reads would imply that the naval officer in command received into the service a man who was drunk and who was bound, possibly, hand and foot and brought to the ship. Is that what we are to understand?

Mr. SULZER. I have read the sworn statements. You can draw your own conclusions.

Mr. KLEBERG. But the implication is that an officer of the Navy——

Mr. SULZER. I am not discussing "implications." I read the affidavits of a man whom I know, and I believe him. I know Mr. Mullett, and I believe he tells the truth.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am simply asking for information.

Mr. SULZER. Quite so, and you can draw any conclusion that you desire from these affidavits. I say I know Mullett, and I know he is an honest man—a truthful man. I believe all he says. If I did not, I should not have introduced this bill.

Mr. KLEBERG. We would naturally have to assume from this testimony that that naval officer of the Government permitted an abuse and a crime of this kind to occur under his eye and participated in it.

Mr. SULZER. In those days during the civil war it was a matter of frequent occurrence in the North to "shanghai" men and enlist them. There were bounty brokers galore in New York City who made it a business to get men under the influence of liquor or drugs and while they were insensible to "shanghai" them, as it was called, and enlist them in the Army or Navy. These criminals would get the bounty; and sometimes, on account of their conscience, they would give the enlisted man probably a quarter or a tenth of the bounty that they had received for enlisting him, and say it was Government money.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SULZER. I must decline to yield further at present. When I have finished I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman, but at present I wish the members here to comprehend the facts in this case as they are in the record.

Now, sir, Mullett swears that the naval officer on the recruiting ship said to him, when he protested, that it did not make any difference whether he served in the Army or the Navy. The affidavit continues:

So, finding it useless, I made no further protest, but served faithfully (which the records of the Navy Department will show) until October 20, 1865, when I was honorably discharged, at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, on account of disability.

Mr. Chairman, this man Mullett served his country practically during the entire civil war, in the Army and in the Navy. While in the Army he was badly wounded at Cold Harbor. While in the Navy he was also wounded in several engagements. There is not a scintilla of evidence in the War Department or the Navy Department that this man Mullett was not an honest, brave, and faithful soldier and sailor, who served during the war from 1862 to 1865.

He was "shanghaied" into the Navy, and he should not be held responsible for what the naval officer on the recruiting ship said to him or did to him. He was enlisted in the Navy, and he had to obey orders. He could not go back to his regiment when he wanted to go back. This naval officer told him it made no difference whether he served in the Army or the Navy. In those days a poor soldier, or a poor sailor, had to obey orders. Theirs was not to reason why—any disobedience met with prompt punishment. Under all the circumstances Mullett did all he could, and failing to get back to his regiment served his country bravely and faithfully in the Navy until the war was over and he was honorably discharged.

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not want to be captious, but I would like to inquire if that naval officer is still living?

Mr. SULZER. That we could not ascertain.

Mr. KLEBERG. Or any of the officers of that ship?

Mr. SULZER. I could not state; we could not learn.

Mr. WARNOCK. What effort, if any, did he make between the period of 1864 to October, 1865, to have this great wrong done him rectified? Did he make any?

Mr. SULZER. He says he did, and Mr. Vallely swears to it also, but it was unavailing. He protested against his enlistment in the Navy. He protested against it at the beginning and protested against it afterwards. The affidavit of Mr. Vallely corroborates this statement of Mullett's.

Mr. WARNOCK. Does anybody say that he made a protest to him?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; Mr. Vallely swears to it. I will read again that portion of the affidavit.

On or about the 22d of July, 1864, Capt. T. W. Kelly received information that the said Michael Mullett had enlisted in the United States Navy at New York City, and he, Capt. T. W. Kelly, gave me orders to report him on the company roll as a deserter.

Some time, I think in August, 1863, said Michael Mullett made application to be transferred to the Navy. Captain Kelly never forwarded the papers, but destroyed them.

He also made the protest to officers in command at the time he was forced into the Navy, and there is proof—absolute proof—that he did all he could in his power to rejoin his regiment, but without avail.

Mr. WARNOCK. Did he make any effort that is of record to right this great wrong, immediately after the war, or within twenty-five years after the war?

Mr. SULZER. As a matter of fact, when he was discharged from the Navy—honorably discharged, which discharge he still has—he thought that honorable discharge was all that was required and all that he could get, and he never knew that he was marked as a deserter on the records of the War Department until, I think, about 1892. When he discovered it he began immediately to take steps to have it removed. General Ainsworth denied his application for lack of authority. Mr. Mullett is a man well along in years now, I know him very well, and he is a worthy, industrious citizen of the city of New York.

He is married and has several children. He does not want this charge of desertion on the Army records removed against him in order to get a pension. He does not need a pension and cares nothing about it. His children are capable of taking care of him for the few years he has yet to live; but as an old soldier of the Union, as a man who fought in the Army and in the Navy for the old flag and for his country, he does not want to go to his grave with the stigma of a deserter on his record. He feels this keenly and he wants to leave his children a clear record as their greatest heritage when he dies, and I appeal to every man here to right this wrong and to give this grand old soldier who shed his blood for the Union on land and sea what he craves in his expiring days as his greatest boon—as honorable a record in the Army as he has in the Navy.

I know it is easy to be technical; I know anyone can be captious; I know it is easy for lawyers here to spin fine distinctions of fact, to get up in their places and find fault with an honest report like this, to pick to pieces the affidavits of a poor old soldier and sailor, now broken in health and tottering on the brink of the grave; but I tell you that every man who will read the affidavits of this poor old soldier and sailor, every man who will look into the record of this battle-scarred veteran, will have no hesitation in supporting this bill, and will never in the future have occasion to square his conscience with the proper performance of duty.

I know, and we all know, that there are many cases where men on the muster rolls of the Army and Navy have been marked unjustly as deserters, and in those cases it is the duty of Congress to remove the charge and to give the brave old soldier or sailor a clear pass of honor as he marches forward to that undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to one word of personal explanation. The gentleman makes a charge that I am opposed to all bills for the removal of the charge of desertion. He is only partially correct. I am, as a rule, opposed to them, but there is no case on record since I have been a member of that committee where I have tried to keep any bill from being considered by the committee when it was properly brought before the committee by one of the subcommittees charged with the investigation of the case, and the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] that I am opposing this bill because, forsooth, he voted a certain way in the House the other day is utterly absurd and untrue, because the vote was taken on this bill in the Committee on Military Affairs and had practically voted down, almost without a division, a proposition to report this bill, and it was only after the personal eloquence and personal talk of the gentleman from New York that as a personal favor he secured even a majority of the committee at the next vote.

I want to say to this committee that I have never tried to prevent the consideration of any of these bills, but I do believe as a Union soldier that the line of demarcation between the man who served his country without desertion and the man who deserted to get a bounty should be preserved and not wiped out by the Congress of the United States. This man, by his own confession, took the bounty and kept it. He uttered no word of complaint that can be substantiated from 1864 to 1892. He rested under his alleged wrongs for twenty-eight years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make one more statement.

Mr. KLEBERG. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. Is it not possible that in this case we can get more light? That is, can not the investigation be extended and other proof had, so as to make it more clear? And what effort has the committee made to clear up the matter?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered everything that the gentleman could submit to us. As a matter of fact, there is no question but that the officers of the ship can be found, if they are living; but that was not even asked for by the attorney for the claimant in the case. We took all the evidence he could give.

Mr. KLEBERG. Are the officers of the ship now living?

Mr. HULL. I do not know whether they are living or not; but if they are living, the Naval Record will show who they were and where they are.

I want to say one word further in answer to the gentleman's attack on me in this matter. No subcommittee recommended this to the full committee and, in fact, the subcommittee having the matter in charge, anxious to accommodate the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], after full investigation refused to make a report in favor of the bill, and submitted it simply with a statement of the facts.

So that if you will take the case as it is there has been nothing that I have done that is open to the criticism of the gentleman from New York. There is nothing in the case that differs from at least a thousand other cases before the committee that we have not reported favorably, and many of which have been reported unfavorably, and you are making a record in this case by a vote of the committee first, and if reported favorably by a record vote in the House as to what instructions you will give the Committee on Military Affairs in regard to this class of bills that the committee heretofore have declined to consider favorably.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will hold the floor a minute, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is something unusual for a member of the committee to fly in the face of his committee in a matter of correcting a military record or granting a pension. The other day when the House had a matter under consideration, involving an instruction which I thought was entirely proper, the gentleman took a contrary view to the one he takes to-day.

Now, after hearing the reading of the report in this case, I want to ask the gentleman if this case is in any substantial way dissimilar to many cases favorably reported by the sanction of the gentleman from Iowa? And I should like to ask him if cases of no greater merit than this have not been favorably reported by his committee without any objection from him?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that this is the first case where it has been proven that a man deserted from the Army to go into another branch of the Army or into the Navy, where he received a bounty, that has ever been favorably reported within my knowledge.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman recognizes that there were very many cases where there was a misuse of power by Army officers during the war of the rebellion, whereby men were placed in unfortunate predicaments from which they ought to be relieved.

Mr. HULL. There is no question about that in my mind, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And plenty of such cases are now pending before the gentleman's committee with no chance to get a favorable report.

Mr. HULL. But in my judgment a man who was outraged as this man now claims he was outraged would not have rested quietly under that from 1864 down to 1892 without ever making a protest that could be acted upon and the facts determined.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has not the gentleman's committee largely placed itself as a barrier against the relief of those cases?

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And are not members of the House constantly entreating that committee favorably to report those cases?

Mr. HULL. All the evidence is before the House that is before the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman how many cases for the removal of charges of desertion are now before his committee?

Mr. HULL. I should imagine fifteen hundred, and probably more.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How many have you reported this session?

Mr. HULL. I should think from twenty-five to thirty; and I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that before the act of 1890 was passed there were not 200 cases of that character before the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman how many such bills were favorably reported in the last Congress?

Mr. HULL. I should say probably thirty or forty in the last Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How many the Congress before that?

Mr. HULL. More than that. But on account of the careful attitude of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber you gradually caused the Committee on Military Affairs to be more conservative; and wherever there is a case there of desertion more technical than real, where the man performed service during the war, where he performed service in the same command or had left his command for another, they report it favorably in every case, or where it is shown that the officers—and there are many such cases—have been guilty of overbearing conduct and outrageous conduct toward men, in every case of that kind the committee has given the man the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is in the cases reported. But does not the gentleman know that there are hundreds of these cases on hand that the committee has failed to report on?

Mr. HULL. No; I do not; and if there is a case of that kind in the knowledge of the gentleman from Indiana and he will bring it to the attention of the proper subcommittee I have no doubt that it will be promptly considered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman think that out of eleven hundred cases only 20 or 30 cases ought to be favorably acted on by the committee?

Mr. HULL. I want to say that there is a very much larger number acted upon—not all favorably.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether he thought that was a proportion that ought to be acted upon favorably by the committee out of eleven hundred.

Mr. HULL. In the committee each stands on its merits.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But you do not consider them.

Mr. HULL. They consider every case where a member of Congress presses it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not so understand it.

Mr. HULL. There are two subcommittees working constantly. Mr. MONDELL is on one of them and Mr. ESCH on the other. I believe you will find that they have reported more bills than any Congress ever did.

Mr. PALMER. I would like to ask the gentleman if every man who deserted for the sake of taking a bounty could not have presented as good a case as this man?

Mr. HULL. They all do it. A man would not go about this without making good affidavits.

Mr. PALMER. If this man's bill passes, ought not every man who deserted to take a bounty have his record amended?

Mr. HULL. I think so. That is why I want the House to make a record.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] did me the honor of refusing to yield to me to ask him a question, and if he is not too busy I would crave his attention long enough to answer a question.

Mr. SULZER. I shall be glad to answer any question the gentleman may ask, if I can. The only reason I declined to be interrupted at the time the gentlemen asked me to yield was because I wanted to state all the facts to the House.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman at that time was undertaking to make a speech to the House of the same kind that he does to his constituents and did not want to be interrupted, and I did not blame him.

Mr. SULZER. That is kind of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It was a good speech, and I would like to hear it again.

Mr. SULZER. It never hurts an old song to sing it twice. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. No, sir; it was a good speech. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was, Did this man actually receive a bounty?

Mr. SULZER. No; he did not actually receive a bounty.

Mr. HULL. He says he did.

Mr. SULZER. I am answering the question, not the gentleman from Iowa. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. He says he did.

Mr. SULZER. He did not so swear, and if the gentleman will read the report he will see that he did not.

Mr. MANN. He got the $300.

Mr. SULZER. Let me read from the report—the sworn statement of Mullett. He said a man came on board the receiving ship the next day and handed him $300, and told him that it was Government money, that it was his, and that he must take it. He says he protested and told this man that his wounds were running, and that no fair-minded medical officer would accept him in the service. The man answered: "Well, you are here now, and here you will have to stay," and left the ship. It is well known bounties were paid at that time, and I do not suppose Mullett in those days, and especially after his experience of the night before, was the brightest man in the world.

Mr. MANN. Well, now, if the gentleman will please wait. He says that the man "protested." But did he take the money?

Mr. SULZER. As testified to, the $300 was left with Mullett as Government money. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe that this man, leaving one command and entering another and receiving $300, thought that he was receiving this as Government money from this man?

Mr. SULZER. He swears he was told it was Government money, and, knowing the man, I believe him.

Mr. MANN. The man had been in the employ of the Government for some time?

Mr. SULZER. He had been a brave soldier from the time that he enlisted in August, 1862, until then, and when he went in the Navy he was a gallant sailor.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that this man was of the opinion that the Government was sending $300 around to its soldiers and giving it to them?

Mr. SULZER. He certainly did, and he swears so; and it is very natural for him to do so; very natural, indeed. Bounties were paid, I believe, in those days by the various States and cities.

Mr. MANN. How long had this man been in the service of the Government in the Army?

Mr. SULZER. From the 26th of August, 1862, until July, 1864. He was badly wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor on the 3d day of July, 1864, and sent to the hospital. He was comparatively a young man at that time.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt there are many circumstances in favor of giving this man a pension.

Mr. SULZER. He is not an applicant for a pension. I am willing now to accept an amendment to this bill that Mullett does not want a pension and that he will never apply for one.

Mr. MANN. I say I should have no objection to giving this man a pension as a matter of charity, but what he asks is justice, and so far as justice is concerned he was a deserter and a bounty jumper, and if the gentleman from South Carolina were here he would be called a coffee cooler and a camp follower. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. That is the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois. I have heard criminal lawyers draw similar conclusions from truthful affidavits.

Mr. MANN. My judgment is that it takes a criminal lawyer to understand this case, because the applicant was guilty of a crime.

Mr. SULZER. The crime was committed against Mullett.

Mr. MANN. This man was a deserter——

Mr. SULZER. He was not. I deny it. The record disproves it——

Mr. MANN (continuing). Not only a deserter, but he took money for desertion and entered into another branch of the service. You might well claim that he got drunk and was shanghaied into the Navy, but when he received over his protest—oh, yes, protest—$300, which he put in his pocket and spent, it is nonsense to say that he did it without knowing what he was doing. He has the character of a deserter, and if the gentleman from South Carolina, who is now attending to his duties as candidate for governor in that State, were here he would denounce this bill as being of that character that brings disgrace on this Congress for attempting to pass it.

Mr. SULZER. Let me say this to the gentleman from Illinois. If this man Mullett was not an honest man, if what he says was not true, do you suppose he would put that statement about the $300 in his affidavit? He could have left it out. Had he been dishonest in the matter he would have left it out and no one would have been the wiser. The fact that he put it in stamps it all over with truth.

Mr. BROMWELL. In other words, if he was guilty of being a bounty jumper he must be an honest man for stating it in the affidavit. [Laughter.] That is the argument of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. No; that is not my argument. My contention is that if Mullett was a bounty jumper he would not testify to it under oath, when it was not necessary to mention it, but we see he tells the whole truth and nothing but the truth regarding all the facts of his case. He conceals nothing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the reason the man put these facts in his affidavit, which the gentleman from New York says he would not have put in if he was not honest, was because he was relying on the eloquence and the specious argument of the gentleman from New York to work all around the truth and never once hit the center of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. This case is submitted on the record. I know Mullett, and I say he tells the truth. I rely on the sworn statements and on all the surrounding circumstances, and I appeal to every member to vindicate this brave but now broken soldier, and take from his record as the grave opens to receive him this stain put there by others without his knowledge or consent.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I think since the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has seen fit to go into what occurred when this bill was reported out of the committee, that it is but due to the House to say that the chairman of the subcommittee who had this bill under consideration voted for the bill in committee. I refer to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that the reason I referred to it was because of the assault made on me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. HAY. I was not present at that time.

Mr. HULL. I want to ask the gentleman if it was not true that Mr. ESCH stated that the subcommittee and himself would decline to recommend it?

Mr. HAY. It is true when the case first came up Mr. ESCH stated what the gentleman from Iowa has said; but the gentleman from Wisconsin stated that he desired the gentleman from New York to procure further evidence, and the gentleman from New York was going to procure some evidence, and when that additional affidavit was secured the gentleman from Wisconsin brought the case up and voted for it himself.

Mr. HULL. But he never claimed that the subcommittee was in favor of it.

Mr. HAY. No; he did not. I do not know that the subcommittee, after the additional evidence was obtained, ever had a meeting or acted upon it. Now, this case is, in my judgment, a very fair case. I do not see that there is any great difference between this case and a great many others that have been reported and passed upon by this House. This man has rendered four years' service in all—two years in the Army and two years in the Navy.

The man was wounded and rendered faithful service. He was impressed in the Navy under circumstances which should at least give him some consideration before this House. I am not one of those who want to assume that every man who makes an affidavit in attempting to correct his military record is necessarily a liar and a scoundrel as some gentlemen seem to think that he is. I went over this case carefully in the Committee on Military Affairs, and after reporting it believed it to be a fair case, and trust that the committee will sustain the Committee on Military Affairs in the report they have made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did the committee, when they passed upon the bill, have before them this affidavit?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the subcommittee did not have it?

Mr. HAY. They did not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then at that time the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] was opposed to the bill, but when he got this evidence his doubts were cleared away?

Mr. HAY. And he voted for the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the committee reported the bill?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And you have examined the bill and approve it?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The question being taken on laying aside the bill as amended with a favorable recommendation, there were—ayes 54, noes 24.

Mr. HULL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES P. M'CLURE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4766) granting an increase of pension to James P. McClure.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James P. McClure, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

PUBLICATIONS FOR THE BLIND.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the Committee of the Whole for a moment to make a statement.

A bill introduced by Senator ELKINS is pending in the Senate, an exact duplicate of which has been introduced in the House, providing for the free transmission through the mails of all books, pamphlets, and other publications, printed in raised characters or point letters, for the use of the blind. As is known to all gentlemen here, every State in the Union has institutions or schools for the instruction of the blind.

These schools are provided with books and libraries, furnished by the States and the United States, especially adapted to the wants and necessities of the pupils who attend these institutions. Frequently the blind girls and boys are bright and quick to learn and receive an education. But, when the school year ends and these children separate and return to their respective homes to spend the vacation; or when they have completed the course at school and can no longer remain there, they are practically denied recourse to books. These books are expensive, and but few of the blind can afford to own them. The purpose of this bill is to permit schools and institutions having libraries printed in raised characters to send such literature to blind people through the mails free of postage.

I will content myself at this time with this mere reference, and ask unanimous consent to print in my remarks for the benefit of the members the bill referred to, together with an article written by Mr. H. H. Johnson, of Romney, W. Va., who is a man of magnificent intellectual attainments, and one of the most distinguished representatives of these unfortunate people.

The documents referred to by Mr. RUCKER are as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 19, 1902.

Mr. RUCKER introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 14577) to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind.

Be it enacted, etc., That books, pamphlets, and other reading matter in raised characters for the use of the blind, whether prepared by hand or printed, in single volumes or in packages, unsealed and not exceeding 4 pounds in weight, when sent by public institutions for the blind as a loan to blind readers, or when returned by the latter to such institution, shall be transmitted in the United States mails free of postage.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts repugnant to this act are hereby repealed, and the Postmaster-General shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary to carry this act into effect.

A PLEA FOR FREE POSTAGE ON BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

The bill to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind is still in the hands of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, awaiting the kindly touch that will bring it back to the Senate with favorable recommendations.

An act of Congress, entitled "An act to promote the education of the blind," approved February 27, 1879, sets apart the sum of $250,000 to be permanently invested in securities of the United States, the proceeds of which shall be forever applied, through the American Printing House for the Blind at Louisville, Ky., to the making of books and apparatus used in the education of the blind, to be annually distributed to the schools for the blind in the several States in the proportion of the attendance of pupils.

For almost a quarter of a century this magnificent but just benefaction has been available for the youthful blind of the country in the schools; and the books in embossed characters have multiplied amazingly. The catalogues now embrace nearly or quite every title in popular literature and technical subjects. We have fiction from Robinson Crusoe to The Marble Faun; in allegory, from the Pilgrim's Progress to the Tale of a Tub; in short tales, a rapidly multiplying variety; in history and biography, a range of choice which would have been well-nigh unimaginable fifty years ago; in poetry, a collection which, in whole or in part, illustrates every considerable writer, and in miscellaneous reading, scores and hundreds of books.

Careful, judicious, conservative men are charged with the selection of the books to be printed, and the consequence is that we have in these special catalogues only the very cream of the world's best thought. I believe it would do no violence to the truth to suppose that the entire catalogue of books in raised letters would, in the ink editions, constitute the finest and very best library of equal numbers in the world. At the least, that is what ought to be the fact.

With these advantages for the young blind in the schools, the natural thought would be: "With these well-cultivated tastes, they will go on reading and improving themselves all their lives." Here the delightful prospect suddenly and sadly changes. The pupils retire from the schools to bookless homes. Some of the more fortunate and sprightly ones have gained one or possibly two books at school as prizes. The securing of more is barred by the prices at which the books have to be sold on account of the expensive processes used in their production and the small editions that are required to supply the demand. Worcester's small pocket dictionary of some 18,000 words makes three large volumes and is quoted at $14.

It is entirely safe to put the cost at from ten to twenty times that at which like books in the ink editions are sold. The size of these books is also against their accumulation, for few houses could spare the room that any considerable number of them would occupy. The 11 volumes of the Bible in the New York point fill a box more than 3 feet long, 14 inches wide, and 13 deep. Fortunately, their weight does not keep pace with their size.

When to these considerations the further one is added that the blind in the very great majority of cases are poor beyond the possibility of paying transportation charges on books that might be borrowed, it will be seen that the return of a blind pupil to the humble home from which he was taken with no appreciation of books, but to which he returns with his faculties all aglow with the enthusiasm of further required acquisitions in knowledge, it requires no great flight of the imagination to conceive the depths of the wretchedness to which he will rapidly gravitate in a very short time, when the whole secret of any possible happiness in life will consist in his ability to forget his taste, his culture, his noble aspirations, which can no longer be fed by the spring of his school-day delights, the books that he may no longer read.

Is the Government's benefaction complete? We are not asking for action of questionable propriety that the Government may show itself sentimentally kind or romantically generous. Is there not a measure of justice in it? Free text-books for the children in the common schools, with circulating free libraries at their very doors and a market in which for their mature years the price of a good cigar will buy almost any, even the best books, are advantages so common as no longer to attract notice or comment. How different with the blind, relegated to their native darkness when their school days are past, without a ray of light to follow them and light their ways, and the necessity of forgetting all the past to make life tolerable! It is difficult to imagine a privation so absolute. How we chafe if the morning paper is a little late on the breakfast table. Even a short outing is intolerable without a book.

These matters are not referred to with any desire of arousing a feeble thrill of sickly sentimentality or a sudden spasm of morbid benevolence. Is there not a propriety in trying to remedy a condition so serious? Would it not be just and righteous to clothe the schools for the blind with this incidental power of continuing the education of their pupils through their whole lives in the interest of a better citizenship for them, to say nothing of greater happiness they would enjoy?

Now, good friend, to whom these words may come, consider yourself specially charged with the responsibility of determining this plain question of mingled justice and mercy. If it strikes you as reasonable, fail not to use the influence you may have with your Senators and Representatives in Congress to push this small, inexpensive bit of legislation to the realization of long-cherished hopes.

Mr. ELKINS introduced the bill in the Senate at the former session and secured its favorable recommendation from the Committee on Education. He informs me that it finally passed the Senate, but was held up in the House. Shall it not fare better this time? May not the favorable report on the bill in the last Congres facilitate like action in the present?

There is other legislation in the interest of the blind, in contemplation, looking to their higher education. I can not feel that this measure, however meritorious in many respects, ought to divert attention from the bill for the free postage on books. The latter will bless every blind reader in the country, and ultimately in the world. Canada has a like law, and it will spread among the nations; and postal agreements may some day give to each the benefits of all in the matter of books for the blind. The other measure can be postponed without injury to anyone; for the blind who want the higher learning will get it with or without assistance, while the impecunious blind can not get books without aid.

Should the frank for books in raised letters fail of favorable consideration at this session of Congress on account of the volume of more widely and more generally important business, let us not doubt either the wisdom or generosity of the members, but rely upon the gentle, respectful activity of those who know and feel the deep significance of the proposed legislation to keep it before Congress till the auspicious time shall come.

H. H. JOHNSON,
Senior Teacher, Blind Department, West Virginia Schools for D. and B.

MAY 15, 1902.

MINE DISASTER IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I beg the indulgence of the Committee of the Whole to speak for a moment about a matter of charity. A few days ago—on the 19th of this month—there was in Tennessee a terrible mine explosion, in which about 225 miners lost their lives. The bodies of these unfortunate men are being gradually taken from this mine. Their wives and many children are left penniless and dependent.

The governor of Tennessee, over the official seal of the State, has appealed to the people of Tennessee and I appeal to the country at large for aid for these widows and orphans.

I wish to take this opportunity of placing in the RECORD the short appeal of Governor McMillin, together with a brief report of the disaster, printed in another column of the same paper, the Nashville American. This appeal of the governor, which I will take the liberty of reading, is as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
May 21, 1902.

To the People of Tennessee:

On Monday morning, May 19, a fearful disaster occurred at the Fraterville mines, in the Coal Creek mining region. Two hundred and twenty-six miners engaged in laboring for themselves and those dependent upon them were, by fearful explosion in the mine, killed. By reason of this disaster hundreds of poor, helpless women and children are left with poverty and want added to the grief caused by the death of loved ones. It is reported to me that assistance is badly needed. Subscriptions have been opened at different places for the purpose of aiding the unfortunates.

The legislature is not in session, and hence no contribution can be made by the State. I therefore appeal to the citizens in every part of the State to contribute generously to the needs of the people afflicted by this misfortune, and I feel confident that all that is necessary to secure succor is to call attention to the matter. Let those who have not been personally visited by the disaster generously help those who have.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed at Nashville, on the 21st day of May, 1902.

[SEAL.] BENTON McMILLIN.

By the Governor:

JOHN W. MORTON,
Secretary of State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD, along with what I have just read, a full statement of this calamity as given in another column of the Nashville American of May 22. My object in doing this is that people throughout the country may know the facts of the case and may understand to whom contributions may be sent. R. M. Lindsay, of Cold Creek, Tenn., is the chairman of the relief committee, who will gladly receive and properly apply any contributions sent him. I had contributed through Governor McMillin before I knew of their relief committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the newspaper article to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

FAREWELLS PAINFULLY INDITED—MESSAGES FROM ENTOMBED MEN AT COAL CREEK WRITTEN WHILE THEY WERE BEING GRADUALLY STRANGLED TO DEATH BY NOXIOUS VAPORS SURROUNDING THEM—FOUND WITH THE BODIES IN FRATERVILLE MINE—EVIDENCES THAT THEY, AND PERHAPS MANY OTHERS, LIVED FOR HOURS AFTER THE TERRIBLE EXPLOSION, THE TORTURE UNDERGONE BEING INTENSE—WORK OF RECOVERING THE BODIES GOES ON UNDER DIFFICULTIES—FAMILIES OF VICTIMS IN WANT.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., May 21, 1902.

The latest estimates as to loss of life in the Fraterville coal-mine disaster at Coal Creek is 236, including contract miners, day laborers, and boy helpers. One find reported to-day was that of 13 bodies in an entry. With these 13, all of whom were dead, were found 6 letters written by 5 men before life became extinct. One of these letters gave the time of day it was written as 2.30 o'clock Monday afternoon, thus indicating that these and perhaps other entombed men lived many hours after the terrible explosion, which occurred Monday morning at 7.30 o'clock.

The letters gave a general suggestion of the suffering that was undergone, indicating that the men were gradually being strangled to death by the foul and gaseous air that was entering and filling the mine. One piteously read: "My God, for another breath."

The letters, in the main, were directions to families as to what disposition should be made of the writer's body and his business affairs and instructions as to raising his family. One unfortunate, who leaves neither father, mother, brother, nor sisters, addressed his letter "To Everybody," and pleaded that they change their way of living.

UNITED MINE WORKERS.

President J. W. Howe, of the United Mine Workers of America for district 19, went into the mines to-day to make an inspection as the representative of that organization, and to assist in the rescue work. He has received a message of condolence from President John Mitchell of the Mine Workers of America, who stated he had sent $100 for the relief fund. Mr. Howe to-day announced that the Mine Workers of America would at once expend $1,000 for the needy families of its members who died in the mine, and that more would be available if necessary.

State Mine Inspector R. A. Shiflett has announced that he will postpone his official inspection until the bodies are rescued and the mine is cleared of some débris. Mr. Shiflett is physically impaired on account of his recent hard work in inspecting the Nelson Mine, at Dayton, Tenn., where he was exposed to noxious gases.

Mrs. George Atkins, wife of the mine foreman who was lost in the disaster, has completely lost her mind. She is raving, and is kept in custody with great difficulty, so intense is her grief for her husband. The rescuing parties that went in Monday are completely exhausted and new men were sent into the mines to-day. Physicians positively forbade any of the first rescuers returning. They have been in contact with the gaseous air for so long that they have become weakened, and it is feared that they could not survive the arduous work. Many hardy miners from other sections are here, and from these the rescue parties were made up this morning.

MONEY THE CRYING NEED.

There are hundreds of people at Coal Creek, and everyone is ready to do all possible for the relief of the suffering. Money is the crying need, and the outside world is urged to send in contributions to R. M. Lindsay, chairman of the relief committee, Coal Creek, Tenn.

The inquest was resumed this morning, but upon request of Maj. E. C. Camp, president of the Coal Creek Coal Company, it was postponed, and the coroner fixed June 9 as the date for it to be reconvened.

Then an investigation will be made as to the cause of the deaths of the men and as to the cause of the explosion. It is now generally believed that on last Saturday a wall between an abandoned mine of the Knoxville Iron Company and the Fraterville mine was punctured by a miner, and this permitted the foul gas from the old mine to enter Fraterville. The fans not operating Sunday enabled the mine to become permeated with the gas, and the explosion Monday was the result when men went in with their lamps and the fresh air began to flow. Up to noon to-day 141 bodies had been removed from the mine.

WILLIAM A. NELSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13233) granting a pension to William A. Nelson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William A. Nelson, Company A, Second New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Nelson," insert "late of," and in the same line, after the word "Second," insert "Regiment."

Strike out the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month" in lines 7 and 8.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM F. BOWDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13178) granting a pension to William F. Bowden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William F. Bowden, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "twenty-five" and substitute therefor the word "twelve."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN W. THOMAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8644) granting a pension to John W. Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John W. Thomas, late a member of Company D, Seventh Regiment of the United States Army, during the Indian wars, and pay him a pension of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the words "pension roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out "a member."

Strike out all in lines 6 and 7 after the word "Regiment" in line 6, and substitute therefor the following: "United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CORNELIA A. DENNIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11893) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Dennis, of Turin, Coweta County, Ga.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Dennis, of Turin, Coweta County, Ga., on the pension roll, subject to all the provisions and limitations of the existing pension laws, and pay her in lieu of the pension she now receives the sum of $25 per month.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Pensions were read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Cornelia A. Dennis."

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelia A. Dennis, widow of Green K. Dennis, late of Company F, First Regiment Texas Mounted Volunteers, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HUGH J. REYNOLDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14251) granting a pension to Hugh J. Reynolds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hugh J. Reynolds, late of Company G, Palmetto Regiment South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert "war with Mexico," and in line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN WILLIAMSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14234) granting a pension to John Williamson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Williamson, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "Volunteer" in line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARGARET S. TOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14224) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Tod.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Margaret S. Tod, widow of Samuel B. Tod, late sergeant, Company E, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 a month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the words "pension roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, after the word "Infantry," insert "war with Mexico;" and in line 7 strike out the word "twenty" and substitute therefor the word "sixteen;" and in the same line change "a month" to "per month."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LUTHER G. EDWARDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14359) granting a pension to Luther G. Edwards.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Luther G. Edwards, late of United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all in the bill after the word "Edwards," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "late landsman, U. S. S. Lancaster, United States Navy, war with Spain."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM DIXON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2783) granting a pension to William Dixon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of William Dixon, a scout, who was wounded in a fight with the Indians on September 10, 1874, while serving under General Miles on the frontier, and to pay him the sum of $50 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Dixon, late a scout and guide, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARCELLUS M. M. MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5152) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marcellus M. M. Martin, alias Marion M. Martin, late of Company F, United States Mounted Riflemen, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JENNIE M. WAGNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5202) granting an increase of pension to Jennie M. Wagner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jennie M. Wagner, widow of Max Wagner, late second lieutenant Twenty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Max Wagner until they reach the age of 16 years.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELLA S. MANNIX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13683) grantimg an increase of pension to Ella S. Mannix.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ella S. Mannix, widow of Capt. D. Pratt Mannix, late of the United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Pensions were read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Ella B. S. Mannix."

Strike out all in the bill in lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, and substitute therefor the following: "of Ella B. S. Mannix, widow of Daniel Pratt Mannix, late captain, United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HATTIE M. WHITNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hattie M. Whitney, widow of Folliot A. Whitney, late major Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said Folliot A. Whitney until he reaches the age of 16 years.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM W. H. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6414) granting an increase of pension to William W. H. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the penson roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William W. H. Davis, late colonel One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "Infantry Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "the pension" and insert in lieu thereof the word "that."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. This concludes the business on the Private Calendar from the Pensions and Invalid Pensions Committees.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, is there not a Calendar No. 1643?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That was laid aside to be favorably reported.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration certain private pension bills and other bills under the special order for this day, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, some with and some without amendments, as follows:

HOUSE BILLS AMENDED.

H. R. 4990. A bill granting an increase of pension to George F. Gregg;

H. R. 8149. A bill granting an increase of pension to James B. Martin;

H. R. 14146. A bill granting an increase of pension to John Murphy;

H. R. 12430. A bill granting a pension to Abner H. Lester;

H. R. 13063. A bill granting a pension to Julia B. Shurtleff (title amended);

H. R. 10339. A bill granting an increase of pension to John L. Moore;

H. R. 8573. A bill granting a pension to William McDaniel;

H. R. 12305. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles Olson;

H. R. 14012. A bill granting a pension to Fannie Reardon, widow of Patrick Reardon, alias Dunn (title amended);

H. R. 8576. A bill granting a pension to John S. Upshaw;

H. R. 12968. A bill granting an increase of pension to John T. Mull;

H. R. 13594. A bill granting an increase of pension to Robert Hargreave (title amended);

H. R. 13944. A bill granting a pension to Margaret Ann West, a nurse of United States Volunteers (title amended);

H. R. 2477. A bill granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Zane;

H. R. 14221. A bill granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. McArthur;

H. R. 11339. A bill granting a pension to Augustus Blount;

H. R. 11453. A bill granting a pension to Catharine Freeman;

H. R. 11865. A bill granting an increase of pension to John A. Robertson;

H. R. 12424. A bill granting an increase of pension to Wallace K. May;

H. R. 12632. A bill granting an increase of pension to Bailey O. Bowden;

H. R. 14052. A bill granting an increase of pension to George Fusselman;

H. R. 13227. A bill granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Emry (title amended);

H. R. 3768. A bill granting an increase of pension to John W. Campbell;

H. R. 5205. A bill granting an increase of pension to Hiram S. Leffingwell;

H. R. 6991. A bill granting an increase of pension to Esek B. Chandler;

H. R. 8146. A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Owens;

H. R. 5446. A bill granting a pension to James M. Travis (title amended);

H. R. 9710. A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. Eagon;

H. R. 3770. A bill granting a pension to J. E. Dickey (title amended);

H. R. 8780. A bill granting an increase of pension to Pierson L. Shick;
H. R. 12009. A bill granting an increase of pension to George Baker;
H. R. 12019. A bill granting an increase of pension to William Lowe;
H. R. 14087. A bill granting a pension to Lizzie Dunlap;
H. R. 14144. A bill granting an increase of pension to Fannie S. Cross;
H. R. 10174. A bill granting a pension to Jennie M. Harris (title amended);
H. R. 11250. A bill granting an increase of pension to Arthur L. Currie;
H. R. 5038. A bill granting an increase of pension to William H. Hudson;
H. R. 13946. A bill granting an increase of pension to Capt. Stephen B. Todd (title amended);
H. R. 14055. A bill granting an increase of pension to Samuel Brown;
H. R. 7760. A bill granting a pension to Thomas Graham (title amended);
H. R. 13675. A bill granting an increase of pension to George W. White;
H. R. 5866. A bill granting an increase of pension to William P. Schott (title amended);
H. R. 13613. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Howard;
H. R. 13999. A bill granting a pension to Dennis Cosier (title amended);
H. R. 13684. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Wright;
H. R. 5480. A bill increasing pension of John C. Nelson (title amended);
H. R. 12410. A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary Nichols;
H. R. 10856. A bill granting a pension to Jacob Findley;
H. R. 12326. A bill granting an increase of pension to John Kirkham (title amended);
H. R. 14374. A bill granting a pension to Samantha Towner;
H. R. 10824. A bill granting an increase of pension to George E. Bump;
H. R. 12507. A bill granting an increase of pension Ebenezer W. Oakley;
H. R. 6186. A bill granting a pension to Carrie B. Farnham;
H. R. 14241. A bill granting an increase of pension to Peter Dugan;
H. R. 13450. A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Hunt (title amended);
H. R. 13052. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles K. Batey;
H. R. 13665. A bill granting an increase of pension to George R. Baldwin;
H. R. 3986. A bill granting a pension to Martha A. Cornish;
H. R. 14184. A bill granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Fogg;
H. R. 13886. A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry Rogers;
H. R. 11879. A bill to correct military record of Michael Mullet;
H. R. 13233. A bill granting a pension to William A. Nelson;
H. R. 13178. A bill granting a pension to William F. Bowden;
H. R. 8644. A bill granting a pension to John W. Thomas;
H. R. 11893. A bill granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Dennis, of Turin, Coweta County, Ga. (title amended);
H. R. 14224. A bill granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Tod;
H. R. 14251. A bill granting a pension to Hugh J. Reynolds;
H. R. 14234. A bill granting a pension to John Williamson;
H. R. 14359. A bill granting a pension to Luther G. Edwards;
H. R. 2783. A bill granting a pension to William Dixon;
H. R. 13683. A bill granting an increase of pension to Ella S. Mannix (title amended); and
H. R. 6414. A bill granting an increase of pension to William W. H. Davis.

SENATE BILL WITH AMENDMENT.

S. 4927. An act granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney.

SENATE BILLS WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

S. 2551. An act granting a pension to Amelia Engle;
S. 4706. An act granting an increase of pension to William Harrington;
S. 4732. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hazzard;
S. 3998. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Kimble;
S. 4871. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Worthen;
S. 4983. An act granting a pension to John W. Smoot;
S. 4655. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver K. Wyman;
S. 4862. An act granting an increase of pension to James Welch;
S. 1797. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Russell;
S. 3888. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Hubbard;
S. 5371. An act granting an increase of pension to Jonathan O. Thompson;
S. 2168. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Baldwin;
S. 2697. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Baldwin;
S. 4415. An act granting an increase of pension to Vesta A. Brown;
S. 4758. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Doane;
S. 4729. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp;
S. 4829. An act granting an increase of pension to Nimrod Headington;
S. 4853. An act granting an increase of pension to Amos Moulton;
S. 4712. An act granting an increase of pension to Eliphlet Noyes;
S. 5153. An act granting an increase of pension Eri W. Pinkham;
S. 2511. An act granting an increase of pension to William Phillips;
S. 1038. An act granting an increase of pension to Gustavus C. Pratt;
S. 5106. An act granting an increase of pension Horace L. Richardson;
S. 4790. An act granting a pension to Stephen A. Seavey;
S. 4730. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Youngs;
S. 2457. An act granting an increase of pension to Warren Y. Merchant;
S. 5209. An act granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Van Eaton;
S. 3551. An act granting an increase of pension to John P. Collier;
S. 4240. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin N. Perkins;
S. 712. An act granting an increase of pension to John Housiaux;
S. 4759. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Clark;
S. 4638. An act granting a pension to Helena Sudsburg;
S. 3063. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge;
S. 5759. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Crooker;
S. 5669. An act granting a pension to Charlotte M. Howe;
S. 4642. An act granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery;
S. 2535. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph;
S. 5670. An act granting a pension to Samuel H. Chamberlin;
S. 4766. An act granting an increase of pension to James P. McClure;
S. 5202. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie M. Wagner; and
S. 5152. An act granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin, alias Marion M. Martin.

HOUSE BILLS WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

H. R. 5152. A bill granting a pension to Mary Welch;
H. R. 14208. A bill granting an increase of pension to Alexander Murdock;
H. R. 11711. A bill granting an increase of pension to Isaac Gibson;
H. R. 13505. A bill granting an increase of pension to William F. Stanley;
H. R. 11252. A bill granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Gowdey; and
H. R. 11874. A bill granting an increase of pension to William McCord.

And that the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole be concurred in, and the bills do pass.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bills and amendments to their final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves the previous question on the bills and amendments to their final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

GRAZING LANDS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which has just come over from the Senate and is now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The joint resolution (S. R. 105) supplementing and modifying certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1903, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of the act "Making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," are hereby supplemented and modified as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is directed to make allotments in severalty to the Indians of the Spokane Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, and upon the completion of such allotments the President shall by proclamation give public notice thereof, whereupon the lands in said reservation not allotted to Indians or used or reserved by the Government, or occupied for school purposes, shall be opened to exploration, location, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws.

In addition to the allotment in severalty of lands in the Walker River Indian Reservation in the State of Nevada, the Secretary of the Interior shall, before any of said lands are opened to disposition under any public-land law, select and set apart for the use in common of the Indians of that reservation such an amount of nonirrigable grazing lands therein at one or more places as will subserve the reasonable requirements of said Indians for the grazing of live stock.

In addition to the allotments in severalty to the Uintah and White River Utes of the Uintah Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, the Secretary of the Interior shall, before any of said lands are opened to disposition under any public-land law, select and set apart for the use in common of the Indians of that reservation such an amount of nonirrigable grazing lands therein at one or more places as will subserve the reasonable requirements of said Indians for the grazing of live stock.

All allotments hereafter made to Uncompahgre Indians of lands in said Uintah Indian Reservation shall be confined to agricultural land which can be irrigated, and shall be on the basis of 80 acres to each head of a family and 40 acres to each other Indian, and no more. The grazing land selected and set apart as aforesaid in the Uintah Indian Reservation for the use in common of the Indians of that reservation shall be equally open to the use of all Uncompahgre Indians receiving allotments in said reservation of the reduced area here named.

In so far as not otherwise specially provided, all allotments in severalty to Indians outside of the Indian Territory shall be made in conformity to the provisions of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," and other general acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and shall be subject to all the restrictions and carry all the privileges incident to allotments made under said act and other general acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto.

The item of $70,064.48 appropriated by the act which is hereby supplemented and modified, to be paid to the Uintah and White River tribes of Ute Indians in satisfaction of certain claims named in said act shall be paid to the Indians entitled thereto without awaiting their action upon the proposed allotment in severalty of lands in that reservation and the restoration of the surplus lands to the public domain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what this means?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will attempt to tell the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is a very unusual proceeding, it seems to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will attempt to inform the gentleman briefly.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution refers entirely to amendments to the Indian appropriation bill, which amendments were put on in the Senate. They were none of them agreed to by the House conferees until it appeared to such conferees that we could not persuade the Senate conferees to recede. They were not provisions that the House had put into the bill originally at all. They were provisions that were not accepted by the House conferees until after a considerable struggle over them.

Finally the House conferees receded, as the gentleman from Tennessee knows conferees often have to do, even when the provisions on which they recede do not entirely accord with their views. Subsequently——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When and how has it been discovered now that there is something obnoxious in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I was just about to get to that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has the Senate reconsidered its amendments?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate has. The Senate has passed this resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the Senate has passed this resolution, but has the bill passed the Senate and gone beyond the power of the Senate to reconsider it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then the Senate has not reconsidered it?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate has passed this resolution, as I stated to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Senate has passed this resolution, but the bill itself has passed beyond the control of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill itself is in the hands of the President.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How has it been discovered now that there is something wrong with this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to tell the gentleman when he interrupted me with his interrogatory, and, if he will permit me, I will gladly tell him now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before the gentleman answers that will he also state if we have not already, since this bill passed beyond the control of the House and the Senate, passed a resolution through both Houses of Congress to correct errors in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not errors.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, we did so.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was then believed that would cover all the Senate amendment. Now, here the same provision is included in this resolution, because the House and the Senate had not got it in mind in the resolution which was passed the other day.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, then, you passed one resolution to do that. Now, the gentleman in a few days brought in a second resolution to correct errors in this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was not to correct errors; it was to change the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If there is no error in the bill, what is the use of correcting it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, my friend will not claim that everything must be an error that requires change.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why has not the President approved the bill and let it become law?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman would content himself a moment, I was about to state.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman knows very well that three joint resolutions have been brought in here to correct errors in a bill which this House passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has asked the gentleman from New York a question and does not wait until he can answer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, "the gentleman" will stop this by objecting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order. The gentleman from Tennessee will allow the Chair——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. "The gentleman from Tennessee" will respect the authority of the Chair and stop this dialogue by objecting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asked the gentleman from New York a question and will not allow him to answer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. "The gentleman" objects to any answer.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. That settles the question. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would be glad to answer any question.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 641. An act to establish an assay office at Portland, Oreg.—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

S. R. 103. Joint resolution providing for the binding and distribution of public documents held in the custody of the Superintendent of Documents unbound, upon orders of Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and officers of Congress, when such documents are not called for within two years after printing—to the Committee on Printing.

S. R. 105. Joint resolution supplementing and modifying certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1903—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

The following House bills with amendments favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole were severally considered, the amendments agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 4990. A bill granting an increase of pension to George F. Gregg;

H. R. 8149. A bill granting an increase of pension to James B. Martin;

H. R. 14146. A bill granting an increase of pension to John Murphy;
H. R. 12430. A bill granting a pension to Abner H. Lester;
H. R. 13068. A bill granting a pension to Julia B. Shurtleff (title amended);
H. R. 10339. A bill granting an increase of pension to John L. Moore;
H. R. 8573. A bill granting a pension to William McDaniel;
H. R. 12305. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles Olson;
H. R. 14012. A bill granting a pension to Fannie Reardon, widow of Patrick Reardon;
H. R. 8576. A bill granting a pension to John S. Upshaw;
H. R. 12968. A bill granting an increase of pension to John I. Mull;
H. R. 13594. A bill granting an increase of pension to Robert Hargraves (title amended);
H. R. 13944. A bill granting a pension to Margaret Ann West, a nurse of United States Volunteers (title amended);
H. R. 2477. A bill granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Zane;
H. R. 14221. A bill granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. McArthur;
H. R. 11339. A bill granting a pension to Augustus Blount;
H. R. 11453. A bill granting a pension to Catherine Freeman;
H. R. 11865. A bill granting an increase of pension to John A. Robertson;
H. R. 12424. A bill granting an increase of pension to Wallace K. May;
H. R. 12632. A bill granting an increase of pension to Bailey O. Bowden;
H. R. 14052. A bill granting an increase of pension to George Fusselman;
H. R. 13227. A bill granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Emery (title amended);
H. R. 3768. A bill granting an increase of pension to John W. Campbell;
H. R. 5205. A bill granting an increase of pension to Hiram S. Leffingwell;
H. R. 6991. A bill granting an increase of pension to Esek B. Chandler;
H. R. 8146. A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Owens;
H. R. 5446. A bill granting a pension to James M. Travis (title amended);
H. R. 9710. A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. Eagan;
H. R. 3770. A bill granting a pension to J. E. Dickey (title amended);
H. R. 8780. A bill granting an increase of pension to Pierson L. Shick;
H. R. 12009. A bill granting an increase of pension to George Baker;
H. R. 12019. A bill granting an increase of pension to William Lowe;
H. R. 14087. A bill granting a pension to Lizzie Dunlap;
H. R. 14144. A bill granting an increase of pension to Fannie S. Cross;
H. R. 10174. A bill granting a pension to James M. Harris (title amended);
H. R. 11250. A bill granting an increase of pension to Arthur L. Currie;
H. R. 5038. A bill granting an increase of pension to William H. Hudson;
H. R. 13946. A bill granting an increase of pension to Capt. Stephen B. Todd (title amended);
H. R. 14055. A bill granting an increase of pension to Samuel Brown;
H. R. 7760. A bill granting a pension to Thomas Graham (title amended);
H. R. 13675. A bill granting an increase of pension to George W. White;
H. R. 5866. A bill granting an increase of pension to William P. Schott (title amended);
H. R. 13613. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Howard;
H. R. 13999. A bill granting a pension to Dennis Cosier (title amended);
H. R. 13684. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Wright;
H. R. 5480. A bill increasing pension of John C. Nelson (title amended);
H. R. 12410. A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary Nichols;
H. R. 10856. A bill granting a pension to Jacob Findley;
H. R. 12326. A bill granting an increase of pension to John Kirkham (title amended);
H. R. 14374. A bill granting a pension to Samantha Towner;
H. R. 10824. A bill granting an increase of pension to George E. Bump;
H. R. 12507. A bill granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer W. Oakley;
H. R. 6186. A bill granting a pension to Carrie B. Farnham;
H. R. 14241. A bill granting an increase of pension to Peter Dugan;
H. R. 13450. A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Hunt (title amended);
H. R. 13052. A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles K. Batey;
H. R. 13665. A bill granting an increase of pension to George R. Baldwin;
H. R. 3986. A bill granting a pension to Martha A. Cornish;
H. R. 14184. A bill granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Fogg; and
H. R. 13886. A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry Rogers.

MICHAEL MULLET.

The bill (H. R. 11879) to correct the military record of Michael Mullet, reported favorably by the Committee of the Whole House with amendment, was considered, and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over until the other pension bills are passed.

Mr. SULZER. I object.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order yet.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage, and the gentleman from Iowa demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. HULL. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were—ayes 34, noes 17.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ADAMSON) there were—ayes 15, noes 14.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MARSHALL, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FOX, for ten days, on account of important business,

And then (at 4 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner-General of Immigration submitting a request for authority to expend from the immigrant fund a sum for improvement at Ellis Island Station—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WARNOCK, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12940) creating a commission to inquire into the condition of the colored people of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2194); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 640) to extend the provisions, limitations, and benefits of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2195); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12805) requiring the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company to extend its Eleventh street line, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2197); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. GOLDFOGLE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2317) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States, and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as he may be justly and equitably entitled to, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2196); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. BURKETT: A bill (H. R. 14691) to authorize the construction of a pontoon bridge across the Missouri River, in the county of Cass, in the State of Nebraska, and in the county of Mills, in the State of Iowa—to the Committee on Insterstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GIBSON: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 195) for the relief of the families of the miners recently killed by explosion of mines at Coal Creek, Tenn.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. NAPHEN: A resolution (H. Res. 268) requesting information from the Secretary of the Interior relating to leased Indian lands—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A resolution (H. Res. 269) that the United States should not accept from any foreign nation or erect in any public place any statue of any king, emperor, prince, or potentate who has ruled or is now ruling—to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 14692) granting an increase of pension to Ferdinand K. Capansky—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 14693) granting a pension to William Mathis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STORM: A bill (H. R. 14694) to provide an American register for the auxiliary schooner Grilse—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Resolutions of Central Trade and Labor Council of Connellsville, Pa., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELL: Resolutions of North Fork Post, No. 86, of Hotchkiss, Department of Colorado and Wyoming, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring House bill 3067, relating to pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CONRY: Resolutions of Board of Aldermen of the city of Boston, Mass., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Resolutions of Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association No. 41, of New York City, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DRAPER: Resolutions of Shirt, Waist, and Laundry Workers' Union No. 16, of Cohoes, N. Y., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GAINES of Tennessee: Petition of J. N. Hart, heir of John S. Hart, late of Robertson County, Tenn., asking that his claim be referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GORDON: Papers to accompany House bill 14653, granting an increase of pension to William L. Reck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Resolutions of United Mine Workers' Union No. 111, of Diamond, Iowa, favoring an educational qualification for immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. JACK: Resolutions of Encampment No. 55, Union Veteran Legion, Clarion, Pa., favoring House bill 3067, relating to pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of G. A. McLain and others of Indiana County, Pa., urging the passage of Senate bill 1890, the per-diem pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCALL: Resolutions of the board of aldermen of the city of Boston, Mass., favoring the passage of House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McDERMOTT: Petition of F. Randolph and other citizens of Jersey City, N. J., favoring the enactment of bill (H. R. 10793) forbidding railroad officials to separate passengers on account of race or color—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PUGSLEY: Resolutions of Tammany Hall Democratic Club of the Eleventh district of New York, Social Reform Club, and Clothing Cutters and Trimmers' Association, all of New York City, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of National Business League of Chicago, Ill., favoring the establishment of a department of commerce and industries—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ROBERTS: Resolutions of the Boston (Mass.) city government, urging the passage of House bill 7930, to regulate the hours of labor of post-office clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Resolutions of the Connecticut Electric Medical Association, favoring the establishment of a psychophysical laboratory—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SULZER: Resolutions of United Garment Workers and Clothing Cutters and Trimmers' Union of New York City and vicinity, in favor of the proposed increase of pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. THAYER: Resolutions of the board of aldermen of Boston, Mass., favoring the passage of House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WARNOCK: Resolutions of Mitchell Post, No. 593, Grand Army of the Republic, of Byhalia, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill 3067—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 26, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. W. E. PARSON, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

THE TRANSPORT SERVICE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 21, 1902, certain information relative to the Government transports and the transport service; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, a detailed statement relative to rented buildings occupied by the Treasury Department in the city of Washington; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Labor, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, certain information relative to quarters rented by the Department of Labor in the city of Washington, giving the location, floor space occupied, and annual rent thereof; which, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 1464) to establish storm-warning stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan; and

A bill (S. 3360) for the promotion of First Lieut. Joseph M. Simms, Revenue-Cutter Service.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2477) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Zane;

A bill (H. R. 3768) granting an increase of pension to John W. Campbell;

A bill (H. R. 3770) granting a pension to James E. Dickey;

A bill (H. R. 3986) granting a pension to Martha A. Cornish;

A bill (H. R. 4990) granting an increase of pension to George F. Gregg;

A bill (H. R. 5038) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hudson;

A bill (H. R. 5205) granting an increase of pension to Hiram S. Leffingwell;

A bill (H. R. 5446) granting an increase of pension to James M. Travis;

A bill (H. R. 5480) granting an increase of pension to John C. Nelson;

A bill (H. R. 5866) granting an increase of pension to William P. Schott, alias Jacob Schott;

A bill (H. R. 6186) granting a pension to Carrie B. Farnham;

A bill (H. R. 6991) granting an increase of pension to Ezek B. Chandler;

A bill (H. R. 7760) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Graham;

A bill (H. R. 8146) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Owens;

A bill (H. R. 8149) granting an increase of pension to James B. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 8573) granting a pension to William McDaniel;

A bill (H. R. 8576) granting a pension to John S. Upshaw;

A bill (H. R. 8780) granting an increase of pension to Pierson L. Shick;

A bill (H. R. 9710) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. Eagon;

A bill (H. R. 10174) granting a pension to Jennie M. Sawyer;

A bill (H. R. 10339) granting an increase of pension to John L. Moore;

A bill (H. R. 10824) granting an increase of pension to George E. Bump;

A bill (H. R. 10856) granting a pension to Jacob Findley;

A bill (H. R. 11250) granting an increase of pension to Arthur L. Currie;

A bill (H. R. 11339) granting a pension to Augustus Blount;

A bill (H. R. 11453) granting a pension to Catharine Freeman;

A bill (H. R. 11599) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions;

A bill (H. R. 11865) granting an increase of pension to John A. Robertson;

A bill (H. R. 12009) granting an increase of pension to George Baker;

A bill (H. R. 12019) granting an increase of pension to William Lowe;

A bill (H. R. 12305) granting an increase of pension to Charles Olson;

A bill (H. R. 12326) granting a pension to John A. Kirkham;

A bill (H. R. 12410) granting an increase of pension to Mary Nichols;

A bill (H. R. 12424) granting an increase of pension to Wallace K. May;

A bill (H. R. 12430) granting a pension to Abner H. Lester;

A bill (H. R. 12507) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer W. Oakley;

A bill (H. R. 12632) granting an increase of pension to Bailey O. Bowden;

A bill (H. R. 12968) granting an increase of pension to John T. Mull;

A bill (H. R. 13052) granting an increase of pension to Charles K. Batey;

A bill (H. R. 13063) granting an increase of pension to Julia B. Shurlett;

A bill (H. R. 13168) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. 13227) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth J. Emery;

A bill (H. R. 13450) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hunt;

A bill (H. R. 13594) granting an increase of pension to Robert Hargreaves;

A bill (H. R. 13613) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Howard;

A bill (H. R. 13665) granting an increase of pension to George R. Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. 13675) granting an increase of pension to George W. White;

A bill (H. R. 13684) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Wright;

A bill (H. R. 13886) granting an increase of pension to Henry Rogers;

A bill (H. R. 13944) granting a pension to Margaret Ann West;

A bill (H. R. 13946) granting an increase of pension to Stephen B. Todd;

A bill (H. R. 13999) granting an increase of pension to Dennis Cosier;

A bill (H. R. 14012) granting a pension to Fannie Reardon;

A bill (H. R. 14052) granting an increase of pension to George Fusselman;

A bill (H. R. 14055) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Brown;

A bill (H. R. 14087) granting a pension to Lizzie Dunlap;

A bill (H. R. 14144) granting an increase of pension to Fannie S. Cross;

A bill (H. R. 14146) granting an increase of pension to John Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 14184) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Fogg;

A bill (H. R. 14221) granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. McArthur;

A bill (H. R. 14241) granting an increase of pension to Peter Dugan; and

A bill (H. R. 14374) granting a pension to Samantha Towner.

The foregoing House pension bills were subsequently read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of the Audubon Society of the State of New York, of Gouverneur, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of game in Alaska, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a memorial of the Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor, of New York City, remonstrating against the operations of the so-called beef trust; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the United Garment Workers' Local Union of New York City, praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the compensation of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kentucky, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of Local Division No. 83, Order of Railway Conductors, of Galesburg; of Local Division No. 294, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Chicago, and of Lodge No. 470, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Murphysboro, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MASON presented a petition of the board of directors of the Women's Club of Peoria, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying for the repeal of the duty on beef, veal, mutton, and pork; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Lodge No. 285, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Chillicothe; of sundry citizens of La Salle; of Local Division No. 302, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Chicago; of Lodge No. 138, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Freeport; of Lodge No. 116, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Mattoon, and of Lodge No. 4, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of Local Union No. 444, United Mine Workers of America, of Frontenac, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-injunction bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Alexandria, Ind., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called anticanteen law; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 5964) to provide for rebuilding the Aqueduct Bridge, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 84) to permit the erection and use for lighting purposes of overhead electric wires outside of the fire limits, east of Rock Creek, District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 21st instant, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to advance, on requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in the manner now provided by law, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the expenses of the District of Columbia, as already provided by law, etc., intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on March 10, 1902, proposing to appropriate $10,000 for fireproof bookshelves and file cases in the office of the recorder of deeds, and also $10,000 for reindexing old records and for tract or property indexes, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 3d instant, proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase of a site and toward the erection of a building for a business high school, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it with an amenement, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5893) granting an increase of pension to Willie Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 11686) granting a pension to Eleanore F. Adams; and

A bill (H. R. 13296) granting an increase of pension to Francis Scott.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5361) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Johnston, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5491) granting a pension to John R. Sandsbury, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 29th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $25,000 to aid in the reconstruction of the building for the Homeopathic Hospital, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 17th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $5,500 for 11 medical inspectors of public schools at $500 each, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 6th instant, proposing to appropriate $4,300 for paving Wyoming avenue west of Connecticut avenue, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 6th instant, authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant not more than thirty days' leave of absence to each per diem employee who has been continuously in the service of the District for one year, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 12th ultimo, authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to acquire for and in the name of the District of Columbia Analostan Island, in the Potomac River, near the city of Washington, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. STEWART on the 21st instant, proposing to increase the salary of the sanitary and food inspector of the health department, District of Columbia, from $1,600 to $2,400, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BARD, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3248) to establish a fish hatchery and fish station in the State of Maryland, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5676) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, to submit an adverse report thereon. I move at the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who introduced it, that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the 500 copies of Senate Document No. 330, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, heretofore ordered printed for the use of the delegates to the Second International Conference of American States, be bound 100 copies in half morocco and 400 copies in cloth.

EDWIN YOUNG.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5924) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Young, to report it with an amendment, and, as this is a very urgent case, I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, in line 6, after the word "Company," to strike out "C" and insert "A;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edwin Young, late of Company A, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PATTERSON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5965) granting an increase of pension to John Wilder;

A bill (S. 5966) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Leimer; and

A bill (S. 5967) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Craig.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 5968) to authorize the promotion and retirement of the present senior major-general of the Army; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. QUAY. In connection with the bill I present a transcript of the military record of John R. Brooke, major-general, United States Army. I move that the transcript be printed as a document, and that it be referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5969) construing the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1879, exempting from the limitations named therein the claims to pension by or in behalf of children under 16 years of age; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (for Mr. McMILLAN) introduced a bill (S. 5970) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Florence Crittenton Mission;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 5971) for the relief of the Free and Accepted Order of Masons in the town of Keysville, Charlotte County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BARD introduced a bill (S. 5972) granting an increase of pension to D. Rodney Browne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5973) for the relief of the widow of Joseph Culley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5974) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Wardle (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5975) granting a pension to Sarah A. Adams; and

A bill (S. 5976) granting an increase of pension to Milton Frazier (with accompanying papers).

Mr. MALLORY (for Mr. VEST) introduced a bill (S. 5977) for the relief of the estates of William Curry, William Pinkney, and James Filor, all deceased, partners in the ownership in real estate; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 5978) granting a pension to G. F. Duke; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5979) granting a pension to Katie L. McBane;

A bill (S. 5980) granting an increase of pension to Jechonias Rutledge; and

A bill (S. 5981) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Miller.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 5982) to correct the military record of George R. Sturgeon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DIETRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for grading, regulating, and improving Sixteenth street NW. from Morris street northward, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture for the improvement of that portion of Potomac Park lying south of the railway tracks, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Board of Education for vacation schools, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors by any person on board a vessel belonging to the Navy or within the limits of navy-yards and stations or marine barracks, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WETMORE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 toward the erection of a plant for housing and storing torpedo vessels, naval coal depot, Narragansett Bay, R. I., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of 11 supervising principals of the public schools in the District of Columbia from $2,000 to $2,500 each, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH M. SIMMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3360) for the promotion of First Lieut. Joseph M. Simms, Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. FRYE, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

STORM-WARNING STATIONS AT SOUTH MANITOU ISLAND.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1464) to establish storm-warning stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan; which was, in line 8, after the word "telegraph," to insert "cable."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11599) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 13168) to establish an additional life-saving station at Monomoy Island, Massachusetts, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

STATEMENTS BY FILIPINOS.

Mr. HOAR. I introduce a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate whether there be any law or regulation in force in the Philippine Islands which will prevent any native of those islands who may so desire, not under arrest and against whom no charge of any offense against the United States is pending, from coming to the United States and stating his views or desires as to the interest of his people to the President or either House of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution may go over. I have simply heard it read, and I should like to examine it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to state that it is merely an inquiry, there being a good deal of public want of understanding on the subject as to whether there is now any law in force in the Philippine Islands which will prevent any peaceable Filipino, against whom there is no pending charge whatever, either of resistance to the United States or anything else, from coming to the United States if he sees fit.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt that the resolution is absolutely desirable and unobjectionable, but it is an important one, and I should like to have an opportunity to look at it. I should like to have it go over for a day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO SUBJECT OF LYNCHINGS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, and after it is read I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to be permitted to make some brief observations on the subject.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby directed to make inquiry into the subject of lynchings in the United States and to report to the Senate whether, under the laws and Constitution of the county, there is any remedy for the evil.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent, before the resolution shall be disposed of, to make some brief observations on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, it is before the Senate, and the Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in offering the resolution that has just been read I am not unmindful of the fact that I take the risk of being charged with a purpose to precipitate a sectional controversy, but I beg to assure the Senate that nothing is farther from my thoughts. Indeed, statistics which I shall submit will show that lynchings have not by any means been confined to the South, several horrible cases having occurred in the North, and it is equally true that white men as well as black have been lynched. The truth is that all over our land there is intense interest in this matter, many good people bitterly complaining that the strong arm of the Federal authority should be used to suppress the evil, and, in view of that fact, it seems to me important that the Judiciary Committee of this body shall take the matter into careful consideration, with a view to giving the country definite information on that point. If the strong arm of the Federal power can be reached out and take cognizance of this abnormal sociological condition, it is well that the country should know that fact, and if we are powerless to do anything, except under the operation of State laws, it is equally desirable that that fact should be made known to all our people. During the entire period of my service in this body I have been receiving letters on this subject, and it will be a relief to me personally, as I doubt not it will be to other Senators, to be able to furnish an authoritative statement to those who desire accurate information concerning the relations of the Federal Government to this heinous crime.

While the number of lynchings in the years 1885, 1886, 1888, 1889, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1897 were greater than last year, the reports show an increase in 1900 of 8 over those of 1899. A still further increase must be noted in 1901, an increase in brutality as well as in number, the record standing 107 in 1899, 115 in 1900, and 135 in 1901. The following table, taken from the Chicago Tribune of January 1, 1902, shows the number of lynchings in the last seventeen years, and will be of value to those engaged in the study of this branch of criminology:

1885	184	1895	171
1886	138	1896	131
1887	122	1897	166
1888	142	1898	127
1889	176	1899	107
1890	127	1900	115
1891	192	1901	135
1892	235
1893	200	Total	2,658
1894	190

The lynchings in the various States and Territories were as follows:

Alabama	15	New York	0
Arkansas	5	Nevada	0
California	6	North Carolina	1
Colorado	0	North Dakota	0
Connecticut	0	Ohio	0
Delaware	0	Oregon	0
Florida	7	Pennsylvania	0
Georgia	14	Rhode Island	0
Idaho	1	South Carolina	5
Illinois	0	South Dakota	0
Indiana	1	Tennessee	12
Iowa	0	Texas	11
Kansas	2	Vermont	0
Kentucky	7	Virginia	2
Louisiana	15	West Virginia	1
Maine	0	Wisconsin	0
Maryland	0	Washington	0
Massachusetts	0	Wyoming	0
Michigan	0	Arizona	1
Minnesota	0	District of Columbia	0
Mississippi	16	New Mexico	0
Missouri	6	Utah	0
Montana	4	Indian Territory	1
Nebraska	0	Oklahoma	2
New Jersey	0	Alaska	0
New Hampshire	0

I am glad to note that not a single lynching has occurred in the New England States.

Of these lynchings, 121 occurred in the South and 14 in the North. Of the total number, 107 were negroes, 26 whites, 1 Indian, and 1 Chinaman. The alleged crimes for which they were lynched were as follows: Murder, 39; criminal assault, 19; theft, 12; murderous assault, 9; attempted criminal assault, 8; cattle and horse stealing, 7; complicity in murder, 6; quarrel over profit sharing, 5; arson, 4; suspected murder, 3; suspected criminal assault, 1; murder and criminal assault, 1; train wrecking; 1; alleged theft, 1; keeping a gambling house, 1; suspected of killing cattle, 1; resisting arrest, 1; insulting a white woman, 1; burglary, 1; forcing a white boy to commit crime, 1. Besides these, 9 were lynched because of race prejudice, 3 for unknown reasons, and there was 1 case of mistaken identity.

It will be observed, Mr. President, which I think is contrary to the general opinion, that a comparatively small proportion of the lynchings were for criminal assault, the only offense that, so far as I know, has been considered of sufficient gravity by anyone to justify such action. Many of them were for comparatively mild offenses, the fury of the mob being entirely without reason or justification. The terrible cruelties inflicted upon the wretched creatures who were helpless in the hands of infuriated men and women have been such as to shock the moral sensibilities of our people, and to lead many thinking persons to almost despair of the efficacy of law and order in our country.

The papers of this morning contain an account of the lynching of a white man in Missouri, the victim being a murderer. He was in custody, awaiting trial, but was summarily dealt with by a mob, who apparently could not wait to have the law take its usual course.

As an illustration of the horrible cruelties sometimes inflicted by those who take the law into their own hands, I beg to request that the Secretary shall read the following account from the Washington Post of Friday last.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Read headlines and all.

The Secretary read as follows:

ATROCITY IN TEXAS—NEGRO BURNED TO DEATH BY PITILESS EXECUTIONERS—SLOW TORTURE AT STAKE—CLAMOROUS CROWD NUMBERING THOUSANDS WITNESS THE BURNING—HUNTED DOWN AND IDENTIFIED, DUDLEY MORGAN ADMITS HIS GUILT, AND THE HUSBAND OF THE PRISONER'S VICTIM APPLIES THE TORCH—CHARRED REMAINS EAGERLY SOUGHT BY SOUVENIR HUNTERS—HIS CAPTORS HELD UP OVER HEADS OF CROWD AND PHOTOGRAPHED.

LONGVIEW, TEX., May 22, 1902.

The culmination of a man hunt which has been in progress since last Saturday was reached to-day when Dudley Morgan, colored, who assaulted Mrs. McKee, wife of a Texas and Pacific foreman, at Lansing, Tex., was burned at the stake near Lansing.

It was learned this morning that the negro had been captured and was being taken to Lansing for identification, and by 11 o'clock great throngs had gathered at the Lansing switch and, looking over the ground, decided to make arrangements to burn the negro about a quarter of a mile away on the line of the county road.

The place of execution decided upon was an open plot, smooth and covered with grass, being hedged in by high trees, which formed an opening 200 yards wide and 300 yards long. The trees were literally lined with people an hour before the negro arrived.

At 11 o'clock the train bringing the negro and his captors arrived in Marshall, near which place he was captured, and was met by a great crowd of people. Many more boarded the train at intermediate points and when it arrived at Lansing every car was crowded. Waiting at Lansing was another large crowd from Long View and the surrounding country.

HIS IDENTITY ESTABLISHED.

The prisoner was taken from the train to the section house, which stands close to the track, and positively identified by Mrs. McKee and several negroes who worked on the section with Morgan. The negro was escorted by 200 men, armed with Winchesters, to the place of execution. As he was chained to the stake he said he desired to make a statement. The crowd surged around him, and those in charge tried in vain to make them stand back and keep quiet while the negro talked. The negro made a statement in which he implicated another negro named Franklin Heard, saying he (Heard) was to get part of the money which was to be stolen.

Morgan confessed to having committed the crime, and after having been securely tied to the stake with his hands and legs free, the members of the mob began to take railroad ties from a fire already started and burn out his eyes. They held the burning timbers to his neck, and, after burning his clothes off, to other parts of the body. The negro screamed in agony. He was tortured in a slow and painful manner, with the crowd clamoring continuously for a slower death, and the negro, writhing and groaning, begged piteously to be shot.

Mrs. McKee was brought to the scene in a carriage, accompanied by four other women, and an effort was made to get the carriage close enough for her to see the negro. The crowd was so dense, however, that it was impossible.

CREMATION FOLLOWS TORTURE.

Persons held each other on their shoulders, taking turn about looking at the awful sight. The negro's head finally dropped and the ties were piled around and over him. In half an hour only the trunk of the negro remained. As soon as the heat would permit, parts of his skull and body were gathered up by some and carried away. As the fire died down the crowd took the two men who first caught the negro and held them up over their heads, while they held their Winchesters in their hands, and were photographed.

Section Foreman McKee, husband of the woman assaulted, applied the match to the faggots. Many women were present from the surrounding country, but owing to the great crush they had very little opportunity to see the negro until the heat forced the crowd to widen the circle and the flames leaped over him.

The railroads brought crowds of people to Longview Junction, where they boarded a limited train which does not ordinarily stop at Lansing. The engineer was forced at the point of a Winchester to stop at the scene of the lynching, however, and the mob disembarked.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Spanish inquisition does not furnish a case exceeding in horrible and inhuman torture the one just read, and Fox's Book of Martyrs is tame in comparison. It will be noted that it did not occur in the interior of Africa or in the islands of the sea, but in Christian America, where the highest principles of an enlightened civilization are supposed to be exemplified. The whole wretched business is a disgrace to American manhood, in face of which the alleged atrocities in the Philippine Islands pale into insignificance. I apprehend that it will be said that the Government is powerless and that the State has exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses. Very likely that is so, and if so, it places upon the American people the responsibility of arousing public sentiment, in the North as well as in the South, to the end that such inhuman and barbarous cruelties may come to an end and the majesty of the law be upheld and vindicated.

Now, Mr. President, I beg to express the hope that the resolution may be passed, and that the Committee on the Judiciary may in due time make report on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for the adoption of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He asks for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do, of course.

Mr. BAILEY. I think I should like to say something on the resolution before it is adopted. I will say now that I have no idea of being drawn into any sectional debate by the Senator from New Hampshire or any other Senator on this floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Texas will permit——

Mr. BAILEY. I am more than content to let the country judge the men who seek to provoke that kind of a controversy. But the legal inquiry whether Congress has any power to go into the States and take charge of their peace and good order presents a question which I shall probably desire to discuss, and I ask that the resolution may lie over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, two points in answer to the Senator from Texas.

First, the Senator from New Hampshire explicitly disclaimed any desire or wish to provoke a sectional discussion, and undertook to make that statement very clear in the moderate observations he made on the subject.

As to the power of the Federal Government, the Senator from New Hampshire ventures to say that he very much questions it, but in view of the fact that many good people in the country felt that the Federal power ought to be exercised he would be glad if the Committee on the Judiciary would give an authoritative statement on that point.

That was all the purpose I had in view. The Senator is wrong in suggesting that I had any purpose of introducing anything that would result in a sectional controversy. I had no such purpose, and I beg for the third time to disclaim having had any such purpose.

Of course, Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to be heard on the resolution it ought to lie on the table. I had hoped the Senate would let it go to the committee, and when the committee made its report if there was any reason then for discussion it might be had at that time, but of course I wish to do whatever the Senator from Texas desires to have done with the matter.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, there can be no reasonable objection, I take it, to a report from the Committee on the Judiciary on this subject, because I am sure that there could be but one conclusion reached by that committee. But if in the course of its investigation and its report it is undertaken to parade before the country all the lynchings and burnings that have occurred in one section for a nameless offense and the murders of women and the abductions of children that have occurred in other sections of the country, it seems to me the only result would be to make us think less of ourselves as a people, and I have little disposition to indulge in that work. For that reason I shall probably resist the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution lies over.

Mr. CULBERSON subsequently said: In my absence from the Chamber the Senator from New Hampshire, I am informed, read or caused to be read, a newspaper account of an act of mob violence in my State, to which my colleague has responded. I desire in this connection to have read at the desk a dispatch in the Washington Post from Leavenworth, Kans., dated January 15, 1901. I ask that it may be read and that it be taken in connection with what has been read by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that there may be read a dispatch in a newspaper which he sends to the desk. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Texas whether it relates to the same matter which we have had under consideration?

Mr. CULBERSON. It relates to a similar matter. It bears upon the subject the Committee on the Judiciary is requested to investigate.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEGRO BURNED BY MOB—BOUND TO STAKE, SATURATED WITH OIL, AND SET ON FIRE—SAVAGE DEED AT LEAVENWORTH—JAIL DOORS FORCED AND FRED ALEXANDER DRAGGED TO SCENE OF HIS ATTACK ON MISS EVA ROTH, WHERE A CROWD OF 8,000 PERSONS WITNESSED HIS DEATH IN FLAMES—AUTHORITIES SEEMINGLY HELPLESS TO STEM THE OUTBURST OF PUBLIC FURY.

LEAVENWORTH, KANS., January 15, 1901.

Fred Alexander, the negro who on Saturday evening attempted to assault Miss Eva Roth, and who was supposed to have assaulted and killed Pearl Forbes in this city in November last, was taken from the sheriff's guard by a mob to-day and burned at the stake at the scene of his crime, half a dozen blocks from the center of the city. Probably 8,000 people witnessed the lynching.

The negro was taken from his cell at the State penitentiary at 3 o'clock this afternoon, placed in a hack, and brought to town. Fifty deputy marshals surrounded him, and Deputy Sheriffs Stance, Myers, and Thomas Brown sat in the hack on either side of him. There were 50 buggies and wagons in the procession which followed the hack. The trip to town was made quietly, and there was no attempt to create a disturbance on the road.

When the corner of Fourth and Olive streets was reached, the police who were in the hack following the one in which Alexander was concealed jumped out and chased several negroes. This created a diversion, which attracted the attention of everyone, and during the excitement the hack in which Alexander was concealed was frantically driven to the county jail, where he was locked in a cell just as the mob reached the doors. All the doors of the jail were then locked.

FORCED AN ENTRANCE TO THE JAIL.

The crowd first attempted to gain admission by peaceful means, but Sheriff Everhardy refused to deliver the negro. Then the crowd pushed its way to the side door, and, using one man as a battering ram, the door was forced from its hinges. Then the crowd surged into the corridors by the narrow doorway. A huge iron bar was secured and the iron door of the cell room attacked. This was finally bent so that it could be forced far enough back for men to climb over it. Several gained an entrance in this manner. In the meantime the crowd had pushed down the side gate of the stockade, and in a moment there was a yelling pack in the jail yard.

The side door, which was made of heavy sheet iron, was then next the object of attack. Several men had provided themselves with sledge hammers and chisels, and it was the work of only a few moments before the hinges were cut from inside, and off came the door. More men pushed inside, the iron bar was again called into play, and the doors of the cell room broken down. Then the cry went up:

"He is not here; he has escaped."

"Search the court-house; there is a tunnel between, and he has been taken out that way."

Then a man with sharp eyes espied a shapeless mass crouched down in one corner of the dark cell. An exultant cry went up:

"He is here; we've got him; bring the keys."

STRUGGLE IN THE NEGRO'S CELL.

Several keys were found lying around the corridors, and these were passed in to the crowd. They would not work. Then again a sledge hammer was called into action, and in five minutes the heavy lock had been broken off. A yell of terror issued from the cell. The tension at this time was so great that strong men filled the corridors with hysterical laughter. Outside the crowd was yelling itself hoarse. Then into the cell rushed those who were nearest the door.

The mob issued forth in a moment, dragging the negro by the coat collar. He had been struck over the head with a hammer, but was still conscious. Men fought to get at him, and, infuriated, struck savagely at him, hitting only his captors, who guarded him well.

"Don't hurt him," they cried.

"We'll burn him!" was the response.

Alexander and his captors were surrounded by a solid wall of human flesh. Across Third street and up the hill into the court-house yard they dragged him.

"Confess before we harm you," said they.

DECLARES HIS INNOCENCE.

"I am innocent. I am dying for what another man did. I see lots of my friends here; they know I did not do it. If I had been guilty I would have said so at the penitentiary, and would have stayed there for life. The warden told me so. The policemen told me so. Would not I have told them if I was guilty?"

"You lie!" they cried, and one huge fellow struck Alexander in the forehead with his fist three times. This seemed not to have the slightest effect on the negro.

When he had finished talking a move was made for a large cottonwood tree in a corner of the court-house yard. The negro was backed up against it and a chain was hunted for. One could not be found, and while they waited Alexander was given another chance to confess.

"My God, men!" he cried in his agony, "I have told you that I am innocent. I can't tell you any more. I didn't do it."

"He lies! Burn him!" cried the mob.

"Take him where he committed the murder," suggested one.

The suggestion met with instant approval, and the crowd, carrying the negro, pushed on toward Fourth street. There were many wagons standing about, and into one of these they threw him. The wagon was started for the vicinity of Lawrence avenue and Spruce street, followed by the crowd.

WHERE PEARL FORBES WAS SLAIN.

At 5.15 o'clock Alexander was brought to the scene of the murder of Pearl Forbes, at the corner of Lawrence avenue and Spruce street. The exact spot where the murdered girl was found was located by the leaders of the crowd, and there a semicircle was formed. Alexander was brought up in a wagon with a dozen men. The wagon was stopped in front of the ravine, and, surrounded by the crowd, the leader of the men, who held Alexander, called for silence. The roar ceased and Alexander was shoved forward into full view of the crowd. A howl went up, which was quickly hushed, as the prisoner raised his shackled hands and began to speak. Twice he started, but the crowd drowned his trembling voice.

"You are going to kill me, whatever I say," he said, "but you men are wrong. I want to tell you right now you've got the wrong man. I did not do that, and some day you men here will run up against the man who did. I know it ain't any use to say so, for you're going to kill me, but I didn't do it."

The men standing behind Alexander then shoved him from the wagon, and the roar from the crowd drowned every other sound. The negro was quickly driven down the embankment to the pile of wood, with his hands still shackled, and there bound to the stake.

Long before the wagon containing the doomed man arrived at the place a crowd had gathered. Many carried rails and boards. Several seized railroad irons and carried them to the ravine. The spot chosen for the stake was the exact one on which Pearl Forbes's body was found on the morning of November 7.

The first thing done was to plant a railroad iron upright in the mud. This was made fast to cross irons, firmly bound to the upright iron with wire. Around the improvised stake wood and boards were piled. To this the man was dragged and chained in a standing position to the upright railroad iron. Chains and irons were wrapped about him, and, with his hands still shackled, he was made fast to the post. Coal oil was then poured over him.

Before the match was applied John Forbes, father of the murdered girl, stepped up to Alexander and said:

"Are you guilty of murdering my daughter?"

"I don't know what you have me here for," said Alexander.

Forbes replied: "For killing my girl on this very spot."

"Mr. Forbes, if that's your name, you have the wrong man," said the negro.

"Burn him; burn him!" cried the crowd.

"Gentlemen, you've got lots of time," said Alexander. "You're burning an innocent man. You took advantage of me. You gave me no show. Can I see my mother?"

A man in the crowd called for the mother, but she was not present.

Alexander then said: "Will you let me shake hands with all my friends?"

"You have no friends in this crowd, you d——d beast," said one of the men having charge of the negro. "If you have anything to say, say it in a hurry."

Another man then stepped up and said to Alexander: "Make your peace with your God, nigger, for you will surely die."

MATCH APPLIED BY PEARL'S FATHER.

Coal oil was then applied for the second time, and while it was being done Alexander called to acquaintances in the crowd and said good-bye to them. He did not seem to realize that he was to be burned at the stake, and talked rationally until John Forbes, the father of the murdered girl, lighted a match. Again Alexander was asked to make a confession, but he replied that he had nothing to say.

As the flames leaped about him Alexander turned a ghastly hue and, clasping his hands together, began to sway to and fro while the crowd yelled.

In five minutes the negro was hanging limp and lifeless by the chains that bound him. As soon as the crowd saw that life was extinct it began to slowly disperse. Hundreds, however, stayed to the last.

Men kept piling on wood all the time until about 7 o'clock, when the flames were allowed to die down. From 6 to 8 o'clock there was a continuous stream of people going to the scene of the burning. These were persons who had been unable to get away from their work in the afternoon and who were determined not to miss seeing the awful spectacle.

When the fire had died down sufficiently to allow the crowd to approach the remains of Alexander there was a wild scramble to obtain relics. Bits of charred flesh, pieces of chain, scraps of wood, everything that could possibly serve as a souvenir, was seized on with morbid eagerness.

After Alexander's arrest he was taken before Miss Roth, who identified him. Since then a mob has surrounded the penitentiary day and night. To-day the crowd became so formidable that Governor Stanley, in response to a telegram from Warden Tomlinson, ordered two companies of militia to be in readiness to start for Leavenworth at a moment's notice.

Governor Stanley ordered Warden Tomlinson to refuse to turn Alexander over to the sheriff unless he agreed in writing to protect him.

About 9 o'clock the coroner and two policemen took the remains to an undertaker's establishment. The coroner's jury has been named, but the inquest will not be held for a few days.

The remains were viewed by thousands, and up to the time they were taken away carriages and vehicles were continually passing by the spot.

PROMISED TO PROTECT PRISONER.

The sheriff was taken sick during the excitement at the county jail and is now confined to his bed. Admittance to the room is denied, and a statement from him to-night is unobtainable. The sheriff asked the governor for the State militia by telephone, and the governor replied that he would send the militia, but would require a written request or a telegraph message. This, for some reason, it is said, was not sent.

There was no request made for the protection of United States troops from Fort Leavenworth. The sheriff, upon requesting the delivery of Alexander to him, said that he thought he would be able to protect the life of the prisoner, and the warden, upon this assurance, turned him over.

Just before the party left the penitentiary for the jail the warden requested and received the following receipt for the delivery of Alexander:

"Received from J. B. Tomlinson, warden of Kansas State penitentiary, the body of one Fred Alexander, who has been in custody of said warden for safe keeping since 10 p. m. January 12, 1901. I hereby represent to said Tomlinson that I am prepared to and will give protection to the life and body of said Alexander against mob violence to the full extent of the powers vested in me by law.

"PETER EVERHARDY, Sheriff."

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word, Mr. President. I supposed that the resolution which I introduced had gone over, and I left the Senate Chamber. I observe that what has just been read are the details of a case of burning, I think, in the State of Kansas. Am I correct? I will ask the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. You are correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the observations I made I stated that lynchings had occurred in the North as well as in the South, of white men as well as of colored men. I cited the fact that there had been lynchings in several of the Northern States. I did deprecate the practice, the evil, as I called it, and I certainly am quite as much opposed to it in one section of the country as in another. It is not a sectional matter, and I certainly did not intend to make it appear that such was the fact.

I am glad the Senator from Texas has put this case in the RECORD. It is a horrible case, as I recall it, and shows what the passions of men will do when they take the law into their own hands, which I always deprecate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am certainly glad to hear the condemnation of this lynching in Kansas by the Senator from New Hampshire, but I regret exceedingly that he saw fit to present the horrible details of only one case, and that reported from my State.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that that is the only one I had at hand. If I had had this one, which I had a vague recollection of, I should certainly have put it into the RECORD likewise, because, perhaps, in atrocity it excels the one I did put into the RECORD.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will further say to the Senator that if he has occasion hereafter to make any remarks upon this subject I can furnish him detailed accounts in other Northern States of similar occurrences, which he can read in connection with his remarks if he desires.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be obliged to the Senator for any help he may render me, but I think when the Senator reads the RECORD he will not be very much disturbed over what I have done on this question. I did it on my own responsibility and in answer to the demands of as good people as there are in this country. If my word is not to be taken that I had no purpose of doing injustice to any section of the country or any State in the country, of course the matter must go without further discussion on my part.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to say one or two words on this matter, as it has been proposed to send the subject to the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is not before the Senate, and debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose all the members of this body would sincerely regret any necessity for reciting in any large numbers the details, so terrible and revolting, of transactions such as have been referred to. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], with great propriety and moderation, confined himself to one single example of the evil which he seeks to reach, if it can be reached under the constitutional authority of Congress. I suppose the representative of no State and of no section, if there be such in this country, will, after reflection, be willing to treat the allusion to an offense of that kind as a sectional attack. It would be a terrible plea of guilty, which, I am sure, the representatives of no part of the American Union will ever make or could ever justly make. So I hope that if the Senate or the Judiciary Committee find it a duty to discuss our constitutional power over this matter, it will be discussed as a question of constitutional law, of constitutional power, of constitutional duty, without heat and without anger; and I am sure that no Senator will question what I say when I say that such a recital such as that we have listened to, coming one from one side of this Chamber and the other from the other, thrills with horror every generous and brave heart. I would not do my worst enemy the wrong to doubt what must be his feeling on such a matter as that.

Mr. President, I perhaps ought to state what did not at the time come with much emphasis to the attention of the Senate, that the Judiciary Committee have had before them this question in one of its branches at the present session. A bill directly providing for the trial and punishment of this class of offenses in the courts of the United States was presented to the Senate, drawn by a very able and eminent lawyer, formerly an attorney-general of Massachusetts, with a very able brief, which he prepared. He thought if Congress were to determine that the States did not in fact provide for the victims of such offenses the protection of the law, that that opinion entertained by Congress would be a proper foundation for the exertion of authority here. The committee were not able to take that view, and I think unanimously—though I can not affirm now what members of the committee were and were not absent—I was instructed to make a report by all the members who were present to that effect, and to recommend the indefinite postponement of the measure; which was done by the Senate.

Of course we all remember the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the kindred question, if it be a kindred question, at any rate a question which has come up as affecting the colored people primarily, that the mere fact, if it were found to exist, that the colored people in some cases were deprived of their right to vote would not warrant a taking jurisdiction of that subject by Congress, unless something were established which enabled the court to affirm in support of such legislation that by the concerted purpose and affirmative action of the State they were deprived of the right because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. That is in general the doctrine which I understand our Supreme Court have asserted.

The question whether that leaves to Congress any power at all over those two cases, the denial of the right to vote at elections and the inflicting without law cruel and unusual punishments, or any punishment at all, upon offenders of a particular race, is a very serious one.

I have been inclined to think, without committing myself now to an opinion, that we might pass a law which should provide for a trial of such an offense in the United States court, making it, however, essential to conviction that the jury who tried the case should, so far as the matter was a question of fact, find also that the State where the offense was committed in fact denied to the person who was the victim of the offense the equal protection of the law; that, so far as the matter was a matter of law, it ought to be taken judicial notice of by the court that the court where the trial took place should find the same thing, and that by that mode we might possibly come to some remedy. But the question is beset with difficulty. It is a very profound and difficult question; and if this resolution be adopted, I think I may say—and I hope I am not presumptious in saying it—for every member of the Judiciary Committee, whether he come from the East or the West or the South or the North, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, or by whatever other political appellation he may like to be called, he will approach the question without anger or heat or without being disturbed by present excitement as a pure question of constitutional law and of permanent policy which is to survive the special exigencies of a particular generation.

LIEUTENANT ARNOLD AND SERGEANT EDWARDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read:

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 22d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all official papers in his possession which relate to charges against Lieutenant Arnold and Sergeant Edwards by Private Andrew K. Weir, including the report of Capt. P. W. West, United States Army, of date August 21, 1901.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was unable to go to the War Department on Saturday, but I saw the Secretary of War, and I understood him to state, as to this case, that these charges had been investigated; that a court-martial had been ordered as to one of the officers against whom charges were made, and that it was not yet determined whether a court-martial should be ordered as to the other; that the papers have been sent back for further investigation. The Secretary informed me that he would write me an official letter, to be laid before the Senate this morning, in regard to what had been done by the Department. I have not yet received that letter, but I make this statement of what I understood from my conversation with the Secretary of War. I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow, by which time I shall undoubtedly have the official statement of the Secretary of War in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the resolution go over until to-morrow, retaining its place.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts when that court-martial was ordered?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does the Senator suppose that that information will be given in the letter he expects to receive from the Secretary of War?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose it will be given in that letter.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts I have no objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow morning, if the information I desire can then be obtained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over, retaining its place.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13359) "making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 9, 11, 19, 20, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21, 22, 23, and 25; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, and if in his judgment it will be for the best interests of the Government to purchase all land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, necessary to be used to erect additional batteries, and for buildings for the troops, $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until a valid title to said land and property shall have been acquired by the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In line 2 of said amendment strike out the word "bill" and insert in lieu thereof the word "act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of said amendment, after the word "States," insert the following: ", except the contract of November 7, 1891, for 100 8, 10, and 12 inch guns."

In line 8 strike out the words "security in proper" and insert in lieu thereof the words "good security in same."

And in line 10 strike out the words "according to the true intent and meaning thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
F. E. WARREN,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
LUCIUS N. LITTAUER,
THOS. C. McRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14589) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Committee on Enrolled Bills to correct an error in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 712) granting an increase of pension to John Housiaux;

A bill (S. 1038) granting an increase of pension to Gustavus C. Pratt;

A bill (S. 1797) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Russell;

A bill (S. 2168) granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Baldwin;

A bill (2457) granting an increase of pension to Warren Y. Merchant;

A bill (S. 2511) granting an increase of pension to William Phillips;

A bill (S. 2535) Granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph;

A bill (S. 2551) granting a pension to Amelia Engel;

A bill (S. 2697) granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Baldwin;

A bill (S. 3063) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge;

A bill (S. 3551) granting an increase of pension to John P. Collier;

A bill (S. 3888) granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Hubbard;

A bill (S. 3998) granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Kimble;

A bill (S. 4240) granting an increase of pension to Calvin N. Perkins;

A bill (S. 4415) granting an increase of pension to Vesta A. Brown;

A bill (S. 4638) geanting a pension to Helena Sudsburg;

A bill (S. 4642) granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery;

A bill (S. 4655) granting an increase of pension to Oliver K. Wyman;

A bill (S. 4706) granting an increase of pension to William Harrington;

A bill (S. 4712) granting an increase of pension to Eliphlet Noyes;

A bill (S. 4729) granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp;

A bill (S. 4730) granting an increase of pension to George W. Youngs;

A bill (S. 4732) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hazzard;

A bill (S. 4758) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Doane;

A bill (S. 4759) granting an increase of pension to Martha Clark;

A bill (S. 4766) granting an increase of pension to James P. McClure;

A bill (S. 4790) granting a pension to Stephen A. Seavey;

A bill (S. 4829) granting an increase of pension to Nimrod Headington;

A bill (S. 4853) granting an increase of pension to Amos Moulton;

A bill (S. 4862) granting an increase of pension to James Welch;

A bill (S. 4871) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Worthen;

A bill (S. 4983) granting a pension to John W. Smoot;

A bill (S. 5106) granting an increase of pension to Horace L. Richardson;

A bill (S. 5152) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin, alias Marion M. Martin;

A bill (S. 5153) granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham;

A bill (S. 5202) granting an increase of pension to Jennie M. Wagner;

A bill (S. 5209) granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Van Eaton;

A bill (S. 5371) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan O. Thompson;

A bill (S. 5669) granting a pension to Charlotte M. Howe;

A bill (S. 5670) granting a pension to Samuel H. Chamberlin; and

A bill (S. 5759) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Crooker.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2295, known as the Philippine bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment, intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and ordered to lie on the table, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I very much desired that some other Senator would be ready to proceed this morning, but as there is none, in order that the agreement about the debate on our side shall be carried out, I will say now what I have to say.

At the commencement of the session, in common with many others, I feared that the public conscience had become so seared in the fight of the country for commercial supremacy that it was quite useless to continue the struggle for justice for the Filipinos and the return of the country to the high standard of public conduct that had come down to us from the fathers. The most disquieting evidence was the seeming indifference of the press and the church. It seemed as though the Philippine iniquity would be allowed to petrify with the public conscience and hang around the neck of the country an everlasting hindrance and disgrace.

But, Mr. President, neither the press nor the church was indifferent. They had been lulled into quietude by false reports of conditions in the Philippines from the War Department and the misleading statements of those conditions in censored press dispatches. They were living in a fool's paradise, like most of the country, and they continued there until the late developments. There is no longer any room to fear the indifference either of the press or of the church. Both of these great estates now seem to be exercising all their great power toward giving publicity to the awful conditions in those far-distant islands and to restoring the country to its earlier desire for humanity and justice.

The work of the press is evident upon every hand, the work of the ministers has but just commenced; but it has commenced, and in many sections of the country both the press and the ministers are engaged in doing what they can to arrest the career that is bringing shame to patriotic Americans and to restore the old-time desire for liberty and independence for all peoples that has been the distinguishing feature of American political life.

APPEALS OF MINISTERS FOR JUSTICE TO THE FILIPINOS.

To prove that such is the case as to the latter estate, Mr. President, I have within the last few days collected statements of some of the work that Christian ministers are performing.

The efforts of the ministers originated in the great centers, and their influence is very rapidly spreading to the churches in the smaller localities.

I have here a copy of an appeal, addressed to the ministers of all denominations throughout the country, signed by 21 of the pastors of the leading churches of New York. I will take the time to read it.

APPEAL OF NEW YORK MINISTERS TO MINISTERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

We, the undersigned, ministers of religion, appeal to our brethren of all denominations throughout the United States to protest against the conditions in the Philippines revealed by testimony (before the Senate Committee on Affairs in the Philippine Islands) from which the following are extracts. [The testimony quoted will be found in an appendix.]

We also urgently beg our brethren in the ministry to inform themselves fully in regard to the position of the United States in the Philippine Islands, in order that they may advise the American people as to their duty in regard to this matter, of which Dr. J. G. Schurman, president of the first Philippine Commission, writes as follows in the April number of Gunton's Magazine:

"The future of the Philippines is an open question. The American people have never passed upon the ultimate destiny of the archipelago. * * *

* * * * * * * *

"Now, the Philippine question is one of the most difficult, and in its consequences far-reaching, that has ever come before the American people. In gravity and political pregnancy it yields, I suppose, among all national issues, to slavery alone. It is of supreme importance, therefore, that the American people should ascertain the facts, understand the material considerations and the moral and political principles involved, weigh the consequences both to ourselves and the Filipinos of the different lines of policy proposed, and endeavor to reach some conclusion in regard to what it is right and expedient for us to do in the premises."

NEW YORK, May 1, 1902.

This appeal is signed by the following ministers:

John C. Bliss, pastor Washington Heights Presbyterian Church; Robert Collyer; D. W. Couch, pastor Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church; John Hopkins Denison; W. T. Elsing, 250 Bivington street; John H. Elliott, D. D.; Eugene G. Fuessle, pastor Evangelical Reformed Church, St. Paul's, 874 East One hundred and forty-first street; Maurice M. Harris; Conrad E. Hermstaedt, pastor Second Moravian Church, 636 Sixth street; Arthur C. Kimber, S. T. D., 105 East Houston street; P. F. McSweeny, D. D., pastor of St. Brigid's; H. Pereira Mendes, minister Spanish and Portuguese Congregation, New York City, president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of United States and Canada, president New York Board of Jewish Ministers; Rev. John McQuirk, D. D., LL. D., pastor St. Paul's Church, East One hundred and seventeenth street; Harry P. Nichols, rector Holy Trinity Church, 18 West One hundred and twenty-first street; C. H. Parkhurst, pastor Madison Square Presbyterian Church; William L. Penny; John J. Reed; J. B. Romensnyder, D. D., pastor St. James Lutheran Church, 900 Madison avenue; Henry A. Stimson, pastor Manhattan Congregational Church; William T. Sabine, 910 Madison avenue; Rev. Paul Sommerlatte, Harbor Mission Reformed Church; John F. Steen; Leighton Williams, Amity House, 312 West Fifty-fourth street; Rev. H. M. Warren, D. D., chaplain of the hotels of New York City.

To this appeal is attached a letter signed by the Rev. Joseph R. Duryee, as follows:

139 EAST THIRTY-SIXTH STREET, May 2, 1902.

My sense of justice to the American troops in the Philippines will not permit me to sign the protest. The tendency of this Senate inquiry is to make the Army bear the blame of an immoral policy of subjugation begun four years ago. The conduct of our soldiers as a whole has been, under the horrible conditions of life in the islands, remarkably praiseworthy. I have been in correspondence with officers and men in different sections and know that the cases of savagery are not general.

I only wonder that under the stress of the climate and contact with the natives our men have maintained the discipline and self-restraint that has in the main characterized them. If the Administration and Congress—representing a majority of our people—have not learned by this time that tropical possessions in the East are not the destiny of our people, they are blind to the facts of nature these four years of experience have taught.

If it will be of the slightest use, you are at liberty to publish this letter.

I am, sincerely, yours,

JOSEPH R. DURYEE.

MINISTERS OF CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

Mr. President, evidently acting upon the invitation contained in the document I have just read, the Christian ministers of Cambridge, Mass., very recently met and adopted a series of resolutions, which are signed by 41 of them. The resolutions are brief, and, I think, may be read with profit. They are as follows:

Whereas it is credibly reported that soldiers of our Army in the Philippine Islands, acting under the command of their officers, have treated the native people in ways abhorrent to the spirit, not only of religion, but of civilization itself:

Resolved, That we, citizens of Cambridge, Mass., and Christian ministers, representing, as we believe, the mind of the Christian citizens of this place, do hereby express our earnest reprobation of such acts, and assure the President of the United States of our sincere sympathy in his present endeavor to learn the truth and bring the guilty to punishment.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States.

The names of the ministers signed to these resolutions are as follows:

Theodore F. Wright, Church of the New Jerusalem; Wilbur N. Mason, Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church; Alexander McKenzie, First Church (Congregational); Samuel Crothers, First Parish Church (Unitarian); Prescott Evarts, Christ Protestant Episcopal Church; George Hodges, dean Episcopal Theological School; Francis G. Peabody, dean Harvard Divinity School; John J. Ryan, assistant rector St. Paul's Catholic Church; C. Burditt Williams, Inman Square Baptist Church; R. A. Beard, Prospect Street Church; J. A. Alexander, First United Presbyterian Church; F. J. McConnell, Harvard Street Methodist Episcopal Church; B. M. Osgood, First Free Baptist Church; Morton W. Plummer, Broadway Baptist Church; C. H. Williams, Wood Memorial Church; Thomas Scully, P. R., rector Catholic Church of the Annunciation, and William J. Dwyer and Patrick H. Riley, assistant rectors; C. C. Johnson, Swedish Baptist Church; George W. Bicknell, First Universalist Church; Richard B. Grover, Hope Congregational Church; J. H. Duckrey, Mount Olive Baptist Church; S. Timothy Tice, St. Paul's African Methodist Episcopal social settlement; Benning Jacobson, Southwest End Lutheran Church; A. P. Reccord, Third Congregational Church; Frank O. Hall, Third Universalist Church; Charles A. Skinner, 67 Mount Vernon street; Daniel Evans, North Avenue Congregational Church; Woodman Bradbury, Old Cambridge Baptist Church; James Sherrin, assistant minister St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church; John B. Halloran, rector St. John's Catholic Church; W. Scott, Hollis street; Edward Abbott, St. James's Protestant Episcopal Parish; Arthur H. Gordon, Immanuel Baptist; Oliver W. Hutchinson, Grace Methodist Episcopal Church; Will H. Spence, Pilgrim Congregational Church; John O'Brien, Catholic Church of the Sacred Heart; George Whitaker, Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church; Robert Walker, Church of the Ascension (Protestant Episcopal); T. A. Harlow, Second Baptist Church; Theodore A. Fischer, Second Universalist Church.

BOSTON MINISTERS MEET IN TREMONT TEMPLE.

On last Thursday evening, the evening of the day on which the venerable and patriotic Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made that wonderful plea in behalf of liberty and humanity, there was a ministers' meeting held in Tremont Temple, in the city of Boston, in response to a call to come together in a generous spirit free of passion, prejudice, and partisanship to lend their influence in favor of replacing the present methods of coercion in the Philippines with a truly American policy of conciliation and good will. Boston clergymen representing nearly all creeds and denominations met in Tremont Temple to consider the Philippine situation in the light of recent revelations of the horrors incidental to our Government's possession of the islands. The Boston Herald states that—

The Rev. Dr. Donald called the meeting to order shortly after 8 o'clock. On the platform with Dr. Donald were the Rev. R. J. Johnson, of the Church of the Gate of Heaven, South Boston; the Rev. Frank O. Hall, representing the Universalist Church, of Boston; the Rev. Francis H. Rowley; the Rev. Benjamin F. Trueblood, of the American Peace Society; Rabbi Charles Fleischer, of Temple Adath Israel; the Rev. A. A. Berle, of the Brighton Congregational Church; the Rev. Scott F. Hershey, of the First Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Paul Revere Frothingham, of the Arlington Street Unitarian Church.

From the published accounts of that meeting we learn that before it commenced a printed slip was handed to each of the invited speakers, which stated the rules under which the meeting was to be conducted and the purpose its originators had in view. It read:

Remember the demands of the President: (1) Searching exposure of all wrongs, and no shielding of wrongdoers; (2) no barbarities pardoned or permitted under our flag; (3) ultimate self-government for the Filipinos, after the fashion of the really free nations; (4) generous trade relations with Cuba.

The conscience of the country urges these demands in their fullest and strongest sense and will tolerate no influences which tend to weaken or obscure them.

Contrast the degree of joy and gratitude in Cuba to-day with the despair and resentment in the Philippines, and learn the lesson of the contrast.

DR. DONALD'S OPENING ADDRESS.

The spirit of the meeting was well illustrated in the opening remarks of Rev. Dr. Donald. I would not indulge in the reading of these extracts were it not that what is quoted from each is short, while every one of the quotations is pregnant with the highest patriotism and the strongest humanity. The account says that in opening Dr. Donald said:

This meeting is not for the condemnation or even the denunciation of the Government. It is rather for the purpose of giving the Administration encouragement and support in the task of investigating the charges contained in the report of Major Gardener, received on the 9th of last February by the Secretary of War.

Very recently the President has in the most explicit terms publicly expressed his determination to discover and to punish all cases of barbarities by our soldiers in the Philippine Islands. We are here to express our deep gratification at the publication of this letter.

As the accredited and appointed teachers of religion and morals in the community, we feel it to be our duty to let the nation know that we present a united front against barbarity, atrocity, cruelty committed by any man anywhere where the flag of the United States shall float. If any man, to achieve his purpose, finds it absolutely necessary to adopt the instruments of dishonor, we affirm that that man has no right to entertain or prosecute that purpose. [Applause.] If any nation which has come into possession of territory finds it necessary to descend to barbarity and inhumanity and torture and unmentionable cruelties, then we do not hesitate to declare that that nation has no right to occupy or retain that territory. [Applause.]

My friends, there is serious danger lest this cry of exaggeration which is heard may have the effect of dulling the public conscience. It is no longer possible for us to deny that atrocities have been committed in the Philippines, at which the whole nation blushes and hangs its head in shame.

Who has committed these atrocities? We don't know, but we are extremely anxious to find out. Until the responsibility is laid at the door of those who are guilty the stain of dishonor upon the national flag will not be removed.

We are not here to say that President Roosevelt will not do his duty, but to say we believe he will do his duty. [Applause.] We are not here to say the Secretary of War will not do his duty, but that we believe he will do his duty. Our plain duty is to assure the President and his Secretary of War that the conscience, support, and conviction of the people of the United States are behind them when they are seriously, earnestly, and devotedly engaged in investigating upon whose shoulders should rest the responsibility of having disgraced our American flag. [Applause.]

I will now read extracts from the addresses of other speakers:

REV. B. F. TRUEBLOOD.

He began by reading a telegram from Philadelphia, as follows:

Cordial greetings. Truth is mighty and will prevail. Herbert Welsh, Lyman Ward.

He went on to say:

It is reported from Washington that, with cynical glee, men are playing the game of politics over these articles, though this is to descend to the last depths of unworthiness.

President Roosevelt, who feels the gravity of the situation and is anxious to remove the ugly spot from the nation's honor as far as possible, ought to have the active and unequivocal support in this direction, whatever you may think of him in other directions, of all persons, of all parties and creeds, in searching out and exposing all the wrongs and barbarities which have been committed by American men under the American flag.

We must lay the responsibility for this tragedy of horrors where in the last analysis it belongs—upon the shoulders of the people. The people of this country are the rulers of this country, and their officials are our agents and servants. It is we who are responsible for the nation's policies and enterprises and for the methods of carrying them out. We have been silent when we ought to have spoken. We have cherished the vulgar notion that we were being swept on by a destiny over which we had no control. We have allowed false notions of patriotism to smother criticism of the proper sort and to persuade us that the nation can do no wrong. Now, we shall be deeply guilty if we allow ourselves any longer to be hoodwinked, and if we do not insist that these atrocities be stopped at once and forever and the direct perpetrators brought to account.

In my judgment, we must go a step further. The punishment of the wrongdoers will not undo the wrongs. There is only one course worthy of the nation at the present time. No international law can give any right to that which is contrary to the plainest and simplest dictates of righteousness and justice. We should demand the immediate inauguration of the policy suggested in President Roosevelt's message, which we believe he honestly meant—self-government for the Filipinos after the fashion of really free nations; the same policy for the Philippines as that which we conceded to Cuba.

REV. DR. ROWLEY.

The Rev. Dr. Rowley was even more plainly outspoken. Among other things, he said:

Better that such a party as the Republican should go down forever than that the flag which holds in its folds all that we hold dear as a nation should receive a single stain. It is not a political issue that confronts us. It is a moral issue. It peers above the question of parties as Sinai towers above the wandering hosts at its base. A war begun in the interests of humanity has passed into a war of conquest. Our army is engaged in reducing to subjection a people who sought no quarrel with us; a people fighting not to infringe upon any moral right which was ours to claim, who have never threatened to invade our territory, to destroy our liberties, to overthrow our institutions, but a people fighting to defend what they hold to be their inalienable rights and to resist the foreign foe.

I am inclined to think that the atrocities that have accompanied this bitter conflict of our Army with a people said to be absolutely and hopelessly alien in race, temperament, and civilization have been inevitable. The chances are that the American soldier has been as humane as any other soldier in war would have been. The moral responsibility comes back upon the people, whose will the nation must obey. Through this whole sorry business I believe there may be detected the spirit of fancied race superiority, which, as it is imagined, gives us the right to ride roughshod over men and women and children. Had we risen to the sublime conception of what it means when we say that man is brother to his fellow-man, irrespective of race, color, or previous condition, we should have borne ourselves differently toward those who have been made with us in the image of Almighty God.

I would that from this gathering here there might go out a great, solemn appeal in behalf of peace, and that we should affirm our unalterable conviction that our nation should say to the Filipinos, frankly and without reservation, as we said to Cuba, "We promise you independence. Lay down your arms and we guarantee you, at the first possible moment, a fair chance to work out your destiny, and to that end we assure you of our assistance and support."

Such a declaration, issued from Washington, would bring us back to the only foundation upon which, as I see it, we can ultimately take our stand, if we are to show ourselves true to the sacredest principles in our Constitution. It is honor, not disgrace, to withdraw the flag from every foot of ground it has floated over in violation of the rights of man. Never has that flag looked more worthy of our devotion than when it was hauled down from the flagstaff over the palace in Cuba. That was a sight to thrill the heart of humanity.

What were our lives without thee?
What all our lives to save thee?
We recked not what we gave thee,
We will not dare to doubt thee,
But ask whatever else and we will dare.

REV. FRANK O. HALL.

The Rev. Frank O. Hall made a wonderfully thrilling speech. He said:

There is no longer any reasonable doubt that we are engaged in the Philippine Islands to-day in exactly the same business that Butcher Weyler was engaged in in Cuba six years ago, only we have enlarged upon the business and perfected his methods. [Applause.] There is no longer any doubt that we have caused the destruction in these last three years of more lives in the Philippines than was caused in any one century of Spanish misrule.

We have destroyed more homes, made more widows, more children fatherless, than the volcano in St. Pierre, and the Filipinos might well thank Almighty God to send the volcano there if only he would withdraw the American forces. [Applause.]

Where did our soldiers learn the hideous devices with which they have tortured the Filipinos? Not at West Point. We know they have been training men there a good deal as they train bulldogs to fight, but they do not teach the water cure. That was learned from the Macabebes, and the Macabebes are men who have been enlisted to fight under the American flag.

If you know anything about the law of heredity, you know what the effect of this course will be on the future citizenship of the country. You may have no son in the Philippines, but you may have a daughter who will marry one of those soldiers, and thus the curse will be brought into your home and into every home in the American Republic.

I have unlimited confidence in President Roosevelt. There is not money enough in the world to buy him, and not men enough to frighten him. He means to do right. But President Roosevelt believes in the strenuous life, and the strenuous life means to fight. He believes in party, and that nothing can accomplish without party.

He is surrounded by politicians 10 deep, who are constantly whispering in his ear: "Nothing must be done that shall hazard the next political campaign." And outside of that ring of politicians you will find another ring with shoulder straps and brass buttons, each one looking for promotion, who are whispering in his ear that these things are excusable in any war.

What we want to do is to let President Roosevelt know that we do not belong to the politicians, but that they belong to us; that we do not belong to the Army, but that the Army belongs to us; and that the thing to do is to let President Roosevelt—our President, and, therefore, our servant—know the will of the soverign American people.

REV. ROBERT J. JOHNSON.

The Rev. Robert J. Johnson, among other things, said:

When word comes to us from across the seas that, in a land 11,000 miles away, men, women, and children are being tortured, slaughtered, and their homes laid in ashes, under orders given by officers of the United States, then, indeed, it is time for all of us who are jealous of our country's honor to make a stern protest and do all in our power to arouse the strong moral sense of a free American people, which, though it sometimes seems to slumber, is never dead.

The atrocities have been committed in the province of Samar. The people of Samar are not savages, but civilized, Christian people, who have their laws, their schools, and their churches. Are we Christians, and shall we sit silent, making no protest? I think not; I am sure not.

I am aware that there is a distinction drawn between war and murder. But you shall not burn homes, you shall not violate women, slay children, and cause desolation everywhere, and call that Christian warfare. If you do, the line between war and murder disappears.

REV. DR. HERSHEY.

The Rev. Dr. Hershey began by citing President Roosevelt's words at the recent Presbyterian meeting in New York, that "the vital thing to a nation is the spiritual, and not the moral;" also, that "we must look to the church to make the standard for morals and righteousness for the whole land."

Those people in the Pacific—

He continued—

are our brothers, belonging to us by ties of the human race. The treatment meted out there to men, women, and children has been simply brutal and savage. The treatment has been un-American.

We have made a record, especially in these later years, of being generous, just, and humane, and the American soldiery will stand comparison for these distinctive characteristics with the best soldiery of the best nations of the earth. Why can not we do in the Philippines what we have done in Cuba? America, as a leading nation, should set an ideal before the world in three things—justice, liberty, humanity—which are things that make for righteousness in national life.

REV. DR. BERLE.

The Rev. Dr. Berle said:

I speak with no desire to temporize or to make it easy for those who have violated the fundamental principles of religion. I have absolutely no disposition to choose the easiest terms for those who have sanctioned what I believe to be murder and slaughter—terms which will make them sleep more easily and be better satisfied with the results of their work in the Philippine Islands.

I wish to call President Roosevelt's attention to the fact that three years ago, in this house, the missionaries then present at a Congregationalist gathering, one after another, got up and declared that the putting into practice of the theory of Lyman Abbott that before the doctine of love can be preached to natives a regenerative army with the gospel of force must prepare the way would destroy every Christian mission abroad.

Representing the Christian church, we demand that the sword which was drawn in the interest of humanity be now sheathed in the interest of humanity; that the sword which we hoped would express the righteousness and the righteous resolution of the American people to end a grievous and distressing state of affairs in the island of Cuba shall not be made the bloody symbol of eternal shame by being bathed in the innocent blood of women and children in the Philippine Islands.

I am here also to protest in the name of the American veteran soldier of the civil war against the monstrous misrepresentation that the cruelties and atrocities in the Philippine Islands are to be laid at the door of Abraham Lincoln. I have received, to-day, a letter from a distinguished officer of the Sixth Army Corps who was in that whole campaign of Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, and he says:

The attempt to put upon Abraham Lincoln responsibility for these outrages is shameful in the extreme. It is absolutely false, and a dastardly piece of cowardice. I saw what was done under that Order No. 100. Barns were burned, but not all; gristmills were destroyed, but not all. A humane construction was put upon the order. That I knew as a positive fact. I saw many burning buildings, but I saw many saved. We were not fighting against old men, infirm people, and not at all against women and children.

In the name of the veteran soldier I protest against the blasphemy of bringing the hideous shadow of all this slaughter and shame upon the author of the emancipation proclamation.

RABBI FLEISCHER.

Rabbi Fleischer said:

We are expecting on the average just so much murder and pillage and rape and drunkenness and all sorts of exhibitions of moral rottenness. I would not have one word I say, however, be regarded as condonement of any of the offenses committed by our soldiers in the Philippines. Every man guilty of any one of these immoralities should be brought to book and visited with condign punishment. But after that, let us recognize our responsibility.

These acts of our soldiers are simply the poison fruit growing upon a poison tree. [Applause.] Our business is to destroy the fruit, but also to extirpate that poison tree, to destroy it, root and branch. [Applause.]

We should no longer tolerate the use of our Army as the football of politics of one party or another. Both are wrong in thus using the Army. We do not mean merely to criticise the Army, party, or President, but to insist that these, our servants, shall do our bidding and do it according to our most righteous desires.

REV. MR. FROTHINGHAM.

The Rev. Mr. Frothingham concluded by offering a resolution that related to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Dr. Donald, in introducing Mr. Frothingham as the last speaker, remarked that the speeches had been singularly a unit in their ethical apprehension of the situation. He said he thought the declaration made in opening, that the meeting was to be temperate, had been lived up to.

The Rev. Mr. Frothingham said:

This is the firing of the last shot, but it is not a shot of defiance nor yet of defence; it is rather a salute of courage and hope, looking to something full of life and encouragement in the future.

I have come here to-night with my mind full of that grand, true, and eloquent speech of our senior Senator in Washington; and with those things thrilling in my heart and filling my mind, I have felt that you and I and, as I believe, the people of this country have gone down into the last depths of our valleys and our humiliation, and it has been a low valley and a dark one. I believe the time will come when the people of America will look back on this period of our history as one of the worst periods and one of the most degraded. There was a degraded time in our country's life—it was when we held slaves; but it is a worse time when we try to make slaves.

I ask this meeting to accept the resolution I now offer, and send it to Washington:

"Resolved, That this meeting tends to Senator HOAR its expression of profound gratitude for the speech which so eloquently voiced the conscience and the religious sense of his native State."

The resolution was promptly put by the presiding officer, and was as promptly carried by acclamation.

Mr. Frothingham went on to say:

These tortures, these cruelties, and abuses have not been sporadic expressions of overheated zeal, of animal passions that have leaped out on the part of the individual soldier. They have been shown to come from some superior officer. I wonder whether our American Army is really to blame for this situation. I do not believe that the soldiers of our Army are.

Who, then, is to blame? Well, we are to blame who sent those men over there to crush those people, to make them submit, to crush their rebellious spirit, to say you shall not be free, you shall not have your liberties. We sent them, indirectly, to do a miserable, a selfish, an un-American thing, and the result is that they have done it in a cruel, a low and beastly and un-American way. I am inclined to think that the evils and abuses have been less with our soldiers than they would have been with any others.

But we must look behind the individual to the policy. I believe there is only one thing for President, Senate, Congress, and people to do, and that is to admit we have been led into error, and to redeem ourselves—to say that the Philippine Islands shall have the same rights that we have accorded to Cuba.

The meeting closed with the singing of "America."

I have a number of other sermons and statements delivered by ministers of different denominations in other parts of the country, but I have read enough to show the awakening that is going on among Christian and humane people—an awakening that carries hopeful promise to all the country that the night of ignorance and indifference is past and that the sun of liberty and justice is about to rise to flood our beloved land with the spirit of the departed framers of the Constitution and the immortal Declaration of American Independence.

Mr. President, I read these resolutions, petitions, and utterances, not to make them a part of the remarks that I originally intended to make, but because I thought they should go into the RECORD that the change in sentiment going on in the minds of the clergymen, without respect to church or creed, should be more widely known; and I have no doubt in the world that the ministers of the various denominations all over this country will, before this question is settled, unite in utterances like unto those I have just called to the attention of the Senate.

But, Mr. President, before I proceed to discuss in my own way the questions involved in the two bills before the Senate I should give some attention to a part of the speech made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] some two or three weeks ago, in which for a perfectly proper purpose, as he expressed it, certain editorials printed in a newspaper that I control were read.

SENATOR FORAKER AND THE DENVER NEWS.

The purpose, as I understood the honorable Senator from Ohio, was to show the influences that were brought to bear upon the President from different sections of the country which induced him to insist upon the cession to the United States of the Philippine Islands.

If that was the sole purpose of the Senator I can not complain because he read editorials from the newspaper I control; for whatever may be said to operate upon the minds of public men to induce in them a line of conduct upon great public questions is legitimate matter for presentation and discussion. But I am inclined to think that the learned Senator had another end in view, doubtless a desire to bring a little humiliation to the person supposed to be responsible for those editorials and to embarrass him somewhat in a further discussion of the questions to which the editorials referred.

I am frank to say, Mr. President, that where anybody filling a public position is found to have suddenly and inexplicably changed front upon some great governmental or moral question without an adequate cause, his sincerity may well be called in question, and where a man's sincerity is doubted his influence can weigh for little.

The Senator from Ohio imagined that he had a great deal of fun at my expense in the reading of those editorials, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the worthy Senator occupying the President's chair [Mr. BEVERIDGE] joined in the merriment. By way of illustration, the Senator from Ohio having read a quotation from the News, as follows:

Whatever may be the motives of the Republican leaders, the policy which they enunciate is the correct policy for this country to pursue. The United States must take its place as a world power, confident of its ability to bear its share of whatever burdens may come upon it and to reap its share of the honors and profits.

The following occurred:

"What," said Senator SPOONER, "profits?" The Senator from Ohio replied with a satisfied smile "Profits"—"p-r-o-f-i-t-s," at which the veritable CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows there was laughter. He read another extract in which the word "spoil" was used by the writer, when in response to the exclamation of the Senator from Ohio, "Think of it!" the Senator from Wisconsin immediately exclaimed:

"Spoil?"

"Yes," replied the Senator from Ohio. "Yes; spoil;" and again there was laughter. And so it continued until, toward the close of that part of the Senator's speech he read an editorial, the closing paragraph of which was: "And so Providence appears to have ordered it that we shall participate in the affairs of the Far East," the Senator from Wisconsin said:

Was there not something about "Providence" in the last one the Senator read?

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, yes; Providence figures rather conspicuously here.

When the Senator from Indiana now in the chair suggested—

And fate?

To which Mr. FORAKER replied:

Yes, "fate." "Providence," "fate," "destiny," and "commerce"—all the elements of national greatness.

It is a matter of little moment who wrote the editorials in question. It is sufficient for me to say that I control the paper. I was then and I am now responsible for all its editorial utterances.

But, Mr. President, I have something to say about those editorials in addition to what the Senator from Ohio has said. Until about the 1st day of December, 1898—some two months before the ratification of the Spanish treaty—I favored holding the Philippines and I advocated the government of the Philippines by the United States.

I would not take any time upon this subject were it not that I feel I am but a type of hundreds of thousands of the American people in their changing views upon our duty in the Philippines, commencing with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay, proceeding with the treaty of peace, the annexation of the islands, and the government of those islands, accompanied by their subjugation. It would be a waste of time upon my part to continue reference to these matters if I could not in a proper way show how the views of the many came to be held and what brought about a change in them.

I said that up to the 1st day of December the News consistently advocated the holding of the Philippine Islands, but from that time, commencing with the 2d day of December, two months before the ratification of the treaty, the News and I, to the best of our ability, advocated a change of policy and stood for the independence of the Philippine Islands and in opposition to all of the conduct that has marked the possession of them by the United States since.

I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that at the time the change I referred to occurred there was no election pending. The election of 1898 had but just occurred and none was to be held for nearly two years.

There was no Democratic President in office; there was no patronage to seek; there were no friends to reward; it was almost two years from a Presidential election. I can say with truth that the change was made out of no other cause than that of an honest conviction that the policy the Administration had adopted was a bad one both for our country and the archipelago.

Mr. President, it may be stated without the possibility of successful contradiction that commencing with the taking of Manila, if not almost with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila, there was a very wide-spread sentiment, almost universal, in favor of holding the Philippine Islands. Was there a reason for it? It seems to me that there was.

The war had been commenced for the liberation of Cuba. It had been prosecuted with great honor and credit to the American Army and Navy. An unexampled naval victory had been won by the American fleet under Commodore Dewey. Following that a censored press, as I have reason to believe, deliberately guided by the powers at Washington, commenced a series of misrepresentation of events and of the true conditions in the islands.

Mr. President, until the close of 1898 but few of us living at home knew the true story of the relation of Aguinaldo to Admiral Dewey, the capture of Manila, and the Philippines. None of us knew that he had been requested to visit Hongkong by and to confer with Admiral Dewey, and it was only because the Admiral sailed for Manila a day or two before he reached Hongkong that the conference was not there held. That about the middle of May Aguinaldo was sent for by United States authorities and carried to Manila Bay upon an American war vessel, was landed at Cavite, and at the request of Admiral Dewey raised the Filipino flag and called Filipino patriots to rally under itt folds.

None of us then knew that commencing with the 15th of May and going on and on and on through June and July and into the middle of August Aguinaldo had constructed his lines from shore to shore, holding in the city of Manila within their iron grasp the entire Spanish army; that assault after assault had been made by him on the Spanish fortifications, and that thousands of Filipinos were killed and wounded in their struggle to destroy the common Spanish foe; that by those efforts in the neighborhood of 4,000 Spanish prisoners were captured by Aguinaldo and his troops; and that when the American soldiers first reached Filipino shores in July, 1898, so completely were the Spanish garrison surrounded and held by the Filipino army that General Anderson was compelled to negotiate with General Aguinaldo for a place in the fighting line.

To secure this position he addressed Aguinaldo as the commanding general of the Filipino army and spoke of the American and Filipino forces as "cooperating" to overthrow a common enemy. Anderson was granted position in the Filipino lines, less than a quarter of a mile in extent, and when Manila surrendered the American army occupied less than three-quarters of a mile of the line of battle, extending from the shore inland, while the Filipino army held more than 8 miles of intrenchments, surrounding the rest of the city of Manila.

We did not then know, Mr. President, of the arrangement between General Merritt and the Spanish general by which when Manila surrendered Aguinaldo and the Filipinos were restrained from participating in the glory of the victory, nor did we know that with a forbearance and denial rare indeed even among the generals and armies of the most civilized nations, Aguinaldo and the Filipino army had from August, when Manila was taken, until the night of the fateful 4th of February following, submitted with dignity and forbearance to the most exasperating requirements of the American commander, for the sake of preventing conflicts between the Filipino and American forces.

All the information we got, until news of the disclosures made in Paris during the treaty negotiations, was that Aguinaldo was a little detestable, grasping, selfish, would-be despot. We had been taught to believe that the great body of the Filipino people were yearning for the care and protection of the great American nation and that were it not for Aguinaldo and a few such coconspirators as he the Filipino people and the Philippine Islands would come peacefully and thankfully to our arms.

This, Mr. President, was undeniably the character of the information that was furnished to the American people between the day in May when the Spanish fleet was destroyed and the attack made upon the 4th day of February, 1899. It was about that time that the true state of affairs commenced to come out; and when thousands and thousands of American people, of whom I was one, learned the true situation, the real struggle, the true attitude of the Filipino army to their islands, their people, and the American Army and Navy, then, without an Administration to reward us, without an election pending, out of which we might hope to gain advantage, with no other purpose or motive than an earnest desire to do the right, we changed front, and from that time ever since have consistently and earnestly stood for justice to the Filipino and the preservation of our country from the curse of imperialism.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will excuse me for interrupting him. I was unavoidably occupied for the moment, and I did not get the date of the change given by the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. The latter part of November, or early in December.

Mr. FORAKER. Eighteen hundred and ninety-eight.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; in 1898.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator to state that he himself and his paper, the Denver News, advocated the acquisition and retention of the Philippine Islands down to November or the beginning of December, 1898.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. And that at that time both changed?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. But that neither the Senator, as the owner and the responsible party connected with the paper, nor the paper itself, has advocated that policy since?

Mr. PATTERSON. Never since; and I say that in the face of the editorials printed in the Denver News in the month of February and read by the Senator; and I will show to the Senate that in reading these editorials the Senator from Ohio was not candid, for he omitted editorials and omitted parts of editorials that would have shown the matter differently from what he sought to convey.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not pretend to read all the editorials in the Denver News, nor I did not pretend to read all of those I did read from. I simply called attention to such parts of the very voluminous writings I found there as I thought it proper to call attention to, as showing the view expressed by that paper. When the Senator says I was not frank about it, I trust he will give a little consideration to that language. I do not think he is justified in making any such remark.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will say——

Mr. FORAKER. I undertook to be entirely frank with the Senator and the Senate. There is nothing whatever in the editorials referred to that is in conflict with anything I read, as, I am sure, any unbiased man will agree. I had no thought of misleading the Senate by anything I read, and surely I read nothing except the language there found and just as it was found there, but I did not see fit to read all of the editorials that occupied a column and some of them perhaps more than a column. In that I did not do anything unusual, and certainly I did not do anything to justify the remark made by the Senator. If the remark stands I shall take a great deal of pleasure at the proper time in putting into the RECORD in connection with what I did read what the Senator complains that I have omitted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will let the remark stand until I am through with this portion of my remarks, and then I will let the Senate judge whether I was justified or not in making the statement I did. As to the putting of other editorials in the RECORD, I will say that until the latter part of November, 1898, the Senator will find many editorials in the News that he did not read along the same line as those that he did read; but after the latter part of November he will find none that point in that direction. Those that he read and many that he omitted, printed after November, 1898, show beyond peradventure the attitude of the paper to be as I state. I find in going over the pages of the Denver News that the identical articles I have in mind bore somebody's check mark, as if whoever had gone over the files for the purposes of the Senator from Ohio had checked them off and knew what they were.

Now, Mr. President, let me not be misunderstood. Until the latter part of November, 1898, it was as I have stated; but on the 2d day of December the first editorial opposing expansion was printed, and that editorial had a check mark upon it which indicated that it had been seen; but that editorial was not quoted. The honorable Senator skipped the editorial of December 2 and went to the editorial of December 7. Let me read the editorial in the Denver News of December 2, so that Senators may pass judgment upon it. It is entitled "Management of the Philippines."

MANAGEMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The treaty with Spain conveying to the United States among others the Philippine group of islands will soon be executed by the high contracting parties, and within a reasonable time will be ratified by the American Senate. This is right. Manila and its bay were captured and are being held as the legitimate spoils of war. The United States has a right to demand that they be transferred, Spain surrendering sovereignty and this country taking it. When the Senate ratifies the treaty the Philippines will be Spanish soil no longer, but the property of the United States, to be dealt with as it will determine.

It is how to deal with them that puzzles statesmen. Just what their relations to the United States will be is the political conundrum. They can not be received as a State, nor can they be molded into a Territory. Either one or the other carries with it to its inhabitants the right to go and come at will, no restrictions upon commerce, the same tariff duties, and absolute free trade between them and the rest of the United States. The labor of the islands is servile or semiservile. Without restrictions that are impossible under our fundamental law there would soon be an inundation of the United States by the hordes of Malays, Kanakas, and Creoles that populate the islands. The better wages here and better living would be a lodestone they could not resist. Its effect upon American wages would be a national disaster, to say nothing of the tainting of the blood and complications of the present race problems caused by the juxtaposition of whites and blacks in the Southern States.

It follows as a corollary that if the Philippines are retained by the United States it must be as captured provinces in which a state of war exists, which justifies an exclusion of their people from the protection afforded to American citizens by the Federal Constitution.

It will be borne in mind that this legal statement was made before the Supreme Court of the United States had passed upon those questions, and when it was generally conceded that the only method by which the Philippines could be held without extending to them the Constitution would be by holding them in a so-called state of war, and that it could only be while that state existed that the discrimination suggested by the editorial could continue:

The Constitution extends to the inhabitants of Territories as well as of the States. The preamble to the Constitution declares that "We, the people of the United States," for the purpose set forth, "do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America." The United States of America embraces all of its territories. Alaska, though not within a State, is part of the United States of America; so are Arizona and the other organized Territories. The Constitution is, therefore, established for all the territory of the United States. Some fiction must be devised that will, while the sovereignty of the United States is extended over the islands, exclude their inhabitants from the enjoyment of the rights and privileges of American citizens. It must be a military or semimilitary goverment. The law must be either that of the camp or of Congress, without reference to constitutional limitations or restrictions.

This anomaly will exist: A great republic and a despotism side by side; countries subject to the same sovereignty—the despotism organized, controlled, and manipulated by and for the benefit of the republic.

The first startling proposition that confronts Americans is that the law of Congress fixing customs duties can not apply or be applied to the Philippines. It is operative over every other foot of American soil. But the very treaty ceding us the islands, which, if ratified by the Senate, becomes the supreme law of the land, establishes the "open door"—that is, while the Dingley tariff is operated over every other square inch of American soil, it can not exist for the Philippines. There must be for them either absolute free trade or a tariff law as applicable to the United States as to England or to any other foreign country. In the Philippines the American manufacturer will have no advantage over the British or French. All must pay duties on their goods alike on entering their ports. Americans can not fence off the Philippines and say products of the United States shall enter free of duty, while those of other countries must pay the duties.

These are but a few of the perplexing questions connected with the possession of our new accessions. What to do with them or how to manage them is, therefore, a problem worthy of the best thought of the best Americans. There are those who suggest that what should be done is, having ratified the treaty, we proceed as rapidly as possible to give freedom to the Philippines. Establish an American protectorate, make person and property secure, require political and religious freedom, and their people, in the setting up of a republic, see that the republic is maintained, obtain reasonable commercial and other advantages to the United States that shall be perpetual, retain ample facilities for coaling stations and cable terminals there and in the Ladrones and Carolines. Startle the civilized world with the most sublimely grand and magnanimous national deed that history has ever recorded. Wrest a nation from its oppressors and say to it, "Now you are free."

This, Mr. President, was an editorial published in the Denver News on the 2d day of December, 1898. The Senator from Ohio read but part of an editorial printed in the News of December 7, five days after the one I have read. The title of that editorial is "Hawaii and the Philippines." The entire editorial reads as follows:

HAWAII AND THE PHILIPPINES.

A measure for the future government of Hawaii, which will probably be adopted by Congress in the main, is recommended in the report of the Commission appointed by the President to submit, among other things, a system of government appropriate for the Hawaiian situation.

It creates of the Hawaiian Islands a Territory of the United States in all respects like the rest of the American Territories. It is to be such a Territory as was Colorado before admitted as a State and as are now New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma, and the Indian Territories. To manage its affairs there will be a governor, secretary of state, courts—supreme and district—and other territorial officers. The legislature—senate and house—will be elected by the voters.

All whites, Portuguese, negroes, and their descendants, with native Hawaiians, who were residents of the islands immediately before Congress accepted them as a present, are made citizens of the United States and qualified electors of the Territory. Thus, with the adoption of the commissioners' recommendation, Hawaii will become full-fledged a part of the United States of America, one of its organized Territories and equipped to knock at the door of Congress regularly each session for admission to the Union as one of the sovereign States. All of the internal-revenue and custom laws of the country will immediately be applicable to Hawaii. There will be unqualified freedom of trade between the islands and the rest of the United States. Citizens of Hawaii must come and go, whether on pleasure bound or to settle here permanently, without let or hindrance. All products of the islands, whether of the field or shop, including sugar of every grade, will come to us free of duties, and all products of the States will go to Hawaii in the same unrestricted way. Neither Chinese nor Japanese are to be allowed citizenship. By this exclusion these yellow heathen can not come to the American mainland through Hawaii as a gate.

If the measure of the commission finds favor with Congress, the future of of Hawaii will be provided for in a natural, simple, and truly American manner. The Philippines can not be so readily provided for.

Then was printed the part that the Senator from Ohio read. The Senate will see that the entire article was simply a discussion of legal and economic questions as applied to the Philippine Islands. I will now read the part read by the Senator from Ohio:

It is accepted that the cession of the Philippines to the United States comes handicapped with the "open door." Their annexation is impossible under any other condition. Great Britain's moral backing in our demand for the Philippines has been upon condition that the "open door" is maintained. France and Germany have reluctantly submitted, but only because of Britain's attitude and the "open door." This "open door" means that our custom laws do not and can not apply to the Philippines.

As to exportations from the United States to them, whether it is American grain or meat, or American manufactures or American anything else, they must enter the Philippines upon the same terms as like articles from foreign countries, and none other. If there is free trade between the United States and the Philippines, then all other countries must have free trade with them. If importations must pay customs duties, then those from the United States must pay them as well as those from other countries. This is the price paid for permission from England, Germany, and France to annex the islands. It is a dear price—a much higher price than the $20,000,000 paid in cash to Spain. It forbids making the Philippines an integral part of the United States of America. They can be held only as captive "foreign" territory. This contemptible fiction must remain a contanuing element of the American system. The "open door" means that the Constitution of the United States has no place in shaping legislation for the islands. All laws for them must be extra-constitutional. They can not, as is proposed for Hawaii, become a Territory. They are and will remain spoils of war, held as "foreign" territory, and therefore subject to such exceptional and extraordinary methods of control as are permissible where martial law exists.

The Senator from Ohio read the foregoing extract, and that alone, out of the editorial of December 7, omitting entirely the editorial of December 2. Did the Senator aim to convey the idea from the extract he read that the News urged it to be our duty to hold those islands as spoils of war? No such idea could be gathered from the entire article. It was in nowise conflicting with the article of December 2. Its sole purpose was to show the unusual and anomalous conditions arising out of attempting to hold the Philippines, conditions that we could not and should not tolerate.

The editorial concludes as follows:

It is claimed that the President believes that this "open door" may be maintained under a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States given many years ago. It was the case of Fleming et al. v. Page. The question at issue in that case was whether Tenpico while in the military occupation of the United States in 1847 ceased to be a "foreign" country within the meaning of the revenue laws. Chief Justice Taney delivered the opinion of the court. In it it was declared that territory held in the military possession of the United States as a result of conquest and not yet finally and definitely held as United States territory must be treated as foreign territory under the revenue laws. The court recited that after Florida had been ceded to the United States and the forces of the United States had taken possession of Pensacola it was decided by the Treasury Department that goods imported from Pensacola before an act of Congress was passed erecting it into a collection district and authorizing the appointment of a collector were liable to duty; that is, that although Florida had by cession actually become a part of the United States and was in our possession, yet under our revenue laws its ports must be regarded as foreign until they were established as domestic by an act of Congress.

Commenting upon the decision, the special Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says: "Under the decision it is believed that ports in territory held by the United States can be considered as foreign ports indefinitely as far as the revenue and navigation laws of the United States are concerned. If this is true, it is clearly within the power of the Government to establish for such ports an entirely different tariff system from that in the United States, and to enforce the United States tariff on goods from those ports, while collecting their tariff on goods from the United States. This is what will be done under the 'open-door' policy as it is proposed by the Administration to have it in force in the Philippines."

It is gradually growing clear to the thoughtful that unless extraordinary care is taken in Congress in providing for the future of the Philippines, either the fundamental law of the land must be overhauled and radical changes made or the lie must be given to it in legislation, and a contemptible and un-American subterfuge adopted and perpetuated, which will prove a disgrace to republican government.

I will now read the conclusion of the editorial of December 2, the editorial which the Senator from Ohio saw fit to omit:

It is becoming a burning question whether the true solution of the situation may not be to grant independence to the Philippines under American protection, securing ample commercial advantages as consideration for the grant of independence, with ample coaling station and cable terminals. In any event no such fiction as holding the Philippines perpetually as "foreign" territory in military possession should be indulged in.

OHIO SENATOR'S PURPOSE IN READING THE EDITORIALS.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I read the part of that editorial which I did read for no other purpose than to show the familiarity of the writer of that editorial with the great legal questions involved in the acquisition of the islands, which acquisition he subsequently contended for in advocating the ratification of the treaty. The other speculation of the Senator in his editorial is very interesting, no doubt, but it does not change the purpose I had in view, nor does it change at all the point for which the editorial was used.

Mr. PATTERSON. With that explanation I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. FORAKER. One other thing. It must be quite manifest to the Senate, in view of the length of the editorials, as evidenced by those now read to the Senate, that when I was undertaking to read editorials from Democratic newspapers all over the country, I would have been here two or three days occupying the time of the Senate if I had undertaken to read all the editorials printed in all these papers, and had undertaken to read all of them in full. I was simply undertaking to show that there was a common thought the whole country over, and I was undertaking to quote enough from the various newspapers to support the proposition. I was not undertaking to read everything that everybody had said on the subject.

Mr. PATTERSON. That explanation—and I will accept it in the spirit in which it is made—certainly removes a cause of pain to me, because, while I said nothing at the time the editorials were being read, conscious of the real situation, I knew that the time would come when I might legitimately make full exposition of the truth.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I was not aware until the Senator made the announcement that he had suffered any pain on account of my reading the editorials. I certainly made a perfectly legitimate use of them, and then stated that I was only undertaking to defend the action of the Administration by showing that its action, whether wise or unwise, was upheld at the time by the sentiment prevailing all over the country, among Democrats as well as Republicans. I had no use for them other than the fact that the Senator had written on that subject. I read his editorials with a very great deal of pleasure, because, as I stated, I regarded them as the ablest expositions of that subject at the time they were written. I can not recall any editorials in any paper that dealt as interestingly and with such ability as the Senator showed in the editorials which he has just read with the constitutional questions involved. I am only sorry the Senator denies responsibility for any of them in any way whatever or evades responsibility for them in any way whatever.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have denied no responsibility. On the contrary, I assume the full responsibility.

Mr. FORAKER. That is true. I recall to mind that the Senator in a conversation I had with him, as I understood him, did say that he did not write all the editorials.

Mr. PATTERSON. I did not write all of them.

Mr. FORAKER. I told the Senator then that I would never let that be made public, because it would detract greatly from the credit to which he was entitled.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is quite immaterial, as I suggested, whether I wrote all of the editorials or whether other people wrote them; nor would it add to the interest of the discussion if I were to discriminate and show which I wrote and which I did not write; but I said I was responsible for all of them, and I shirk no responsibility. I simply presented the state of the public mind at that time and what produced that state, for the purpose of showing that the public mind, then dark as to the truth, had greatly changed, in my judgment, since light had been shed upon the 'till then secret history of Philippine transactions.

The Senator from Ohio, as I said, read a portion of an editorial of December 7 and omitted the editorial of December 2. There were a number of editorials in January, not one of which did the Senator read, nor will I undertake to read them; but I will read short extracts from them to show my attitude and the attitude of the paper.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. Inasmuch as the Senator persists in calling attention to the fact that I did not read all of his editorials, I hope he will allow me to ask him—and I hope he will be kind enough to answer the question—whether or not I read anything that did not appear in his paper?

Mr. PATTERSON. You did not, certainly not; and as far as you read you read with absolute accuracy.

Mr. FORAKER. That is all right.

Mr. PATTERSON. In the editorial of January 7, 1899, this appeared:

> Whatever disposition we may make of the Philippines after the treaty is ratified, it is not consistent with national honor or reputation to allow ourselves to be driven out of them by Aguinaldo and his followers.

That was based upon the reports that were coming from the Philippines at that time, that Aguinaldo and his army were in an aggressive attitude, that the American Army was not strong enough to resist an attack, and that at any moment war as the result of the action of Aguinaldo and his army was imminent.

FURTHER EDITORIALS READ.

Then, again, I read from another editorial of January 11, 1899:

FILIPINOS AS ENEMIES.

> There is little doubt that the situation in the Philippines is ominous of danger. Aguinaldo and his followers are bent on trouble and determined not to recognize the authority of the United States. Our army at Manila, considering the force of the insurgents, is barely large enough to successfully maintain a defensive attitude, assisted by the guns of Dewey's fleet. It can not take the offensive, and for this the War Department must be held responsible. As soon as the Administration determined on the policy of holding all the Philippines it ought to have placed itself in a position to handle the forces of Aguinaldo in a prompt and vigorous manner. That it has not done so is evidence of the fact that it has been caught napping.
>
> It is undoubtedly true that this trouble has been stirred up by the agents and representatives of foreign governments, with Hongkong as the center of their plots. The idea has been to give the United States all the trouble possible and to compel it to inherit the rebellion with which Spain has been long contending. The conspiracy has succeeded, because of the general imbecility that reigns in the War Department. Whatever views may be held as to the policy of expansion and the future disposition to be made of these islands, one thing is certain, the United States can not afford to be driven out of them by a lot of half-armed, half-clad natives.
>
> Furthermore, if nations opposed to our entrance into the Orient have instigated this trouble in the hope thereby of preventing us from so doing, they have taken the best possible policy to unite public sentiment in favor of it. One disaster to our forces in the Philippines will raise a blaze of indignation in this country that will be hard to quench. To hand the islands over to the inhabitants with the gift of freedom, independence, and assured protection is one thing; to be driven out by force of arms is quite another.

Here is an editorial of January 12. These editorials simply reflect the public mind as it was molded by the censored telegraphic dispatches from the islands, which placed the American Army in a position of defense and the Philippine army in one of aggression; the American Army in constant and imminent danger of being attacked by the Filipino army and driven into the sea, and the Filipinos occupying an aggressive attitude.

> The Filipinos intrenched at Iloilo and those gathering near Manila could be immediately transformed into friends were Congress to attach to the treaty a declaration that it is not the purpose of the United States to permanently hold the Philippines, but simply to protect them until a stable government, republican in form, shall be adopted by their inhabitants, and that thereafter it would stand by them as a friend to protect them from the greed of other nations.
>
> The warfare made by the antiexpansionists is having marked results. FORAKER's plea for the President is one of them. They are tributes to the foresight, courage, and patriotism of Mr. Bryan. The work has been mainly done and the sentiment crystallized since his resignation from the Army, and the plain avowal that while he favored immediate ratification of the treaty, he would insist that the United States should hold the islands only until their inhabitants formed a stable government, and that we would protect it in its infancy.

SENATOR FORAKER EDITORIALLY DISCUSSED.

What I now read is an editorial written on the strength of the speech made by the Senator from Ohio in the Senate of the United States on the 11th of January, and it commences as follows:

> The most important utterance in the debate on the treaty began in the Senate is that of Senator FORAKER, made yesterday. He said that American occupation of the Philippines is but temporary. "I do not understand," he said, "that anyone desires anything but the ultimate independence of the Philippines—not the President, nor anyone in this Chamber."

That is how I first got acquainted with the Senator from Ohio—by reading in the dispatches of the day that wonderfully eloquent patriotic speech to which reference has often been made. He said: "American occupation of the Philippines is to be but temporary." I quote from his speech:

> I do not understand—
>
> He said—
>
> that anyone desires anything but the ultimate independence of the Philippines—not the President nor anyone in this Chamber.

Then the editorial continues:

> Senator FORAKER is close to President McKinley. When he speaks upon subjects of policy in which the President is involved he is regarded as speaking for the President.
>
> FORAKER himself is a red-hot expansionist. In the speech from which the quotation is made he maintained the constitutional right of the United States to obtain foreign territory and their populations by purchase, gift, or war, and to establish colonial governments over them. But, maintaining this, he declared that American occupation of the Philippines was "not to be permanent."

Then the editorial proceeds to eulogize the humane and statesmanlike attitude of the honorable Senator from Ohio.

The Senator from Ohio quoted some editorials printed in February. It was immediately after the fight of February 4, and it seems that I may very well talk about that to account for the attitude assumed generally by the press of the country immediately after that alleged attack occurred.

WHO MADE THE 4TH OF FEBRUARY ATTACK?

The Senators who were in this Chamber at that time will bear witness, those who were led to change from opposing the treaty to friendship for it will bear witness, that the news which came of the attack of February 4 was that it was a wanton, an unjust, and an unprovoked attack upon the American Army by the Filipinos. Mr. President, before I get through, when I reach that part of my remarks, I will undertake to demonstrate from official records, from the sworn testimony of American officers, from the situation as it then existed, that so far from the Filipinos having attacked the American Army on the 4th of February the attack was made by the Americans upon the Filipinos, and so far as one may judge by the circumstances of it the attack was brought on to so inflame the minds of Senators that enough Senators would be led to change their votes to secure ratification of the treaty.

I think I can demonstrate from the official records and from the sworn testimony of American officers, taking into consideration the situation as it was and the ends to be gained, that the attack was deliberate, and was made to secure the ratification of the treaty which, without the attack, could not in all human probability have been ratified.

Mr. President, let me read briefly the telegraphic dispatches that came giving to the country the account of that battle. On Sunday morning, February 5, this dispatch was printed broadcast over the country:

> WASHINGTON, February 4.
>
> President McKinley shortly before midnight received a report that the insurgents had attacked Manila.
>
> He was about retiring. He at once sent a cable to General Otis asking him for either a confirmation or denial.
>
> At this writing the President is awaiting a reply with his personal secretary, Mr. Cortelyou.
>
> This is the report:
>
> "MANILA, February 5 (Sunday morning).
>
> "The long-looked-for clash between the Philippine army and the American forces has occurred. The insurgents made an attack upon the city of Manila at 8.30 o'clock Saturday evening. They fired upon the outposts all around the city.

"At this hour, 9 o'clock Sunday morning, the fighting continues.

"The American troops have been successful in repelling the assault of the native troops.

"The cruiser Charleston, Monadnock, and gunboat Callao, which latter vessel was captured by Admiral Dewey during the war, are throwing shells into the insurgents' ranks north and south of the city, from which the severest attacks were made.

"The American wounded number 20 at this writing. The loss of the insurgents is not known, but is believed to be far greater.

"There has been no outbreak among the natives of the city. The American women in the city, wives of the officers and others, have been taken on board the United States transports.

"Spent balls from the insurgent lines are falling into the city.

"General Otis has the situation well in hand."

That was the first news the telegraph gave us of that fight. Then, on February 5, we have the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1.30 a. m.

The impression to-night is that the outbreak at Manila makes the ratification of the treaty with Spain a certainty. Strange as it may seem, there is a suspicion that the Filipinos have calculated on exactly the opposite result. They may have imagined that American popular sentiment would revolt against shooting down natives avowedly struggling for freedom. But while there may be considerable of such sentiment, there is no possibility that it will prevail against the feeling that the national honor requires the submission of those who have chosen the arbitrament of arms. In the words of the old toast:

"My country, may she always be right, but my country, right or wrong."

That expresses Washington sentiment. In other words, we shall have to whip the Filipinos, no matter what view we may have as individuals about the merits of their claims.

Here is another Associated Press dispatch:

CHICAGO, February 5.

A special from the Times-Herald from Washington says:

"Instructions will be sent to Major-General Otis to-morrow directing him to follow up his victory over the insurgents and to crush the power of Aguinaldo in the Philippines.

"This was the decision reached at an important Cabinet meeting held in the White House to-night, attended by the President, Secretaries Hay and Alger, Attorney-General Griggs, and Adjutant-General Corbin.

"It was further decided, now that Aguinaldo has thrown down the guantlet, that Iloilo shall be taken, and the islands of the archipelago occupied as rapidly and to the extent that General Otis's forces will permit."

Here is another Associated Press dispatch from the islands:

MANILA, February 6, 9 a. m.

The Filipinos have apparently reached the conclusion that the Americans mean business, now that the barriers are removed, as there were no further hostilities last night and no attempt was made to recover the lost ground. It is possible, however, that they are following the tactics they employed against the Spaniards and will merely lie off for a few days to recuperate their forces before returning to the attack.

It is impossible to ascertain as yet how the news has been received at Malolos, the seat of the insurgent government, but the Filipinos in Manila express the opinion that the movement for independence had received its death blow, and that annexation will soon be welcomed generally.

I read yet another Associated dispatch, dated Manila, February 5:

The following dispatch from General Otis was made public at 12.25:

MANILA, February 5.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL: Fourth of February insurgents opened attack on our outer lines at 8.45; repeated attack several times during the night; at 4 o'clock this morning entire line engaged; all attacks repulsed; at day break advanced against insurgents and have driven them beyond the lines they formerly occupied, capturing several villages and their defense works; insurgent loss in dead and wounded large; our own casualties thus far estimated at 175—very few fatal. Troops enthusiastic and acting fearlessly. Navy did splendid execution on flanks of enemy; city held in check and absolute quiet prevails. Insurgents have secured a good many Mauser rifles, a few fieldpieces and quick-firing guns, with ammunition, during last month.

OTIS.

1.30 A. M.

The following dispatch was received at 1.15 this morning:

MANILA, February 5.

To ADJUTANT-GENERAL:

Situation most satisfactory; no apprehension need be felt. Perfect quiet prevails in city and vicinity. List of casualties being prepared and will be forwarded as soon as possible. Troops in excellent health and spirits.

OTIS.

Mr. President, can there be any doubt as to what influenced the minds of the American people and the minds of some American Senators when the reports of the attack of February 4 came to them in such form, pictured at all times as a deliberate and unprovoked attack, as one prosecuted with fierceness and with determination, an attack which for the time placed the American lines in danger and made the heart of every American mother and sister and father throb with fear and anxiety? So far from that being the truth, as I will demonstrate, but not now, the attack was made by the Americans upon the Filipinos. The first shots were fired by American outposts.

RETURNS TO THE NEWS EDITORIALS.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. I dislike to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. It is only that I may understand the Senator. I have understood him to say that, beginning in November, 1898, he and his paper changed their attitude with respect to the acquisition of the Philippines, and did not after that time favor their acquisition and did not favor the ratification of the treaty until this attack was made.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no. I always favored the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh! Then I have been under a misapprehension. Notwithstanding, the Senator said a while ago he always continued an advocate of the ratification of the treaty. Therefore this attack on the 4th of February, whether made by the Americans on the Filipinos or by the Filipinos on the Americans, did not change the Senator's attitude with respect to the question of ratification?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no. If the Senator from Ohio understood it otherwise he was mistaken.

Mr. FORAKER. I did so understand it.

Mr. PATTERSON. To make myself clear, I will say that until the latter part of December I not only urged the annexation, but the retention of the Philippine Islands. After that time I urged the ratification of the treaty, but only that the United States dealing with the Philippine Islands as property of its own would give to the Filipinos their independence, set them up in government, and thereby do a grand and a noble deed.

Mr. FORAKER. I am still at a loss to understand the Senator's position. I understand him to be pointing out, with very great elaboration and detail, the nature of this conflict, and I understood him to be doing it for the purpose, as he certainly did announce in the course of his remarks, of showing why there was a change of attitude with respect to the ratification of the treaty and with respect to the whole question. Was there, or not, any effect—that is all I want to know—produced upon the Senator and his newspaper by this attack?

Mr. PATTERSON. There was——

Mr. FORAKER. Or did they continue the same?

Mr. PATTERSON. There was to this extent, as shown by the two editorials which the Senator from Ohio read. In view of the alleged unprovoked and unwarranted attack by Aguinaldo and the Filipino army upon the troops of the United States, I then felt and said that the American Army could not retreat from the islands until those who had assaulted it, as they were represented to have done, had been compelled to sue for peace.

Mr. FORAKER. That continued only, however, until the Senator got correct information?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; practically.

Mr. FORAKER. Has the Senator stated, and if not I suppose he will, when he got this better light and learned that he was imposed upon by the first advices from the Philippines?

Mr. PATTERSON. It was a long time, but so that there may be no misunderstanding, and I hope the Senator will not be required again to say that he is not intending or attempting to place me in an undesirable light before the Senate, but that he simply quoted those editorials for the purpose of showing how they would operate upon the mind of the Executive and also to create public opinion——

Mr. FORAKER. I have not said anything about not desiring to place the Senator in an unpleasant attitude in the Senate, nor about desiring to place him there. I have not, strange as that may seem, had in mind particularly the personality of the Senator. I have been endeavoring to discuss in a proper way a great question and to account for action that was assailed, and to account for it consistently with correct views as to men's transactions and governmental actions; that is all. If I ask the Senator for specific information on points upon which I understand him to be trying to inform us, it is not for the purpose of confusing the Senator or embarrassing the Senator; and if the Senator has any such idea I will not interrupt him again.

I only want to understand what it is that the Senator is saying. The Senator was making a point, and I was a little bit surprised, in view of the editorials I had read from his paper, to hear him make that point. I thought it was quite natural that I should desire to understand him correctly. To do so it was necessary that I should ask him the question. Perhaps I should have waited until the Senator's remarks were printed in the RECORD and then read them over, but we hurry along here so rapidly that I always find it very difficult to go back and read a Senator's speech. So I would rather understand it as he makes it.

MR. BEVERIDGE WANTS TO KNOW.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator, but now that he has been interrupted I wish to ask him a question. I assume that the Senator favored the policy of retaining the Philippine Islands for the large and statesmanlike reasons given in the editorials from his paper, read by the Senator from Ohio. He changed, he says. I now desire to know whether his change of opinion upon that great question of statesmanship, an opinion based upon the large reasons he gave, was merely because of the conflict between our forces and those of Aguinaldo at Marila?

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Indiana does not quite comprehend what I am saying.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the reason why I asked the question.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is probably my lack of clearness and not his lack of perception. What I say is that never after the early part of December, 1898, did I advocate, either in the paper or elsewhere, anything but the ultimate and immediate independence of the Filipinos.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. One moment. Let me get through with this sentence. But when there came to this country the false reports of an atrocious and unwarranted attack by the Filipinos upon the American army I said then that the United States could not afford to retreat from the islands, but that its first duty was to fight and defeat or compel the Filipino army to surrender; that in the face of the reported unwarranted and unjustifiable and villainous assault upon those who had been regarded as the deliverers of the Filipinos the army had to continue the struggle until the Filipino army was defeated. But that did not include, directly or indirectly, a suggestion that the Filipinos were not to have their independence, to have self-government, and to have the freedom for which they were struggling. I hope I make myself clear to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Colorado is very fortunate in the perspicuity of his remarks, but I submit that the Senator hardly meets the question I asked. He says he was for the retention of the Philippine Islands, and he gave some very comprehensive and very statesmanlike reasons why he favored that broad national policy. The question I asked of him was, in view of the fact that he changed his attitude and was explaining the change, whether that change, upon a great question of national policy, was caused merely by the incident of the beginning of the battle, or what did cause this change in the Senator's attitude concerning the retention of the Philippine Islands. I understand he has changed.

Mr. PATTERSON. There was no change in my attitude as to the retention of the islands. It was simply that the United States could not afford to stand before the world and be driven out of the islands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator want to retain them now?

Mr. PATTERSON. No; of course I do not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the reason——

Mr. PATTERSON. Yet if it were true that the Filipinos had assaulted the American Army and defeated it or endangered it, I would be to-day maintaining what I maintained then—that the United States could not afford to withdraw until the enemy sued for peace.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Simply because the Filipinos had begun the attack we should retain the islands? If they had not, you would give them up?

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator insists upon the use of the word "retain" with respect to the islands. In the Republican sense it means one thing; in the broad sense of not leaving the islands by being driven from them by force of arms it means another.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I used the word "retain," having taken it out of the Senator's mouth just a moment or two ago, when he used the word "retain." We can narrow the inquiry down to this: Did the Senator ever favor the retention of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. PATTERSON. I told you I did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do you now?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why?

AFTER THE BATTLE OF FEBRUARY 4.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can not now stop to answer the question. Before I get through the Senator will know.

It may be quite well enough to read the two dispatches, part of which was read by the Senator from Ohio, published in the News immediately after the fight of February 5, as these are all that even tend to show any change of attitude upon the subject. That of February 6 is as follows:

THE FIGHT AT MANILA.

No matter what individual Americans may think about the policy of expansion or the claims of the Filipinos to independence, the fight at Manila leaves us no other cause than to inflict summary chastisement upon those who have been rash enough to invite armed conflict with the Army of the United States. If the Filipinos had been sensible enough to behave decently and to appeal to the principles of liberty which are deeply implanted in the American heart, they would have created an increasing volume of sentiment in favor of granting them virtual if not complete independence at an early moment.

That was not read by the Senator from Ohio.

From the editorial of February 17 the Senator from Ohio read this extract:

The ratification of the treaty with Spain and the passage of the McEnery resolution have not solved the Philippine question. That is more perplexing to-day than it was the day that Admiral Dewey sailed into Manila Bay. It has been complicated by the action of Aguinaldo and his army of insurgents. First we broke the Spanish power in the islands, then we bought them. Now we are fighting with the natives to hold them. We could not withdraw from them without disgrace, no matter how much we might desire to do so. To be driven out is a very different thing from a voluntary evacuation.

It is only necessary to read from the two editorials which the Senator from Ohio quoted for the purpose of showing the real attitude of the paper from which he quoted.

Mr. FORAKER. Then the Senator's attitude, as expressed in this editorial, was due to the fact that he was, as he now thinks, imposed upon in regard to the opening of hostilities there—that is, he was of opinion at the time when the hostilities were reported that the Filipinos were the aggressors, and that now he is of the opinion, and proposes to demonstrate it, that, on the contrary, the Americans were the aggressors, and that it was part of the settled plan to make sure of the ratification of the treaty?

Mr. PATTERSON. I draw that inference.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes. Then I want to ask the Senator while he is doing that to explain to us why it was, for such is the fact, as I believe he will agree, that Agoncillo and Sixto Lopez, who were both here in this country at that time, the day before the fight commenced, left this country without anybody knowing at the time of their leaving and fled to Canada, where they were when the news came that fighting had commenced. In other words, does the Senator imagine that as a part of the American plan to bring about this conflict to effect the ratification of the treaty, they notified the representatives of Aguinaldo so that they could get out of the country before the commencement of the fighting which we were to precipitate?

Mr. PATTERSON. In the first place, the statement of the Senator from Ohio that these men fled to Canada is his conclusion.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator deny that they went to Canada?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator deny that they left Washington in a surreptitious way, in the nighttime——

Mr. PATTERSON. They may have gone upon a night train. I do not know.

Mr. FORAKER. And went to Canada by the most direct route possible, and never stopped even to check their baggage, hardly, until they got into Canada?

Mr. PATTERSON. Those are matters with which I am not familiar; but whatever significance the Senator or anybody else may attach to them, to those who had inside information it was perfectly apparent that from the date of President McKinley's proclamation of December 21, which General Otis changed, so fearful was he of the result of declaring the sovereignty of the United States over all the Philippine Islands, and that whatever opposition there was in the way of preventing its complete exercise should be swept aside—from that time until the fight of the 4th and 5th of February trouble was near at hand, and if the Filipino army did not give way it would be assaulted.

Whether that or anything else may have had anything to do with the reported surreptitious flight of the gentlemen to whom the Senator refers I do not know. I am simply stating facts.

Mr. FORAKER. I have called the attention of the Senator to it because it has always seemed to me to be practically a controlling fact upon that question, which nobody ever raised until long after the conflict began, because at that time everybody accepted the word of our officers, our generals, our representatives in the Philippines. But when their word was questioned and the facts of that time were recalled, it always seemed to me to be a controlling fact. That is why I called the Senator's attention to the fact that these representatives of Aguinaldo here in Washington should have left and gone by the night train, never stopping until they got out of the country and got safely into Canada, and did it just in time to be safely in Canada before the fighting commenced. It looked on the face as though they had notice of it.

FACTS WHICH SHOW THAT AMERICANS COMMENCED ATTACK OF FEBRUARY 4.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very small facts acquire great significance in the minds of some when they have some purpose to attain. Let that stand as stated by the Senator from Ohio until I come to the undeniable facts, and I may tell the Senator some of them now.

According to the testimony of General MacArthur, General Aguinaldo on the 3d of February had moved back at his command from a position that he occupied and did it cheerfully. On the 4th of February, at the request of General Otis, General Aguinaldo sent back into the American lines four Americans who had been detained by the Filipino forces. That was the attitude of Aguinaldo, according to the official reports, up to the very moment of the alleged attack. On the night of February 4, at half past 8 o'clock, a mere Filipino patrol consisting of four men, a guard that usually does police duty, was going toward the little town from which Aguinaldo's forces, on demand of General Otis, had retired the day before, probably looking for stragglers who had gone to the town during the day.

Then the American outpost fired upon them and killed 2. General MacArthur in his report tells of the occurrence. He says this Filipino patrol was approaching the American outpost. Being observed, they were twice commanded to halt, and not halting the Americans fired upon them and killed 2. In his testimony before the committee the General stated that the rule before firing was to command halt three times, and the language to be used was "Halt; who goes there?" Whether the 4 Filipinos or any of them understood English nobody knows. Then there was intermittent firing between the two lines until daylight, when the American lines were ordered to advance and the battle commenced. Both Generals MacArthur and Hughes testify that if there was an American soldier killed or wounded that night they have no knowledge of it. There is no report of a single casualty in the American army on the night of February 4. Since it is undenied that the first hostile act was the firing upon the patrol and killing 2 of the number, and no American soldier was killed during the night, and the Filipinos made no advance or attack, if there had not been an order to push a battle would not some explanation have been sought before the American lines were ordered to charge when daylight came? The battle thus commenced ended with the horrible result of 250 American soldiers killed and wounded and more than 3,000 Filipinos killed and wounded.

This is the true and the official story of that so-called attack by the Filipinos upon the American lines on the night of the 4th of February. No Filipino testimony was asked for. The testimony of no one was sought outside of the American Army. The details are given in the official reports of American officers and their testimony before the Committee on the Philippines.

ASSOCIATED PRESS ACCOUNT OF THE BATTLE.

Contrast, Mr. President, these facts with the stories that came to the American people through Associated Press dispatches upon February 5, 6, 7, and 8. One can hardly refrain from saying that there was a design behind it all. Somebody with a deep purpose had dictated the attack and shaped the character of the news. This treaty was hanging in the balance in the Senate. It yet lacked two votes of the requisite two-thirds, and when the vote came the day after the news of this alleged outrageous attack upon the American army, enough votes were changed as the result to ratify the treaty, and it was ratified by but 1 vote more than the requisite number. If a single vote given for the treaty had been cast against it it would have been defeated.

I take it, Mr. President, that if this was a case before a jury, and circumstantial evidence was to determine the jury's verdict, and the question was who commenced and was responsible for the 4th or 5th of February assault, that simply upon the testimony and reports of the high American officers alone the verdict would be that the Filipinos did not commence the assault, and that the Americans did.

There is one other fact that I might recall now. Both General Hughes and General MacArthur admitted that they knew the Filipinos were not ready for a fight; that on the night of February 4 their principal officers were far distant from the lines at Malolos, holding a conference, and that it was not their purpose to then make an attack. Then again: If the treaty had not been ratified, what a plight would President McKinley and his party have been left in. The President had declared the sovereignty of the United States over all the archipelago. He had ordered General Otis to assert and establish it against all opposition. Otis had been directed to take possession of all the islands and overcome whatever opposition existed to his doing so. Had the treaty not been ratified, McKinley and his party would have been the laughing stock of the country, if not of the world, for McKinley had ordered Otis to take possession of all the islands and overcome all opposition at a time when the United States had authority under the protocol only in the city, bay, and harbor of Manila. Had there been a failure to ratify the treaty, those orders would all have had to be undone. It would have been a case of marching up the hill and marching down again. So the treaty had to be ratified, and there was no way to bring that about except by precipitating the battle of February 4 or 5, and it was precipitated. It was but another case of American duplicity. This time it was practiced upon the American Senate and the American people, and not alone upon the Filipinos, as had so often been the case before.

It is idle to say, under these circumstances, that that awful fight, with its awful results, upon the night of the 4th and the morning of the 5th of February can be traced to the doors of Aguinaldo and his army.

SENATOR FORAKER FOR FILIPINO INDEPENDENCE.

But, Mr. President, in the reading of the editorials it appears that the Senator from Ohio made a speech upon January 11, 1899, and that the News quoted that speech and approved it and dwelt upon it. I wish to call attention to what further the Senator from Ohio said in that speech. I will not do it to show that the Senator from Ohio is inconsistent, but only to show what it was that led many persons who originally favored the retention of the Philippines to oppose their retention. Said the Senator from Ohio on January 11:

I am willing to trust the Administration—

That was the difference between the Senator from Ohio and myself. I had no Administration to trust—

I am willing to trust the institutions of this Government and the people of this Government to do justice by the Filipinos. I have no sympathy whatever, Mr. President, and I do not believe the Administration has, with the war which some people talk about making on Aguinaldo and his followers in their struggle for liberty and independence——

Mr. CARMACK. Whose language is that?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is the language of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. He said further in that speech:

and I have no sympathy whatever with the talk that is indulged in in some places about making war on Gomez and his followers who have been struggling for the liberation of Cuba.

Thus placing the struggle of the Filipinos on a par with the struggle of the patriots in Cuba, declaring that he had no sympathy whatever, and he did not believe the Administration had, with the war which some people talked about waging on Aguinaldo and his followers. In what? In "their struggle for liberty and independence."

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. This was, as the Senator has said, on the 11th of January, nearly a month before the fighting commenced, at a time when I really did not think there ever would be any fighting, but at a time when such papers as I quoted from the other day were talking about its being the duty of this Government to suppress all opposition and to resort to war if necessary. Some of the editorials from the News are directly in point. I did not have any sympathy with that kind of talk. I did not think it was necessary to have any war. I supposed we could get along without it. Later we had the war, and that changed the situation, and we have had to deal with it accordingly.

Mr. PATTERSON. On the 11th of January the proclamation of the President declaring the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippines, and commanding the American officers to sweep out of the way all who opposed that sovereignty, had been proclaimed and was public. It was that war that was being talked about. It was the express declaration that if Aguinaldo did not yield and depart from in front of the American Army, and if he stood by his attitude for the liberty and independence of the islands, war would be made upon him and the Filipino army. It was having in mind that condition that the Senator from Ohio said, "I have no sympathy whatever, I do not believe the Administration has, with the war which some people talk about making upon Aguinaldo and his followers in their struggle for liberty and independence."

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. The Spanish power was broken. The only opponent before the Filipino army was the American Army. The Filipinos were under arms there for liberty and independence. Certain elements in the United States were urging that the American Army attack the Filipino army, that its stand for independence might be defeated, and the Senator from Ohio said, "I have no sympathy whatever with the war which some people talk about making on Aguinaldo and his followers in their struggle for liberty and independence."

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator could not have made the quotation from my speech of January 11, 1899, that he has made, I take it, without consulting the RECORD; and if he did consult the RECORD, he must have found on the same page as that from which he quotes a quotation by me of the order of the President to which he referred. I give the order as an expression of the President's policy, to show that it is not the purpose of the Administration or of anybody connected with it to make war on the Filipinos. Therefore the Senator must have known that when I said I had no sympathy with the war that it was proposed to make on the Filipinos I could not have had reference to any declaration, official or otherwise, that President McKinley had made.

I call the Senator's attention also to the fact that he can not find in President McKinley's order any such language as that which he has purported to quote from it. There is nothing of that nature in it. All that President McKinley says is in the nature of an expression of our kindliness and good will toward the Filipinos, our desire to establish law and order and civil government, and then at the conclusion of it he uses this language, which is the only language that justifies the quotation the Senator has made:

In the fulfillment of this high mission, supporting the temperate administration of affairs for the greatest good of the governed, there must be sedulously maintained the strong arm of authority to repress disturbance and to overcome all obstacles to the bestowal of the blessings of good and stable government upon the people of the Philippine Islands under the free flag of the United States.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will demonstrate when I reach that proclamation——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will pardon me just one moment——

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator could not have read that proclamation, or else he would not make that statement.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will pardon me for one further moment, I want also to call attention to the fact, as I now recollect it—if I am in error about it, the Senator can correct me—that the Denver News called attention to this proclamation and commented on it with approval.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not recall whether it did or not. The Senator from Ohio can have it here to-morrow, if he desires it, or to-night, either.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know whether I can or not, for I sent for the paper and I found that the Senator from Colorado had it. If he will turn it over to me, I shall be glad to look at it.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator can read it carefully and prayerfully.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION OF WAR.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he thought the President's proclamation was consistent with his own ideas of liberty and independence for the people of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. FORAKER. Entirely so.

Mr. CARMACK. There the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me call the Senator's attention——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to wait just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Along with what the Senator has quoted from my speech of January 11, 1898, there should be quoted also as a part of the same statement made at he same time, as follows:

It is for the Congress of the United States to investigate and find out about the islands of the Philippines, what kind of inhabitants they may have, whether or not they are capable of government, and whether or not they want government or whether or not only a few want government.

What is the feeling of the population? You can not tell that in the short time we have had to deal with them. At least I have not been able to satisfy my mind about it. I hope in the near future to be able to do so, and I hope that in due course at no distant day we can act intelligently, and I know we will act justly.

That is the expression I used on that occasion.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have no doubt in the world but that the mind of the Senator from Ohio was not at that time altogether clear as to the character and the capacity of the Filipino people, and I have no doubt in the world but that he felt at that time that an investigation would throw light upon these important questions. But what had that to do with his unqualified declaration that "I have no sympathy whatever with the war which some people talk about making on Aguinaldo and his followers in their struggle for liberty and independence?"

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me? I had no sympathy then—I have not any now—with the war that was at that time being talked about. The Senator and I differ as to what happened afterwards when war did occur between the two peoples, and there we take our departures—he going his way, I going mine.

Mr. PATTERSON. The only war that was talked about was a war by the United States to deprive Aguinaldo and his followers of liberty and independence, and that was the war the Senator from Ohio had no sympathy whatever with. I might say to the Senator, as he said to me, that in later years, as he rereads and reflects upon that speech, he will be far prouder of it than he will be of those that have fallen from his lips since.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is quite at liberty to entertain that opinion. I have no objection to that. What I want to say about it is this: They had been struggling for their liberty and their independence from Spain, and at that time we had not yet, except only to commence, asserted any authority there. I had no idea at that time that there would be war, and said I had no sympathy with such talk as the newspapers were indulging in, and that I did not believe the Administration had any such sympathy. I did not dream of what was to happen. And yet we were compelled to talk about war; we were compelled to think of it. And later it came. Whether it was our fault or their fault, it did come; and when war came then the question thrust upon us was how we would deal with it; what would be our attitude; and I agreed with other Senators in the belief that it was our duty, before we undertook to deal with them otherwise, to restore law and order; to suppress insurrection; to assert our authority. And there has never been a minute from that day until this that I have not been willing, whenever we reached the point where we can do it with any assurance of satisfactory results or whenever the conditions are such as to warrant it, that we shall consider what is to be their ultimate condition; but as long as there is a war going on, until law and order are restored, until a government is established, I believe with the Denver News, as it expressed itself prior to November, 1898, and, as I think I can show, long after December, 1898, that it is our duty first to restore law and order, establish the government that we have set about establishing, and then we can determine what we shall do.

Mr. PATTERSON. I thank the Senator from Ohio for constantly referring to the Denver News. I have the assurance of the business manager that the notoriety it has given the paper has been a very large commercial advantage to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I note again with proper appreciation that the Senator's mind runs on commercialism to-day as it did when he was writing these editorials. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. There is one thing that the Senator from Ohio may be proud of. When he made the speech of January 11 his mind was not running on the commercial aspects of the case, but on the righteousness and the honesty and the patriotism of the question.

NO WAR THREATENED BETWEEN SPAIN AND THE FILIPINOS.

When the Senator from Ohio suggests that he had in mind the war for liberty and independence that the Spaniards were making against the Filipinos, I want him to bear in mind that when he made that speech that war had ended long before. Manila had been captured, the Spaniards had been sent back to Spain, there was not a single armed Spaniard left in the islands, and the Filipinos and Americans were in undisputed possession of the entire Philippine Archipelago. There was no more danger, Mr. President, of a hostile Spanish gun being fired then, no matter what the outcome of the treaty negotiations might have been, than there was of Spanish legions sailing to the United States to capture the city of Washington.

The only war that was spoken of was the war that seemed imminent between the American army upon the one side, which then occupied the very intrenchments that had been built and occupied by the Spaniards, and the Filipino army upon the other. It was that war the Senator referred to when he said he had "no sympathy whatever with the war which some people talk about making on Aguinaldo and his followers in their struggle for liberty and independence."

So, Mr. President, I regret on account of the high esteem in which I hold the Senator from Ohio that he even seeks or seems (I know he does not intend to do it) to evade the real meaning and scope of that magnificently patriotic utterance.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator unduly, and I do not like to suffer in the Senator's esteem. I rise only to tell him I have not taken any issue with him as to the war about which I was talking at that time. If he wants to say that it was not the war made by the Spanish upon the Filipinos, but a war that was to be made by somebody else to suppress the resistance of the Filipinos to our authority, he is exactly correct. They had been struggling against Spain for their liberty and their independence and my sympathies were with them; but when it became a struggle between the Filipinos and the United States my sympathies were with the United States, and they have been there ever since. They will be there until the last gun has been fired and the flag floats in triumph over all enemies of the country.

Mr. CARMACK. What then?

Mr. FORAKER. Then I am ready to talk business with them or anybody else, but not until then.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from Ohio be so kind as to tell the Senate what war he had reference to when on the 11th of January he said he had "no sympathy whatever with the war which some people talk about making on Aguinaldo and his followers in their struggle for liberty and independence?"

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I was talking about, as I said a while ago, the war that such newspapers as the Denver News were talking about making upon the Filipinos. In editorial after editorial we were told that our authority must be asserted and all resistance to our authority must be suppressed. That I was not talking about a war that was in contemplation to be made by President McKinley is evidenced by the fact that I quoted President McKinley's proclamation to show that his purposes were purposes of peace and had no thought of war.

WHAT AMERICAN GENERALS SAID ABOUT THE PROCLAMATION.

Mr. PATTERSON. Does the Senator know that General MacArthur when asked upon the witness stand what he understood by that order of President McKinley's, if the Filipinos did not get out of the way what it would be his duty to do, he said without hesitation it would have been his duty to drive them out of the way. Can there be any question——

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator asks me if I know. I have not read General MacArthur's testimony, but I think that anybody can know who reads President McKinley's proclamation that he did not have any thought about making war upon anybody. I do not think anybody here in the Senate, except only very few, seriously contemplated that there would be war. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] did. He talked in such a way as to indicate that he thought there was likely to be a clash.

Mr. HOAR. I did not want to mix in this discussion, but I am compelled to do so, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has referred to me, and as he has read some passages in regard to the President's purpose from documents before him. Will he read the sentence in President McKinley's proclamation which General Otis suppressed, and which he suppressed because he said if it was published it would bring on war, and which the next day—in fact, within a few hours—was brought out by General Miller, at Iloilo, and which Aguinaldo posted that night over all the walls of Manila, and replied, "If that is done we shall fight?" Will the Senator read that sentence from the President's proclamation?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know the sentence to which the Senator refers, but if the Senator does, I will gladly turn over to him the proclamation, and he can find it and read it.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the Senator had got it all in his mind.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I have not. If the Senator will point it out, I shall be glad to have him read it.

Mr. HOAR. If I understand the Senator, he says that President McKinley did not expect or desire war—I am not going to discuss that—but that he made a pacific proclamation and that nobody, except the Senator from Massachusetts, at that time thought there would be war.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, no; I did not say that. I said that if there was anybody that then expected war I thought it was the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, the Senator said that I was one of them.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought so.

Mr. HOAR. Before I had spoken in the Senate, when there had been no debate except a constitutional discussion by some Senator, which was merely on abstractions as to authority and international law in such circumstances, President McKinley sent a proclamation to General Otis and ordered him to proclaim it.

General Otis took a most extraordinary authority upon himself, for a general dealing with his superior, to suppress a sentence in that proclamation and to substitute for it what I understand to mean an assurance of independence and what I think the Filipino people understood to mean an assurance of independence. He did not use the word "independence," but he said that they should have that measure of liberty—which, to my mind, is the same thing—enjoyed by the freest provinces on earth or the freest countries on earth, or something of that kind. That he did. He thought—and he said he thought in his official report of what he had done—that if he had published the exact language of the President it would bring on war. If I remember the sentence aright, it was direction to go on and enforce the authority of the United States. That was not mere speculation, because General Miller, who was spoiling for a fight at Iloilo, as appears in his report, got the proclamation also and published it. So Aguinaldo had this declaration from Otis, apparently coming from President McKinley, that the Filipinos should have all the liberties of the freest provinces on earth, and apparently coming from President McKinley on the same day a direction to go on and subjugate them; and Aguinaldo thought that that proclamation, as originally written, was—and in my opinion it was—a declaration of war.

Aguinaldo took it so, and he immediately that night covered the walls of Manila with that proclamation of the President. He accompanied it with a statement that his people would fight.

THERE WERE PEACE AND ORDER THROUGHOUT THE ISLANDS.

The Senator says we are going to restore law and order. If I am not mistaken, there was not (except in those places amongst the mountains where the tribes are always barbarous) in the civilized and Christian portions of the Philippine Islands an inch of that country where law and order did not exist, except in the two camps, and there military law and military order existed. Everywhere, except close to Manila, there was orderly, peaceful self-government, recognizing the authority of Aguinaldo's constitution of a republic. In Manila there was, on the other hand, the order kept by the United States forces, and the two hostile armies were confronting each other outside of Manila.

Now, speaking for one, and deferring to the very great intellectual grasp of my honorable friend from Ohio—and I never pay mere compliments to anybody; and I say that with absolute sincerity—I can not understand how any intelligent man who will read that history can say or think that that was a war to restore law and order.

President McKinley and those who thought with him thought that we had lawfully bought sovereignty over that people, and it did not make any difference whether they practically affirmed their independence and got shaken off from Spain or not. They thought also that we had another title to rule them; that we had in war beaten Spain, who had formerly claimed to rule them, and we got possession of the islands as booty, and it was that title that President McKinley asserted and that Aguinaldo denied. That is what the war was begun for and it is what the war has been about ever since.

As the Senator referred to me, I have thought it proper to state my view here on that subject.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator certainly appreciates that I did not refer to him in any improper sense.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; I am sure of the kindness——

Mr. FORAKER. I simply desired to recall the events of that time.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say, if I may add one sentence, that I know, with as absolute knowledge as any man can know, the purity of purpose, the intellectual superiority, and the intelligence of my Republican friends who differ with me on this subject. I would rather lay my right hand down on the block and have it cut off by the executioner than have to say what I have had to say and what I say now on this subject; but I am so made by the Power that created my soul and intellect that I can not see this thing in any other way. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair admonishes the galleries that it is against the rules of the Senate either to manifest approval or disapproval of what is said on the floor of the Senate; and if the offense is repeated, the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Colorado will bear with me a moment——

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I rise more to say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] than for any other purpose, that he certainly must know that all Senators in this body, without regard to whether they are Democrats or Republicans, have for him only the highest regard and esteem. We esteem him and appreciate him not only for his ability, which is very great, but also for his most lovable character and disposition. Therefore, when we make reference to him in debate, no one ever does it except for legitimate purposes of debate. I am sure I am not the only one who can say that, but that every Senator here can say it.

I referred to the Senator only because I remembered that when I was making a speech on the 11th day of January, 1898, I had a very interesting colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts, and I remembered also while he was sitting there and looking at me, that he had made a speech only two or three days before to which I was in part replying when the colloquy started, and recalling all those matters, I remembered that he did seem at that time to fear that there would be war in the Philippine Islands, and that there would be a clash such as some of the newspapers had been talking about. I did not fear it at that time. I had no sympathy with that idea. I say I did not anticipate that there would come a clash, but I believed as others did when the clash did come that the Filipinos were at fault and that it was precipitated without any provocation to justify it. I believed that then, and I believe it still. Inasmuch as they precipitated that clash, and war was the result of it, necessarily the whole situation was changed and since then we have had to deal with it as a condition that was changed by their action, and war has obtained there ever since. It is idle to talk now about the conditions that then obtained with a view of getting a criterion for what we are to do under the changed conditions.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

GENERAL OTIS'S TESTIMONY.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, General Otis was examined before the Philippine Committee with reference to the changes he made in the President's proclamation. He argued that it was not a proclamation which was sent to him by the President, but simply a letter of instructions, and that he had a right to use that as a basis and change the language as he pleased. In the course of the examination he spoke of the word "sovereignty" as having a meaning attached to it by certain Filipinos that conveyed an offensive idea to them. The examination upon that question proceeded somewhat as follows, if the Senator from Colorado will excuse me for reading a little of it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

[The quotations which Senator CARMACK read from General Otis's testimony will be found in the appendix.]

Mr. CARMACK. I beg pardon of the Senator from Colorado for consuming so much time, but I wanted to get these facts before the Senate, with his permission.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the time has been very well occupied, because just that portion of the testimony is needed for historical accuracy.

I will not dwell longer upon the consistency or inconsistency of the Senator from Ohio.

But, Mr. President, changes about that time were not at all infrequent. The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] in his very strong and able speech the other day referred to a change of heart that he placed upon the plane of the miraculous. That I may not be misunderstood, I will quote directly from the Senator's speech, and you will see, Mr. President, that we have changes both ways. We have changes upon the part of some who at one time believed in the Declaration of Independence, that all men are created equal and that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, to the dogmas of imperialism. Changes from the cardinal doctrine of individual liberty and national independence to the proposition that no man is entitled to liberty except that which is conceded to him and that all powers in government are derived from the consent of the strongest.

ANOTHER AND DIFFERENT CONVERSION.

That seems to have been the character of a conversion upon the part of the gentleman whom the Senator from Iowa named in the very graphic description he gave of the event. The Senator said:

> To Governor William H. Taft, more than to any other man, belongs the credit of this benign interpretation of the national policy.
>
> Unlike my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], who does me the honor to listen to me this moment, he was not an original enthusiast on the acquisition of the islands. The President sent for him, and he carelessly boasted, before he had had an opportunity to see him, that he had not the slightest intention of going into any such business. He was judge of a circuit court of the United States, and before him there was a prospect clear as day to sit in the Supreme Court of the United States. He said he was opposed to the policy, and knew nothing about it, and cared nothing about it. He thought it was a blunder and a course of political stupidity.

He referred to the policy then being pursued by the Administration in the Philippine Islands. Then the Senator from Iowa continued:

> President McKinley pressed his duty upon him. He was five hours in the President's private apartments, and when he came out he had been over the road to Damascus, a road which Victor Hugo says every man must travel who looks to any great achievement in this world, for he himself told me that in those five hours he received an altogether new revelation of the significance of a man's relation to the world in which we are living. And so, easily and happily, he turned his back on the emoluments of a great profession, laid aside the ambitions of a great career, gathered his wife and children about him, and went out from among his kindred and his countrymen to become the servant of a strange people in their blind struggle toward a larger and a better opportunity.

It will be admitted, Mr. President, that the conversion of Governor Taft occupied a much longer time than did the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. Saul was on the road to Damascus, and in the highway a great light shone about him and he fell to the earth. He was converted, and from that good moment his service was given to the Lord. He went about in poverty and hunger; he endured privation and peril; he was put in jail; he visited all parts of Asia and went to Europe, responding to the Christians' call from Macedonia. In the end he was beheaded. But Governor Taft's conversion required five hours spent in the private apartments of the President. As a result of that conversion he stepped out of an official position that brought him but $6,000 a year into one that brought him $20,000 a year and a palace to live in at Malacabang.

There could not have been a wiser selection for that position than Governor Taft. He is a diplomat in every sense of the word, plausible, with wonderfully developed social qualities, extremely well read, and with a large amount of worldly experience. Naturally, in my opinion, he is a man with a kindly heart; but I am inclined to the belief that he went upon a mission in which his heart was not; for if he went into the President's private apartments opposed to the policy of imperialism and came out at the end of five hours professing different views, I can not conceive how a change from an abiding faith in the Declaration of Independence, in liberty and independence for every people, to the tyrannical doctrines of imperialism could have been honestly produced. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I believe that if Governor Taft were removed from the position in the Philippines he occupies, the greatest bulwark that exists against yet greater oppressions and outrage being imposed upon the Filipino people than they have been compelled up to this time to endure, would be removed.

ABOUT GOVERNOR TAFT'S CONVERSION.

I am positively glad that Governor Taft has returned to the Philippines, that his personality and his humanity and natural desire for justice may continue to interpose between those poor people and those who would treat them as beasts of the field. I simply refer to this for the purpose of showing that men are men, that few men are angels, and that conversions may sometimes come from other than a desire to unselfishly work out the Master's will.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Speaking about the conversion of Governor Taft, the Senator has no doubt now that Governor Taft is thoroughly converted, as he says, to the policy the Senator has announced. I ask the Senator that question.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know what that has to do with this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will show you in a moment.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator can proceed, if he will not occupy too much time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not occupy very much of your time. Does the Senator now think that Governor Taft is for the policy which he is upholding?

Mr. PATTERSON. My opinion is that Governor Taft would do everything in his power to make the policy he has adopted win. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The point I was getting at is this, and that is the reason why I asked the question.

The Senator has spoken about the conversion of Governor Taft. He was quoting the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] as saying that before Governor Taft's conversion he knew nothing about the policy and was against it, but now that he has informed himself by two years' of experience he does know something about the policy and is for it.

Mr. PATTERSON. As the result of that five hours' interview I have no doubt in the world that Governor Taft went to the Philippine Islands determined to do his best to make the Administration policy a success. It would not be possible that a man of Governor Taft's standing, no matter what his real views were, would undertake a mission without a full determination to do everything in his power to make that mission successful.

Mr. McCOMAS. Am I to understand that the Senator would have us believe that Governor Taft, moved by the hope of a larger salary and of living in a palace, changed his mind? Does the Senator say he did not change his mind seriously and honestly?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know.

Mr. McCOMAS. You said something. Do you mean that thing or the other thing?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have simply read the eloquent account of his conversion given by the Senator from Iowa—that he came to Washington opposed to the President's policy; that he went to the private apartments of the President and was there five hours, and in the mean time had passed over the road to Damascus.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator now says he is speaking of the statement of the Senator from Iowa. Both the Senator from Colorado and I heard Governor Taft's statement on that subject. I now ask the Senator whether he means to state here that Governor Taft, for hope of increase of salary and the chance to live in a palace, changed his mind and did not honestly change his purpose.

Mr. PATTERSON. Many things may have operated to influence his mind.

Mr. McCOMAS. Do you mean that that did?

Mr. PATTERSON. The questions that are involved in the Philippine question are great and fundamental.

Either the doctrine that all just powers are derived from the consent of the governed is true or else it is a despicable fallacy. And when men permit their minds to be changed from a position sustaining a fundamental truth to one that is its opposite and that even its own friends are not enthusiastic over, we ought to be forgiven if we do not immediately admit that it was purely a matter of conviction, and that for that conviction they would be willing even to enter the dens of wild beasts and suffer martyrdom.

Mr. McCOMAS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator further, but I am glad he stopped short of making what I would consider and what I think the American people would consider a very unworthy imputation upon an able and a sacrificing man. I am glad that the Senator from Colorado, unlike others who abuse the Army, still stops short in terms in saying of Governor Taft, with his long service and his great and splendid career, that he had, for the hope of living in a palace and an increase of salary, changed his mind and his plan and his conviction.

Mr. PATTERSON. That was the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland and not mine.

ATTACKS UPON THE ARMY.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Maryland says the Senator from Colorado is unlike other Senators who have abused the Army. Who on this side has abused the Army?

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator will examine the RECORD and will read the speeches, including that of the Senator himself, I think he will find it.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator will find a number of false statements and false accusations to that effect from others. He will not find any abuse of the Army uttered by any Senator on this side of the Chamber or of its officers or its men.

Mr. McCOMAS. Of its officers?

Mr. CARMACK. You will find no abuse; you will find some just accusations against some of its officers.

Mr. McCOMAS. Against Chaffee and Funston and all the generals in the Army, nearly.

Mr. CARMACK. Not nearly all by a great deal.

Mr. McCOMAS. A great many of them.

Mr. CARMACK. Several of them; yes, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. And by the Senator from Tennessee——

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. In the RECORD.

Mr. CARMACK. In the RECORD. You will find it there and you will find it there again.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then the Senator confirms my statement.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator has spoken about Senators upon this side abusing the Army. There has not been a single Senator on this side who has abused the Army.

Mr. McCOMAS. Take the speech of the Senator from Tennessee and several other speeches.

Mr. CARMACK. And I say it is not true.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the RECORD——

Mr. CARMACK. I say that is not true.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the RECORD will bear out the exact verity of my statement.

Mr. CARMACK. The RECORD will prove that the statement of the Senator is not according to the truth.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will convict the Senator by his own statement.

Mr. CARMACK. I will convict the Senator by——

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator is rash, and is not speaking what is true by the RECORD.

WHAT GENERAL CHAFFEE SAID.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. I will yield to my amiable friend the Senator from Idaho, who can never be disturbed. His equilibrium is always perfect.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland if he thinks General Chaffee abused the Army, according to the Associated Press report which came to us this morning?

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the Army is safe in the hands of General Chaffee, and if the discipline of the Army is left to him and other good officers it will not be overdone and supervised in bad temper on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS. My judgment is that General Chaffee has said more severe things about the Army, according to the Associated Press dispatch which appears in the morning paper, than has been said by anyone on this side of the Chamber—that it is the blackest page in our history, and that the officer ought not to have obeyed the order.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does not the Senator from Idaho think that he is the man who may well say it; and may we not trust him and others, after that dispatch, to uphold the good name of the Army?

Mr. DUBOIS. I quite agree with that in a measure, and I do not think that General Chaffee villifies or abuses the Army——

Mr. McCOMAS. No; he did not.

Mr. DUBOIS. Any more than Senators did who called attention to flagrant acts of violence committed by individual members of the Army under orders issued by a general of the Army.

Mr. McCOMAS. He said of one brave man that he had erred while sick. He made an excuse for him, but still he made an error. Chaffee will do his duty.

Mr. PATTERSON. It seems to me Senators on this side of the Chamber ought not to deprive those upon the other side of the only refuge left to them when under an order of the Senate an investigation was commenced and witnesses gave testimony before the committee that has startled the country, to the discredit of certain men connected with the Army. Republican Senators at first denounced the barbarisms, but instead of continuing to unite with good men of all parties in denouncing them, they conclude that it may be of greater political advantage to turn upon this side of the Chamber and charge us with abusing the Army, hoping thereby to close the ears of old soldiers and the later ones to the truths that they realize are scandals upon the Army of which they themselves once were brave and honored members and of which they are justly proud, to induce them, from prejudice, to forego the good name of the Army for political advantage.

I think our friends upon this side of the Chamber should be quite willing to extend to those upon the other side the last and the only refuge in such a case when the purpose they have in view must be regarded as a little ignoble.

I simply alluded to the conversion of Governor Taft and its circumstances to show that men stopped short of being angels, and that strong and good and worthy men sometimes change their positions even when it might seem to be to their great personal advantage to do so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask my honorable friend the Senator from Colorado whether what he just read about Governor Taft and the remarks he has made do not show this, rather: That when he knew nothing about the policy he was against it; when he learned all about the policy he was for it?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does it not show——

Mr. PATTERSON. I have too much regard for Governor Taft's intelligence and public spirit and knowledge of what is going on in his own country to suppose for a single instant that when he went to the President's Mansion he was not familiar with common public history. No, Mr. President; for Governor Taft's credit I am bound to assume that he had full knowledge of what the President's policy was, and, knowing the policy he opposed it, and then, induced by the President, he changed his views and became an aider and abettor of his Administration in the Philippines.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The question is, Does he know more about the policy now than he did when he was against it?

Mr. PATTERSON. To suggest that he does not would be even a greater outrage upon the intelligence of Governor Taft.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He does.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is a suggestion which would impugn Governor Taft's intelligence.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He does, then——

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, I ought not to be asked to answer——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He does know more about the policy than when he opposed it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am glad the Senator recognizes it and announces it officially.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very good. It comes down to the point that when he was not personally familiar with the situation he was against the policy, and when he had personal familiarity with the policy he is for it.

Concerning the intelligence of Governor Taft and those who take his view of the policy, I will say to the Senator that he seems to confuse the word "intelligence" with agreement with the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. The matter is too unimportant for the Senator from Indiana or me to consume much time over it. I have said all I wanted to say about it, and, as I said before, I formed a great admiration for Governor Taft, and all I want to add now is that he stops far short of being an angel. He is not quite ready for translation, as my friend from Iowa would have had it appear in his very eloquent description of the conversion.

I am sorry the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is not here. He indulged with the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Ohio in the merriment I have referred to, and I want to say a few words to him. Perhaps before I conclude he will be here.

Mr. President, I feel quite tired, and I should like permission to proceed to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I do not desire to press the Senator, if he is now feeling tired. I do not know whether there is any other Senator who cares to go on at this late hour.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will go on to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. There is no one on our side to speak except the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is prepared to speak when the Senator from Colorado concludes. There is no one else on this side.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if no one else cares to speak and the Senate is not too much fatigued, I should like to make an inquiry which I intended to make at the conclusion of the reading by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] of General Otis's testimony, but I was unfortunately called from the Chamber, and when I returned the Senator had concluded and the Senator from Colorado had resumed the floor and I did not care to interrupt then.

The Senator from Tennessee read his examination of General Otis when he was before the Philippine Committee as a witness as to why he had made any changes and the extent to which he made changes in the order or proclamation, whatever we are to call it, issued by President McKinley on the 21st of December, 1898. The pertinency of the question I want to put is due to the fact that I understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to say that that was really a cause of war, and I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that that could not mean anything else than war, or words to that effect.

I am not trying to quote the language. Assuming that I am correct in stating what I understood, that that was the meaning of what they said, I want to ask the Senators this question: If it was in the mind of the President, when he issued that order or that proclamation, thereby to make war upon the Filipinos and to bring about the conditions that have since obtained, why was it that the general, through whom he promulgated the order, should have so amended it as to remove from it, as far as he could, every expression and every word that in his opinion would be obnoxious to the Filipinos? It seems to me that if the President was issuing an order with a view to making war, with a view to creating hostile sentiment and feeling and hostile action, the general in command of the army where the fighting was to be done would have had some intimation of it, and that he, furthering that purpose of the Administration at Washington, certainly would not have tried to remove from the order the vexatious and aggravating expresssions to which attention has been called, if there are any such.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose——

Mr. FORAKER. I am not asking in a controversial spirit, but I simply want to learn the mental processes by which the conclusion announced has been arrived at.

Mr. HOAR. Of course nobody likes to go very far into the question what was the motive in another mind, even so exalted an intelligence as that of the late President McKinley, and possibly this question which the Senator now puts might receive a different answer on more careful reflection and inquiry. But as at present advised I suppose President McKinley did not expect any considerable forcible resistance. I suppose at that time he thought the order to go on and reduce that people to our authority would be yielded to. It was, as the Senator will agree with me certainly, if he believes them a civilized people, believing themselves entitled to independence and believing themselves to have achieved it, a delaration of war. Such a declaration made by France after the British treaty of 1783 would have been instantly followed by a declaration of defiance and hostility.

I suppose that President McKinley at that time underestimated the power of purpose of the Filipino people. General Otis knew it better, and he saw that what the President meant only as an order to compel submission would result in a very different way. He did not at that time want a fight, I suppose. General Miller, it is notorious, did. He had been saying in his letters "Let us attack now, for these people are every day getting stronger and stronger in front of me, and I should like an order to attack at once." He saw the point, and he instantly made known the proclamation. Whether you call it an order or a proclamation it was something intended to be made public.

Now, that belief of mine about President McKinley's intention at that time—I give it for what it is worth and perhaps somebody may produce something which will show I am wrong—is confirmed by the very significant testimony of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who says in his recent article that he was at the White House; I do not remember the exact day, but just about that time; probably after the proclamation had left; I am not sure about that, but shortly before the hostilities came about. He said to President McKinley: "You will be shooting these men within thirty days." President McKinley turned to a gentleman who was present at the interview and said: "Mr. Carnegie does not understand the situation the least in the world. These Filipinos think we are their best friends, and in thirty days there will not be"—I am not giving the language, but only the substance—"a vestige of opposition there."

That is my answer to the question which I understand the Senator from Ohio to put to me. The President said, "These people must submit," and he made this proclamation to them that they had to. General Otis said, "They will not submit, and the only way to keep the peace is to tell them we are going to give them their independence," or whatever the language means. So he suppressed it. Miller produced it, and Aguinaldo met it with an instant, angry, and spirited defiance.

Mr. FORAKER. The proclamation of President McKinley, referred to, issued on the 21st day of December, 1898, was transmitted to the Philippine Island, before it was promulgated in the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Of course.

Mr. FORAKER. But it was published in the United States as early as about the 2d of January. The New York Journal had an editorial on it in its issue of January 6, 1899.

Mr. HOAR. It was published or made public in the Philippine Islands on the 7th of January.

Mr. FORAKER. What is that?

Mr. HOAR. The date of General Miller's publication of it, unless I am mistaken, was the 7th of January; perhaps it was the 6th. There was Aguinaldo's reply to it, and then came war.

Mr. FORAKER. The only point I want to make about it all is this: If Senators think that proclamation was intended by President McKinley to aggravate and arouse the Filipinos to a spirit of resistance——

Mr. HOAR. I do not.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not understand how they can reconcile it as consistent with the action of General Otis, the commanding general there, through whom it was promulgated, in eliminating what he thought might be offensive words or phrases.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think so the least in the world.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts thinks either that President McKinley had a thought of stirring up strife in the Philippines when he issued that proclamation.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think he did.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator from Massachusetts—for I know his spirit of fairness—will agree with me when I say that President McKinley had but one thought in issuing that proclamation, and that was to disarm all who were distrustful, to give them assurance that they would be fairly and generously and kindly dealt with, and that there would be no resort to force, no employment of power, except only such as might be necessary to maintain order and suppress disturbance. There was no occasion for anybody to be talking about war.

Mr. HOAR. I entirely agree that that was President McKinley's feeling——

Mr. FORAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOAR. So far as I know and believe. But there was one thing he did not appreciate. He thought we had a right to make those people submit, and he undervalued the spirit of liberty in that people, and did not understand any more than some Senators in this Chamber have understood the fact that that is a principle which is born in humanity everywhere.

Mr. FORAKER. Whether or not President McKinley made a mistake of judgment I do not propose to discuss. I rose merely for the purpose of ascertaining a fact, and that was whether or not we are to understand that the charge is made that that war was brought on in a way for which President McKinley is directly responsible, and that the first overt act, the declaration of war, for that expression has been employed here, was in this proclamation of December 21, 1898.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment until I conclude the sentence, I will yield.

It has always been my understanding, and I have not any question at all but that I am right about it, that President McKinley had no thought whatever of exciting hostility or of making war when he issued this proclamation, but that, on the contrary, he was inviting the confidence of that people. He may have proceeded in a mistaken way, but as to his purpose, as to his motive, there can not be any question, for nearly every Senator here now who was a member of this body at that time knows of his own personal knowledge that nothing was further from the mind and purpose of President McKinley than to bring about any kind of a conflict or clash of authority in the Philippine Islands. He was, by issuing this proclamation in anticipation of the ratification of the treaty, inviting the Filipinos to trust to our authority and to await our action in confidence that they would be properly and justly dealt with. If they had done so, a very different chapter might possibly have been written. Nobody can tell as to that. That is all speculation. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. In the course of my remarks I did not say a word about President McKinley or what was in President McKinley's mind at the time the proclamation was issued. It was issued very early in January. It was on February 4 that the attack was made to which I directed both my attention and my remarks. The treaty had been signed by the commissioners in Paris at the time of the issuance of this proclamation, and as I understand it, the treaty was then before the American Senate. I doubt if it was clearly understood what the mind of the American Senate was at that time upon the treaty. I am inclined to think, although I was not a member of the Senate, that there were many executive sessions in which the treaty was discussed in secret, and in which much information pro and con was given, and that much enlightenment resulted.

I fully agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that in all human probability when President McKinley issued that proclamation he did it under the impression, at least in the hope, that the Filipinos, recognizing the power and the purpose of the United States not only to claim sovereignty over the islands but to exercise it and to do whatever might be necessary to secure it, would not oppose what must have seemed to the Filipinos and to President McKinley the inevitable outcome. Resistance to the proclamation meant war, as a matter of course. There was no doubt about that. So the commanders of the American army in the Philippines clearly recognized, and they so said.

But President McKinley probably did not expect war. He hoped there would be no war. What he desired at that time was to secure recognition upon the part of Aguinaldo and his army of the sovereignty of the United States, clear and undisputed, over their islands. Not anticipating and not believing, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, that the spirit of liberty and the desire for independence were as deeply planted in their hearts as subsequent events have demonstrated, he issued the proclamation and took the chances, hoping that it would be recognized and acted upon. But as time went on, as the struggle grew fiercer in the Senate—I have no idea that President McKinley was a party to it, and I can not say that it is so except as I am impressed with a pretty strong belief—there were influences at work which brought about that conflict just at that particular time, when so much was in the balance, and when but one result could follow and that result did follow. That is the view I take of it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, my object is accomplished. I only wanted to have an explicit understanding to the effect, if Senators agreed with me, as I thought they would when their attention was called to it, that the proclamation or order of President McKinley was not issued as a declaration of war on the Filipinos, and it was quite a mistaken view for anybody so to regard it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question just there.

Mr. FORAKER. Well.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator if, in his judgment, whether it was so intended by President McKinley or not, it would not be accepted by any brave and spirited people who conceived themselves entitled to their independence as a declaration of war?

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I do not know how people would regard it.

Mr. HOAR. If that had been made to the people of Ohio, being a people, or the people of the United States by any other power on earth, would not the Senator have resented it as a declaration of war?

Mr. FORAKER. It would depend, in the case put by the Senator, entirely on circumstances and conditions. The circumstances and conditions and facts obtaining in the Philippines at the time when the President issued the proclamation must determine whether or not he was justified in issuing it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be good enough to state any conceivable condition in which if that declaration were made to the people of Ohio, he being alive, would not have been resented as a declaration of war?

Mr. FORAKER. No such condition as that which obtained in the Philippines at the time when this proclamation was issued could be thought to exist under any conceivable circumstances with respect to the people of Ohio. But if the Senator wants to know a condition under which it might be issued where a people would not have a right so to regard it, I point him to the case of the Philippines. The Filipinos had no right whatever, in my judgment, so to regard this proclamation, and all the leading Democratic papers in this country, as well as the leading Republican papers, so declared at the time, for they nearly all praised it as an appropriate and opportune action on the part of the President. I was going to read just one expression which is characteristic of all of them. The New York Journal on the 6th day of January, 1899, speaking of this proclamation, said:

> President McKinley's proclamation to the people of the Philippines, through General Otis, ought to insure their hearty cooperation in our work of regeneration. * * *
>
> It is beyond reasonable doubt that the inviting prospect of peace, order, liberty, and prosperity under the American flag will be welcomed with joy by the masses of the Filipinos.

Mr. HOAR. But that is the proclamation with the suppressed passage out. It came out here first, and they did not get the real one until later.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not the proclamation with the suppressed passage out, but the proclamation as issued.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. The proclamation was published in this country as the President issued it, and the copy I am reading from was attached——

Mr. HOAR. What is the date?

Mr. FORAKER. December 21, 1898. I was about to say it is attached to the speech I made in the Senate on the 11th day of January. We had it under discussion here as early as the 6th day of January. It was given out here in Washington just as the President issued it. That identical proclamation was issued by the President, received the approbation of the New York Journal and of nearly all the papers that I quoted from the other day, representing, I think, the best Democratic thought in this country. They thought it a wise and opportune action on the part of the President.

But, Mr. President, the point I wanted to get at was to secure what I understand I have secured—an explicit admission from those with whom I do not agree about the Philippine question that this proclamation of the President was not a declaration of war, intended so on his part, but that it was issued in good faith for the purpose of promoting and making sure that we would have no war.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not like his word "admission" very well.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, put it "concession."

Mr. HOAR. I do not like the word "concession" very well. When I am talking about President McKinley anywhere I do not "admit" or "concede" that he meant to do what he thought was right; I affirm it.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator has said now more than I asked him to say.

Mr. HOAR. I have said it a great many times.

Mr. FORAKER. I said "admit" or "concede" simply because the Senator referred to it as a proclamation of war by the President, and I wanted the Senator to recall that. I wanted him to admit that it was not a declaration of war. Now he affirms that it was not a declaration of war. With that I am very well satisfied.

Mr. HOAR. My friend misunderstands me again.

Mr. FORAKER. No; within the intention of the President.

Mr. HOAR. That is another point. I say that, according to the law of nations, according to the practice of all civilized men, according to the practice of all brave nations who are not civilized, such a statement of a purpose to enforce submission in whatever phrase you put it is a declaration of war, coming from another nation. That I affirm. I think that President McKinley did not believe they were a brave and spirited nation capable of that emotion, and therefore he did not mean it as a declaration of war. If he had believed it, what Otis believed when he suppressed it, he would not have made it. Now, I do not like to be spoken of as admitting or conceding, as if something were forced out of me.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I recall those words.

Mr. HOAR. What I have said I have said forty times before.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not any disposition at all to put the Senator in an attitude that he does not like. I only want it understood that no one here is charging President McKinley with intentionally issuing a declaration of war.

Mr. HOAR. That is true.

Mr. FORAKER. But his purpose was just the opposite of it. Everybody knows that, and I think everybody ought to concede it.

Mr. PATTERSON. But, Mr. President, I think it will be admitted, even by the Senator from Ohio, that the effect of that proclamation was, no matter with what purpose it was issued, if the Filipinos did not submit to that asserted sovereignty then war must inevitably follow. Either it was an idle declaration not to be enforced by the American Army or it was a declaration which meant what it said, that the officers to whom it was addressed shall see that sovereignty is recognized and that armed opposition to it is gotten out of the way.

Mr. FORAKER. That is a different proposition, which I am not discussing. I want to understand whether or not the motive of President McKinley is assailed or whether it is conceded or affirmed to be what I affirm it to be.

Now, that being the case, the further fate of this order is pointed out to us by the testimony given before the Commission as to what was done when it fell into the hands of General Otis. The Senator from Tennessee has made us familiar with that. He has shown that when General Otis acted with respect to this order some time in January, after it had been received at Manila, he eliminated from it every word or expression that he thought could give any offense or any excuse for hostilities. I suppose in view of that Senators will agree that we may all affirm that General Otis was not trying to use this order so as to make war, but that his purpose was to purchase peace instead. I want to know when the war commenced.

Mr. HOAR. But the trouble was, if the Senator will pardon me, that General Otis put into it a declaration absolutely inconsistent with the language he had suppressed. Both went to the Filipino people at the same moment, and they said, as far as our President is concerned, "Of course these people are not dealing with us in good faith; this general tells us we are to have all the privileges that belong to the most favored peoples on earth, all the liberty, which, of course, includes independence in the ordinary estimate of man, when he has got an order from the ruler of his people in his pocket saying that we are to be subjugated." That is the trouble. Further (and this confirms what my honorable friend said, that President McKinley did not mean a declaration of of war, which I join him in affirming), President McKinley showed that he did not mean it, because he did not reprove or rebuke Otis for the act, but he quietly acquiesced in it.

Mr. CARMACK and Mr. PATTERSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PATTERSON. Who has the floor?

Mr. FORAKER. I have had the floor. The Senator from Colorado suspended for the day, I understand.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is right.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I took the floor and I have been trying to hold it ever since. I do not care how many interruptions there are, but of course I can not yield to more than one at a time.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Ohio is right.

Mr. FORAKER. I only want to say one word in answer to the Senator from Massachusetts. I do not understand that General Otis put into this proclamation by the President anything that was inconsistent with the text. The Senator used the expression that he inserted phrases which were inconsistent. If he did, I remain to be corrected. I am not aware that he did. Certainly he has never admitted that he did, so far as I know.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. He struck out the declaration saying that our generals were to go on and reduce them to submission. I have not got the words, but that is the substance. And he put in instead a declaration that they were to have all the liberties which were enjoyed by the most favored people.

Mr. FORAKER. I have that order.

Mr. HOAR. I have not the language, but that is the substance of it.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts he will not find in the order the President issued any such direction to our generals.

Mr. HOAR. No; but that is the substance of it.

Mr. FORAKER. He will simply find there a direction to take steps to institute civil government and restore law and order, and then in concluding he does speak about the necessity of having authority respected, and that in a proper way such force will be employed as may be necessary to suppress disturbance.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. The proclamation as sent by the President, or the letter of instructions, contains the word "sovereignty" and a number of words indicating the purpose of the United States to establish their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. General Otis struck out of that proclamation the word "sovereignty" and every word that bore a meaning similar to the word "sovereignty."

Mr. HOAR. That was the very purpose.

Mr. CARMACK. That was the very purpose. It indicated a purpose to maintain a future political domination over the people of the Philippine Islands. That was the question I put to him. He first said that he struck out the word "sovereignty" because that word had come to have a peculiar and a sinister meaning to the people of the Philippine Islands; but it appeared that he not only struck out the word "sovereignty," but he struck out the words "supreme authority," "supremacy of the United States," "lawful government of the United States," and every word that indicated a purpose to maintain the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippine Islands.

Now, the point for which I had that testimony read was not to show that President McKinley had any evil, or violent, or warlike purpose with reference to the Philippines; but I believe, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that the President did not realize the situation. As he said in one of his addresses, and I have no doubt he believed it, "the people in the Philippines who are loyal to the United States and who want to support the authority of the United States outnumber its opponents in the ratio of a thousand to one." I have no doubt he believed that. But, as a matter of fact, that proclamation was a declaration of war. It was a declaration on the part of the President to destroy the liberty and the independence of the people of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Ohio if he desires to go on further to-night with the discussion of the unfinished business?

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire has some pension bills to be considered, and I will suspend for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. If no one else desires to go on with the unfinished business, I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to consider unobjected pension bills and bills to correct the records of soldiers.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Before that is done, if the Senator will permit me, I wish to insert in the RECORD a couple of letters.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, eight or ten days ago I read from the Springfield Republican and stated that I understood it to be a Republican newspaper. That statement was denied. The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] stated that it was a Democratic newspaper. I took occasion immediately afterwards to write to the editor of the Springfield Republican, and I have his reply. I have had it for some time and I have been waiting an opportunity to insert it in the RECORD at a time when no one else desired to occupy the floor to debate the pending bill. I will read the letter:

THE REPUBLICAN, ESTABLISHED IN 1824 BY SAMUEL BOWLES,
Springfield, Mass., May 19, 1902.

Hon. A. J. MCLAURIN,
Senator of the United States—

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear the Senator from Mississippi on this side of the Chamber. I suggest that the letter either be read at the desk or that we have better order. I should like very much to hear the communication read.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. The letter is as follows:

THE REPUBLICAN,
ESTABLISHED IN 1824 BY SAMUEL BOWLES,
DAILY, SUNDAY, WEEKLY,
Springfield, Mass., May 19, 1902.

Hon. A. J. MCLAURIN,
Senator of the United States.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of May 17, would say: Since 1872 the Springfield Republican has been an independent newspaper in the full sense of the term, owning no allegiance to either or any political party, but supporting those candidates and policies which at any given time have seemed to its conductors to give promise of best serving the interests of the people of the United States. In pursuit of this broad purpose we have kept in mind the ideal of service and republicanism which Lincoln and Sumner and John A. Andrew of this State represented in the period of their activity before 1872, when this journal was reckoned a Republican newspaper, given to an honest freedom of expression. In 1872 its entire independence was declared, and its motto has been "All the news and the truth about it."

The Republican believes that the office of a public journal is so far judicial as to call for entire freedom from party trammels or partisan bias, leaving it in a position to make the public interest its supreme concern, and so no party can claim it or have any claim upon it save by the virtue of good works.

In exposition of the paper's independence it may be added that in the Presidential contests since and including 1872 the Republican has supported Greeley, Hayes, Garfield, Cleveland, McKinley, and Bryan—three Democrats and three Republicans. In the election of governors and Congressmen our support has been most often given, dominated by the merits of the case, to the Republican candidates.

I am, very sincerely, yours,

S. B. GRIFFIN, Managing Editor.

It will be noticed that the editor reckons Greeley among the Democratic candidates supported for President. Greeley never was a Democrat and never claimed to be a Democrat; he was a Republican.

Mr. HOAR. He was nominated by a Democratic convention.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. He was nominated first by a Republican convention in 1872, and afterwards by the Democratic convention, but he never did claim to be a Democrat, and his nomination was first by a Republican convention.

Again, it will be noticed that in the election in 1896 the Springfield Republican supported Mr. McKinley. After the Republican party had entered upon its imperialistic policy it supported Bryan in 1900.

I also wrote at the same time to the editor of the Philadelphia North American. I will read what he says in reply:

THE NORTH AMERICAN, NORTH AMERICAN BUILDING,
Philadelphia, May 16, 1902.

Hon. A. J. MCLAURIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

It will be remembered that when I read from the Philadelphia North American it was stated by the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that that was a Democratic paper, or he denied that it was a Republican paper and stated that it was such a paper as the New York Journal. He admitted, however, that it was owned and edited by the son of John Wanamaker.

THE NORTH AMERICAN, NORTH AMERICAN BUILDING,
Philadelphia, May 18, 1902.

Hon. A. J. MCLAURIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of inquiry, I will say that the North American is a Republican newspaper, and has been such since the formation of the party. Its Republicanism is of that old-fashioned kind which finds its foundation in a deep veneration for the principles of the Declaration of Independence. In this connection I may also say that this journal was the first daily newspaper in America to publish and approve the Declaration of Independence.

As throwing additional light on the politics of the North American, I inclose the editorial statement of principles printed May 15, 1899, when the paper came into the possession of the present proprietors. From the lines marked out in this editorial there has been no deviation.

I will say, in conclusion, that although it is a Republican newspaper, as between commercialized Republicanism and right, the North American is for the right.

Very sincerely, E. A. VAN VALKENBURG,
Editor.

I do not know that this clipping throws any light upon the matter, but it is possible that the editor intended that it should go in as a part of his answer to the question I propounded. Therefore I will read the following editorial from the Philadelphia North American of May 15, 1899:

In politics, while maintaining its traditional Republicanism, it will nevertheless support honest candidates against dishonest ones, pure causes against corrupt ones, and the people against the bosses, regardless of party name or party effect. Above all, it will stand for the rights of the many against the power and aggression of the privileged few. Democratic civilization in the largest sense and the promotion of equality and social equity will be its mission and its hope.

The guiding star of its existence will be the truth. The truth it will publish, no matter whom it helps or whom it hurts. Its columns will always be hospitable to truthful news. The primary function of a newspaper is to record interesting and important happenings in the life of its particular community and of the world. This function the North American will discharge fearlessly, impartially, and faithfully. It will be a live, clean, up-to-date newspaper, as free from sensationalism on the one hand as from Puritanism on the other. It will be a journal to be trusted for truth, accuracy, completeness, and honesty. No exigency will induce a departure from any of these canons of worthy journalism.

In writing to ask the editors of these papers their political views, I stated that I intended to put their answers into the RECORD, and that is what I have done.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of unobjected pension bills and bills correcting military records on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved, etc., That the Committee on Enrolled Bills in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, are hereby authorized to strike out the word "forty" from line 24, page 43, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-seven."

Mr. PROCTOR. The object of that resolution is to correct a clerical error of $3,000 in adding up the items in one of the lines of appropriation.

Mr. BATE. Is it merely to correct an error in addition?

Mr. PROCTOR. It is precisely the agreement arrived at, and it is to correct a clerical error in adding up different items.

Mr. BATE. And not in any way changing any of the provisions adopted in the bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. It does not change anything at all beyond correcting the addition of figures.

I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills on the Calendar under the order just adopted will be proceeded with.

WILLIAM C. HOLCOMB.

The bill (H. R. 6037) granting an increase of pension to William C. Holcomb was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William C. Holcomb, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATHARINE RAINS PAUL.

The bill (H. R. 11249) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Katharine Rains Paul, widow of Charles Rodman Paul, late lieutenant-colonel, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. DUNN.

The bill (H. R. 8134) granting an increase of pension to James H. Dunn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James H. Dunn, late captain of Company I, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI MAXTED.

The bill (H. R. 357) for the relief of Levi Maxted was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Infantry," to insert "and that he be granted an honorable discharge as of September 1, 1865;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to remove the charge of desertion against Levi Maxted, late of Company H, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, and that he be granted an honorable discharge as of September 1, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL F. HALL.

The bill (S. 1343) to correct the military record of Samuel F. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to amend the records of the War Department so as to show that Samuel F. Hall was mustered into service a private of the Thirty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry July 6, 1861, and was honorably discharged as of that grade on August 5, 1861, and that he shall be held and considered to have been a member of that regiment on and between the dates specified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM WILLIAMS.

The bill (H. R. 2901) to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of Abram Williams, formerly a private in Company B, Seventh Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, so as to show that he died February 6, 1865, and that he be held as not having deserted from the military service of the United States: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK KROPF.

The bill (S. 4401) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Kropf was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick Kropf, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MELISSA BURTON.

The bill (H. R. 13211) granting a pension to Melissa Burton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Melissa Burton, widow of William Burton, late of Company A, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Light Artillery, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVALINE JENKINS.

The bill (H. R. 9695) granting an increase of pension to Evaline Jenkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Evaline Jenkins, widow of David B. Jenkins, late sergeant, Company F, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and first lieutenant Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $17 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUST SCHILL.

The bill (H. R. 5475) granting a pensien to August Schill, alias August Silville, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of August Schill, alias August Silville, late of Company M, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH G. GETTY.

The bill (H. R. 12428) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth G. Getty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth G. Getty, widow of George W. Getty, late brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, and colonel, United States Army, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY ETNA POOLE.

The bill (H. R. 2286) granting an increase of pension to Mary Etna Poole was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary Etna Poole, widow of David Poole, late captain Company F, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. BUTLER.

The bill (H. R. 7560) granting an increase of pension to George W. Butler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George W. Butler, late of Company G, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. BALL.

The bill (H. R. 11288) granting an increase of pension to William E. Ball was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William E. Ball, late of Company H, United States Mounted Rifles, war with Mexico, and to pay him a pension of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

ZEBULON A. SHIPMAN.

The bill (H. R. 9794) granting a pension to Zebulon A. Shipman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Zebulon A. Shipman, late private, United States Marine Corps, war with Spain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW R. JONES.

The bill (H. R. 6718) granting an increase of pension to Andrew R. Jones was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Andrew R. Jones, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES EDWARD PRICE LANCE.

The bill (H. R. 5551) granting an increase of pension to Charles Edward Price Lance, alias Edward Price, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles Edward Price Lance, alias Edward Price, late of Company E, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PITSAR INGRAM.

The bill (H. R. 2289) granting an increase of pension to Pitsar Ingram was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Pitsar Ingram, late of Company D, Sixty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. THOMAS.

The bill (S. 7) granting an increase of pension to William H. Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Thomas, late second lieutenant Company I, and first lieutenant and adjutant Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. SHERMAN LANGWORTHY.

The bill (S. 1132) granting a pension to R. Sherman Langworthy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of R. Sherman Langworthy, late of Company B, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to R. Sherman Langworthy."

HENRY W. TRYON.

The bill (S. 2051) granting an increase of pension to H. W. Tryon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, before the name "W. Tryon," to strike out the initial "H." and insert "Henry;" in the same line, before the word "Company," to strike out "of" and insert "first lieutenant;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry W. Tryon, late first lieutenant Company G, Twenty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry W. Tryon."

FREDERICK BULKLEY.

The bill (S. 5648) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Bulkley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-six;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick Bulkley, late of Company A, Twenty-seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 2623) granting an increase of pension to John Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John Smith, late of Company D, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and Troop A, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES A. TILLOTSON.

The bill (H. R. 5248) granting a pension to Frances A. Tillotson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Frances A. Tillotson, widow of William T. Tillotson, late of Company B, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and to pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY SCOTT.

The bill (H. R. 11124) granting an increase of pension to Mary Scott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary Scott, widow of Daniel L. Scott, late an unassigned private of the Eightieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. WHITE.

The bill (H. R. 13614) granting an increase of pension to William H. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William H. White, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA J. WEST.

The bill (H. R. 4542) granting a pension to Eliza J. West was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Eliza J. West, widow of Elisha B. West, late of Companies B and D, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional for each of the minor children of the soldier until such children shall have arrived at the age of 16 years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS W. ANDERTON.

The bill (H. R. 13037) granting an increase of pension to Francis W. Anderton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Francis W. Anderton, late first lieutenant Company I, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES H. ANTHONY.

The bill (H. R. 7319) granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Anthony was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 11, after the word "child," to strike out "of;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frances H. Anthony, widow of De Witt C. Anthony, late lieutenant-colonel Twenty-third and colonel Sixty-sixth Regiments Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, however, That in the case of the death of the helpless child, Myrtilla H. Anthony, on whose account the pension of Frances H. Anthony is increased, the pension of said Frances H. Anthony shall continue only at the rate of $8 per month from and after the date of death of said helpless child.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELEANOR EMERSON.

The bill (H. R. 12983) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor Emerson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Eleanor Emerson, widow of Warren C. Emerson, late major and additional paymaster, United States Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $15 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM KELLEY.

The bill (S. 2265) granting an increase of pension to William Kelley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Kelley, late of Companies A and B, Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDEREKA SEYMORE.

The bill (S. 4190) granting a pension to Fredreka Seymore was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fredereka Seymore, widow of George Seymore, late of Company F, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said George Seymore until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Fredereka Seymore."

FANNIE FROST.

The bill (S. 5263) granting a pension to Fannie Frost was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, after the words "New York," to insert "Volunteer;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie Frost, widow of Robert Frost, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET M'CUEN.

The bill (H. R. 9833) granting an increase of pension to Margaret McCuen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Margaret McCuen, widow of Alexander McCuen, late captain Company E, Two hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID TOPPER.

The bill (H. R. 12422) granting an increase of pension to David Topper was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of David Topper, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. CRIST.

The bill (H. R. 8487) granting an increase of pension to John M. Crist was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John M. Crist, late of Company K, Two hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE CHAMBERLIN.

The bill (H. R. 12779) granting an increase of pension to George Chamberlin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George Chamberlin, late of Company M, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and Company E, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH A. TURNER.

The bill (S. 5856) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. Turner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth A. Turner, widow of James A. Turner, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, Seminole Indian war, and to pay her a pension of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA E. KENDRICK.

The bill (S. 5741) granting a pension to Mrs. William H. Kendrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha E. Kendrick, widow of William H. Kendrick, late second lieutenant Captain E. E. Mizell's company, Florida Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Martha E. Kendrick."

THOMAS D. UTTER.

The bill (S. 5748) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Utler was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the name "Thomas D.," to strike out "Utler" and insert "Utter;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas D. Utter, late of Company B, Fifty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Utter."

FLETCHER J. WALKER.

The bill (S. 484) granting an increase of pension to Fletcher J. Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the word "First," to insert "Regiment;" in line 7, before the word "Cavalry," to insert "Volunteer," and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fletcher J. Walker, late of Company A, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS HANNAH.

The bill (S. 1981) granting a pension to Thomas Hannah was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Hannah, late of Company F, Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas Hannah."

SARAH A. WHITCOMB.

The bill (S. 4718) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Whitcomb was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Whitcomb, widow of Asahel D. Whitcomb, late first lieutenant Company E, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANGUS CAMERON.

The bill (S. 5500) granting an increase of pension to Angus Cameron was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" and in line 8, after the word "he," to strike out "now receives" and insert "is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Angus Cameron, late of Company G, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 27, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 26, 1902.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Robert S. McCormick, of Illinois, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary there, to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States to Austria-Hungary, to fill an original vacancy.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

Chandler Hale, of Maine, now secretary of legation at that place, to be secretary of the embassy of the United States at Vienna, Austria, to fill an original vacancy.

SECOND SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

George Barclay Rives, of New Jersey, now third secretary of the embassy at Berlin, to be second secretary of the embassy of the United States at Vienna, Austria, from July 1, 1902, to fill an original vacancy.

THIRD SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

Charles Richardson, of Massachusetts, to be third secretary of the embassy of the United States at Berlin, Germany, from July 1, 1902, vice George Barclay Rives, nominated to be second secretary of the embassy at Vienna.

PROMOTIONS IN THE MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Asst. Surg. Samuel B. Grubbs, of New York, to be a passed assistant surgeon, to rank as such from May 19, 1902, in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

Asst. Surg. John McMullen, of Maryland, to be a passed assistant surgeon, to rank as such from May 17, 1902, in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

MARSHAL.

William M. Morsey, of Missouri, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Missouri, vice Louis C. Bohle, whose term expired April 17, 1902.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

George A. McKenzie, of California, to be receiver of public moneys at Stockton, Cal., to take effect June 17, 1902, at expiration of his present term. (Reappointment.)

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

ARTILLERY CORPS.

Sergt. Emmett R. Harris, Troop L, Eighth Cavalry, United States Army, to be second lieutenant, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

Cavalry Arm.

Hamilton Bowie, of Alabama, late first lieutenant, Fortieth Infantry, United States Volunteers, February 2, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Thomas E. Cathro, of Indiana, late corporal, Company D, One hundred and fifty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, February 2, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Artillery Corps.

Frederick E. Gignoux, of Nevada, late first lieutenant, Eleventh Cavalry, United States Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Guy B. G. Hanna, of Iowa, late sergeant, Company D, Porto Rico Regiment, United States Volunteer Infantry, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

George P. Hawes, jr., of Virginia, late private, Company A, First Cavalry, United States Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Charles F. Donnohue, of Indiana, late first lieutenant, One hundred and fifty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

William B. Brister, of New Jersey, late first lieutenant, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Roger O. Mason, of Delaware, late second lieutenant, First Delaware Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Harrie F. Reed, of New York, late second lieutenant, Two hundred and first New York Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Walter C. Baker, of Pennsylvania, late sergeant, Company C, Sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Charles A. Clark, of Illinois, late sergeant, Company I, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Avery J. Cooper, of Oregon, late private, Company L, Second Oregon Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Robert Davis, of New York, late first sergeant, Company F, Two hundred and first New York Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Frank Geere, of Wyoming, late sergeant, Company G, First Wyoming Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Natt F. Jamieson, of Vermont, late sergeant, Company L, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers (now private, Company C, First Battalion of Engineers, United States Army), September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Richard I. McKenney, of Minnesota, late private, Company C, Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Andrew W. Jackman, of Illinois, late private, Company F, First Illinois Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

George L. Wertenbaker, of Virginia, late sergeant, Company D, Third Virginia Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Richard P. Winslow, of Mississippi, late corporal, Company F, First Tennessee Volunteers, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Nelson E. Margetts, of Utah, late corporal, Battery A, Utah Volunteer Artillery, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

John V. Spring, of Texas, late sergeant, Company I, First Texas Volunteer Cavalry, September 23, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Infantry Arm.

Robert O. Ragsdale, of Tennessee, late first lieutenant, Thirty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, February 2, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Augustus F. Dannemiller, of Ohio, late private, Company I, Eighth Ohio Volunteers, February 2, 1901, to fill an original vacancy.

Algernon E. Sartoris, of the District of Columbia, May 22, 1902, vice Kerr, Twenty-second Infantry, promoted.

Charles A. Hunt, of New Hampshire, May 22, 1902, vice Cabell, Fifth Infantry, promoted.

Leo B. Dannemiller, of Ohio, May 22, 1902, vice Game, Eleventh Infantry, promoted.

Harry Griffin Leckie, of Virginia, May 22, 1902, vice Stuart, Seventh Infantry, promoted.

Claire R. Bennett, of Washington, May 22, 1902, vice Patten, Thirteenth Infantry, promoted.

Charles Wells, of Pennsylvania, May 22, 1902, vice Major, Fourteenth Infantry, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 26, 1902.

MARSHAL.

Andrew J. Houston, of Texas, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Texas.

POSTMASTERS.

Benjamin J. Maltby, to be postmaster at Northford, in the county of New Haven and State of Connecticut.

William H. Foote, to be postmaster at Westfield, in the county of Hampden and State of Massachusetts.

Joseph W. Gary, to be postmaster at Caribou, in the county of Aroostook and State of Maine.

Thomas G. Herbert, to be postmaster at Richmond, in the county of Sagadahoc and State of Maine.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 26, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., as follows:

Our Father, who art in heaven, we thank Thee for Thy silent, yet potent influence, which Thou art ever exercising in the minds and hearts of Thy children, and which is ever leading them onward and upward to higher attainments. Grant that we may be more susceptible to Thy influence, until we all come into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Hear us, O Lord, when we pray for the friends and bereaved family of the late Lord Pauncefote, who so long, so faithfully, and efficiently served his country among us, and won the esteem and respect of our people by his generous and courteous methods, socially and officially. Comfort all who mourn his loss, and they are legion, by the blessed hope of the immortality of the soul, as revealed in the life and resurrection of Thy Son our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was printed in the proceedings of Friday last. I ask for the adoption of the report.

Mr. SULZER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The conference report is the regular order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the statement of the House conferees be read and the reading of the report omitted.

There was no objection.

The statement, as published in connection with the report, in the House proceedings of May 23 was read.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for the purpose simply of correcting in the bill an error in arithmetic.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution bearing upon the Agricultural appropriation bill. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills, in the enrollment of House bill 13395, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, are hereby authorized to strike out the word "forty" from line 24, page 43, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-seven."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the gentleman to let me make an explanation before he objects.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am asking now for some explanation. I do not like this idea of correcting bills after they have passed the House and before the ink is dry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The error in the present case arose in this way: We agreed upon a lump sum of $296,000 for the agricultural experiment appropriation. By an oversight we failed to rearrange the items making up that aggregate sum; and the object of this resolution is simply to cut down one of those items from $40,000 to $37,000—simply to correct an error, if I may so call it, in arithmetic.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Who made the error? Who is responsible for it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a joint error of the conferees. We agreed upon a lump sum, but we failed to rearrange the items forming that lump sum.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Are you sure that the conferees agree that this is an error that should be corrected?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The items call for $3,000 more than the lump sum agreed upon; and we simply cut down the items to accord with the sum—$296,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And the Senate conferees now agree with the conferees of the House that the addition was wrong; and this is simply to correct the addition?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And there can be no further call for resolutions correcting this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; which was adopted.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS FOR COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. JOY. I desire to report back a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read House resolution No. 243, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint two additional clerks to said committee to serve during the remainder of the present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day.

The resolution was adopted.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill and to move that they be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14589) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks the consent of the House to take this bill from the Speaker's table for present consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The question was taken and the amendments agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, calls up the following bill for consideration:

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. Is not the regular order the disposition of pension bills which were undisposed of on Friday afternoon, the previous question having been ordered on them?

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order would bring up the undisposed of private bills which were reported from the Committee of the Whole on Friday last, and on which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. SULZER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from New York if he would kindly withhold that motion for a short time?

Mr. SULZER. It will take only a few moments to dispose of this matter.

Mr. BABCOCK. The District Committee will get through with its work on the floor in less than an hour.

Mr. SULZER. It will take only a few moments to dispose of these bills.

MICHAEL MULLET.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order. The Clerk will report the bill which the House had under consideration at the adjournment on Friday last, the question being on the passage of the bill, which the Clerk will report by its title for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill 11879, to correct the military record of Michael Mullet.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 48, noes 50.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 73, answered "present" 41, not voting 162; as follows:

YEAS—75.

Adams,	De Armond,	Livingston,	Ruppert,
Alexander,	Draper,	Lloyd,	Ryan,
Allen, Ky.	Emerson,	McCulloch,	Selby,
Ball, Tex.	Esch,	McDermott,	Shafroth,
Bell,	Foster, Ill.	McLain,	Shallenberger,
Blackburn,	Glenn,	Mickey,	Sherman,
Boutell,	Goldfogle,	Minor,	Snook,
Bowie,	Hay,	Moody, N. C.	Stark,
Brantley	Hopkins,	Mudd,	Stewart, N. Y.
Brundidge,	Jack,	Mutchler,	Storm,
Burnett,	Jenkins,	Pierce,	Sulloway,
Candler,	Jett,	Powers, Me.	Sulzer,
Clark,	Kahn,	Powers, Mass.	Tirrell,
Cochran,	Kern,	Randell, Tex.	Wanger,
Conry,	Kitchin, Claude	Ransdell, La.	Williams, Ill.
Coombs,	Knapp,	Reid,	Williams, Miss.
Cooper, Wis.	Lanham,	Richardson, Tenn.	Wilson,
Cowherd,	Lessler,	Rixey,	Zenor.
Davis, Fla.	Lewis, Ga.	Rucker,

NAYS—73.

Babcock,	Eddy,	Lacey,	Patterson, Pa.
Ball, Del.	Finley,	Landis,	Payne,
Bartholdt,	Fletcher,	Latimer,	Ray, N. Y.
Bishop,	Gardner, Mich.	Lever,	Rumple,
Bromwell,	Gibson,	Littlefield,	Shattuc,
Brownlow,	Graff,	Loud,	Sims,
Burk, Pa.	Greene, Mass.	McCleary,	Snodgrass,
Burke, S. Dak.	Hedge,	McLachlan,	Sperry,
Butler, Pa.	Hemenway,	Mann,	Spight,
Cannon,	Henry, Conn.	Martin,	Stevens, Minn.
Capron,	Henry, Miss.	Metcalf,	Tawney,
Cassel,	Hill,	Mondell,	Tompkins, Ohio
Clayton,	Holliday,	Moody, Oreg.	Tongue,
Conner,	Howell,	Morgan,	Underwood,
Corliss,	Hull,	Moss,	Warner,
Cousins,	Jones, Wash.	Otjen,	Woods.
Cromer,	Joy,	Overstreet,
Currier,	Kleberg,	Palmer,
Dalzell,	Kluttz,	Parker,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—41.

Bartlett,	Grow,	McRae,	Smith, Ky.
Burleson,	Hamilton,	Maddox,	Stephens, Tex.
Cassingham,	Hepburn,	Miers, Ind.	Sutherland,
Cooper, Tex.	Hitt,	Morris,	Tate,
Dinsmore,	Hooker,	Naphen,	Taylor, Ala.
Driscoll,	Irwin,	Padgett,	Thomas, Iowa
Evans,	Johnson,	Pou,	Trimble,
Foster, Vt.	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Rhea, Va.	Wheeler.
Gaines, Tenn.	Lawrence,	Richardson, Ala.
Gilbert,	Little,	Robinson, Ind.
Griffith,	McClellan,	Slayden,

NOT VOTING—162.

Acheson,	Deemer,	Knox,	Schirm,
Adamson,	Dick,	Kyle,	Scott,
Allen, Me.	Dougherty,	Lamb,	Shackleford,
Aplin,	Douglas,	Lassiter,	Shelden,
Bankhead,	Dovener,	Lester,	Sheppard,
Barney,	Edwards,	Lewis, Pa.	Showalter,
Bates,	Elliott,	Lindsay,	Sibley,
Beidler,	Feely,	Littauer,	Skiles,
Bellamy,	Fitzgerald,	Long,	Small,
Belmont,	Fleming,	Loudenslager,	Smith, Ill.
Benton,	Flood,	Lovering,	Smith, Iowa
Bingham,	Foerderer,	McAndrews,	Smith, H. C.
Blakeney,	Fordney,	McCall,	Smith, S. W.
Boreing,	Foss,	Mahon,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Bowersock,	Fowler,	Mahoney,	Southard,
Breazeale,	Fox,	Marshall,	Southwick,
Brick,	Gaines, W. Va.	Maynard,	Sparkman,
Bristow,	Gardner, N. J.	Mercer,	Steele,
Broussard,	Gill,	Meyer, La.	Stewart, N. J.
Brown,	Gillet, N. Y.	Miller,	Swanson,
Bull,	Gillett, Mass.	Moon,	Talbert,
Burgess,	Gooch,	Morrell,	Taylor, Ohio
Burkett,	Gordon,	Needham,	Thayer,
Burleigh,	Graham,	Neville,	Thomas, N. C.
Burton,	Green, Pa.	Nevin,	Thompson,
Butler, Mo.	Griggs,	Newlands,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Calderhead,	Grosvenor,	Norton,	Vandiver,
Caldwell,	Hall,	Olmsted,	Van Voorhis,
Connell,	Hanbury,	Patterson, Tenn.	Vreeland,
Cooney,	Haskins,	Pearre,	Wachter,
Creamer,	Haugen,	Perkins,	Wadsworth,
Crowley,	Heatwole,	Prince,	Warnock,
Crumpacker,	Henry, Tex.	Pugsley,	Watson,
Curtis,	Hildebrant,	Reeder,	Weeks,
Cushman,	Howard,	Reeves,	White,
Dahle,	Hughes,	Robb,	Wiley,
Darragh,	Jackson, Kans.	Roberts,	Wooten,
Davey, La.	Jackson, Md.	Robertson, La.	Wright,
Davidson,	Jones, Va.	Robinson, Nebr.	Young.
Dayton,	Kehoe,	Russell,
De Graffenreid,	Ketcham,	Scarborough,

Mr. CAPRON. I would like to ask if my colleague, Mr. HILL, is recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

The Clerk will report the pairs.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. REEDER with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. LONG with Mr. BELMONT.

Mr. IRWIN with Mr. GOOCH.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.

Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. SUTHERLAND with Mr. JACKSON of Kansas.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COOPER of Texas (except revenue cutter).

Mr. BARNEY with Mr. MCRAE.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. SKILES with Mr. TALBERT.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. CREAMER.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. CURTIS with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. HASKINS with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. CONRY.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. NAPHEN.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. CASSINGHAM.

Mr. GORDON with Mr. SCOTT.
Mr. BURKETT with Mr. SHALLENBERGER.
Mr. GILL with Mr. ROBB.
Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. FEELY.
For one week:
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. DOUGHERTY.
Mr. BEIDLER with Mr. HOOKER.
Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. VANDIVER.
Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. GRIFFITH (except on currency and banking bills).
Mr. DAHLE with Mr. THOMPSON.
Mr. BROWN with Mr. FITZGERALD.
Mr. BATES with Mr. BELLAMY.
Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.
On this vote:
Mr. DEEMER with Mr. GRIGGS.
Mr. DICK with Mr. BURLESON.
Mr. MORRIS with Mr. SPARKMAN.
Mr. HITT with Mr. DINSMORE.
Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. LITTLE.
Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. RHEA of Virginia.
Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. ADAMSON.
Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont with Mr. POU.
Mr. DOVENER with Mr. EDWARDS.
Mr. MERCER with Mr. WOOTEN.
Mr. NEEDHAM with Mr. SCARBOROUGH.
Mr. NEVIN with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.
For the session:
Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.
Mr. MORRELL with Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania.
Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.
Mr. BOREING with Mr. TRIMBLE.
Mr. DAYTON with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.
Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. TATE.
Mr. HILDEBRANT with Mr. MAYNARD.
Mr. BULL with Mr. CROWLEY.
For ten days:
Mr. MILLER with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.
Until Tuesday, May 27:
Mr. MCCALL with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.
Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey with Mr. MOON.
Until May 29:
Mr. EVANS with Mr. JONES of Virginia.
May 26, 27, and 28:
Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. BARTLETT.
On this day:
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. BREAZEALE.
Mr. BRICK with Mr. BROUSSARD.
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BURGESS.
Mr. BURTON with Mr. LESTER.
Mr. CONNELL with Mr. BUTLER of Missouri.
Mr. CUSHMAN with Mr. CALDWELL.
Mr. DOUGLAS with Mr. COONEY.
Mr. FOERDERER with Mr. ELLIOTT.
Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. FLEMING.
Mr. FOSS with Mr. FLOOD.
Mr. GILLET of New York with Mr. FOX.
Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. HENRY of Texas.
Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. HOWARD.
Mr. HUGHES with Mr. KEHOE.
Mr. VREELAND with Mr. LAMB.
Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. LASSITER.
Mr. KNOX with Mr. LINDSAY.
Mr. KYLE with Mr. MAHONEY.
Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania with Mr. MCANDREWS.
Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. NEWLANDS.
Mr. MAHON with Mr. NEVILLE.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD with Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. PUGSLEY.
Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska.
Mr. PEARRE with Mr. THAYER.
Mr. WARNOCK with Mr. SHEPPARD.
Mr. SCHIRM with Mr. SMALL.
Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. WILEY.
Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. SWANSON.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 73, the nays are 73, present 40. The bill is lost.

Mr. HULL. I move to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to reconsider the last vote and lay that motion on the table. Without objection, the latter motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia be permitted to finish its business at this time.

Mr. WANGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

HOUSE BILLS WITH AMENDMENTS PASSED.

On the following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, the amendments were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 13233. A bill granting a pension to William A. Nelson;
H. R. 13178. A bill granting a pension to William F. Bowden;
H. R. 8644. A bill granting a pension to John W. Thomas;
H. R. 11893. A bill granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Dennis, of Turin, Coweta County, Ga. (title amended);
H. R. 14224. A bill granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Tod;
H. R. 14251. A bill granting a pension to Hugh J. Reynolds;
H. R. 14234. A bill granting a pension to John Williamson;
H. R. 14359. A bill granting a pension to Luther G. Edwards;
H. R. 2783. A bill granting a pension to William Dixon;
H. R. 13683. A bill granting an increase of pension to Ella S. Mannix (title amended); and
H. R. 6414. A bill granting an increase of pension to William W. H. Davis.

PENSION BILLS WITHOUT AMENDMENTS PASSED.

The following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendments, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 5152. A bill granting a pension to Mary Welch;
H. R. 14208. A bill granting an increase of pension to Alexander Murdock;
H. R. 11711. A bill granting an increase of pension to Isaac Gibson;
H. R. 13505. A bill granting an increase of pension to William F. Stanley;
H. R. 11252. A bill granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Gowdey; and
H. R. 11374. A bill granting an increase of pension to William McCord.

The following Senate bill with amendment, favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole, was considered, and the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed:

S. 4927. An act granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney.

SENATE BILLS WITHOUT AMENDMENTS PASSED.

The following Senate bills without amendments, favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

S. 2551. An act granting a pension to Amelia Engle;
S. 4706. An act granting an increase of pension to William Harrington;
S. 4732. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hazzard;
S. 3998. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Kimble;
S. 4871. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Worthen;
S. 4983. An act granting a pension to John W. Smoot;
S. 4655. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver K. Wyman;
S. 4862. An act granting an increase of pension to James Welch;
S. 1797. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Russell;
S. 3888. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Hubbard;
S. 5371. An act granting an increase of pension to Johathan O. Thompson;
S. 2168. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Baldwin;
S. 2697. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Baldwin;
S. 4415. An act granting an increase of pension to Vesta A. Brown;
S. 4758. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Doane;
S. 4729. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp;

S. 4829. An act granting an increase of pension to Nimrod Headington;
S. 4853. An act granting an increase of pension to Amos Moulton;
S. 4712. An act granting an increase of pension to Elphlet Noyes;
S. 5153. An act granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham;
S. 2511. An act granting an increase of pension to William Phillips;
S. 1038. An act granting an increase of pension to Gustavus C. Pratt;
S. 5106. An act granting an increase of pension to Horace L. Richardson;
S. 4790. An act granting a pension to Stephen A. Seavey;
S. 4730. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Youngs;
S. 2457. An act granting an increase of pension to Warren Y. Merchant;
S. 5209. An act granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Van Eaton;
S. 3551. An act granting an increase of pension to John P. Collier;
S. 4240. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin N. Perkins;
S. 712. An act granting an increase of pension to John Housiaux;
S. 4759. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Clark;
S. 4638. An act granting a pension to Helena Sudsburg;
S. 3063. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge;
S. 5759. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Crooker;
S. 5669. An act granting a pension to Charlotte M. Howe;
S. 4642. An act granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery;
S. 2535. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph;
S. 5670. An act granting a pension to Samuel H. Chamberlin;
S. 4766. An act granting an increase of pension to James P. McClure;
S. 5202. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie M. Wagner;
S. 5152. An act granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin, alias Marion M. Martin; and
S. 4927. An act granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

MICHAEL MULLET.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces to the House that the clerks, upon a careful reexamination of the roll call recently completed, find that there was a name transposed, which made a change in the number voting, so that the yeas are 74 and the nays 73, present 40. This error, of course, must be corrected, and does not require unanimous consent. Therefore the bill was passed. [Laughter and applause.]

On motion of Mr. SULZER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGULATING THE USE OF TELEPHONE WIRES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 12865.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12865) to provide for the removal of overhead telegraph and telephone wires in the city of Washington, for the construction of conduits in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That all telephone poles and the wires attached thereto not the property of the United States or the District of Columbia now upon the streets and avenues within the section of the District of Columbia bounded by a line beginning at Second and B streets southeast and running thence along B street south, Third street west, Missouri avenue, Sixth street west, B street north, Twenty-third street west, Rock Creek, Cincinnati street, Columbia road, Thirteenth street west, R street north, New Jersey avenue, C street north, and Second street east to the point of beginning, except as hereinafter provided, shall from time to time, as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of said District, be taken down and removed. The work of taking down and removing said poles and wires shall be done under the direction of said Commissioners, and it is hereby made the duty of said Commissioners to enforce compliance with the provisions of this act as expeditiously as may be consistent with the public interests; and the said Commissioners are hereby empowered and directed from time to time to authorize any individual, company, or corporation now operating and maintaining a telephone plant or system, partly overhead and partly underground, in the District of Columbia, to extend and enlarge its system of underground conduits, subsidiaries, and manholes in or under any or all of the streets, avenues, alleys, lanes, or other public highways in said city and District as may be requisite and necessary for the purposes of this act and for the reception of such other cables and wires as may be reasonably required in the future by the growth of such individual, company, or corporation or to adequately meet the requirements of the public for telephone service.

SEC. 2. That upon the approval of this act, and from time to time thereafter, any individual, company, or corporation now maintaining and operating a telephone plant or system in said District, partly overhead and partly underground, shall prepare and submit to the said Commissioners a plan or plans, or application or applications, in writing, showing the streets, avenues, alleys, lanes, and other public highways in or under which it is proposed to construct conduits, subsidiaries, or manholes, and giving the general dimensions, length, and course thereof, and before any such conduit, subsidiary, or manhole is constructed it shall be necessary to obtain the approval and permission of said Commissioners. Said Commissioners are empowered to require that all proposed conduits, subsidiaries, and manholes shall be constructed in accordance with the approved plan or permit; and upon the approval by said Commissioners of any such plan, or the issuing of any such permit, providing for the construction of underground conduits, subsidiaries, or manholes within the section in said District described in section 1 of this act the construction therein provided for shall be proceeded with diligently, and upon the completion thereof, or as soon thereafter as may be, without impairing the efficiency of the telephone service in said District, the individual, company, or corporation constructing such conduits, subsidiaries, or manholes shall place its cables and wires therein and take down and remove from the streets and avenues in which such conduits are constructed all poles and wires except such as said Commissioners may, in accordance with the provisions of this act, permit to remain for the purpose of distributing wires for house connections.

SEC. 3. That any individual, company, or corporation owning and maintaining such poles and wires attached thereto on or over any street or avenue within the section of the District described in section 1 of this act who shall willfully neglect or refuse to remove the same, as provided in section 2 hereof, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $25 for each and every day during which such failure to remove said poles and wires shall continue, which amount may be recovered by the District of Columbia in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 4. That said Commissioners be, and they are hereby, empowered to authorize the erection and maintenance of poles in the alleys of said city and District and the stringing thereon of telephone conductors from alley poles or house-top fixtures in one square to alley poles or house-top fixtures in another square for the purpose of enabling house connections to be made, and also to authorize the erection of telephone poles in the District of Columbia outside the limits of the section of said District described in section 1 of this act and the stringing thereon of telephone conductors for house connections or for connection with lines outside the District of Columbia; also to authorize the erection of such poles and the stringing thereon of such wires in the streets and avenues of said city and District in the parts thereof in which there are no public alleys, and in such other places as the public interests do not require that the lines be placed underground, or in places where it shall be deemed by said Commissioners impracticable to advantageously place or operate such lines underground. During the progress of the work provided for in section 1 of this act said Commissioners are also empowered to issue temporary permits for the erection and maintenance of poles and overhead conductors in places where the lines are ultimately to be placed underground, but where the work can not be immediately done because of the greater urgency of work in other localities, or for other reasons satisfactory to said Commissioners; but in issuing such temporary permits said Commissioners shall bear in mind the purpose and policy of this act, which is to cause to be removed from the streets and avenues within the section of said District described in section 1 of this act all poles and wires attached thereto, except as hereinbefore provided, as expeditiously as may be without interfering with or impairing the efficiency of the telephone service in said District and without denying to the public reasonable telephone facilities at all times.

SEC. 5. That all subways, conduits, manholes, and overhead lines constructed or erected under the provisions of this act shall be subject to such reasonable regulations as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may from time to time prescribe as to inspection, location, character of conduit construction, and height of poles and wires: Provided, That in all conduits so constructed such space shall be furnished to the District of Columbia as may be necessary for its fire-alarm or police-patrol wires or cables, carrying low potential currents of electricity, free of charge: And provided further, That the number of ducts so reserved in any one conduit shall not be more than three.

SEC. 6. That the said Commissioners are empowered to authorize any such individual, company, or corporation now owning and operating any lines of street poles and wires and any alley poles or alley-pole line within the District of Columbia and outside of the section described in section 1 of this act to continue to maintain the same, with such repairs and renewals as may be necessary to keep them in good order and condition of repair, and to add thereto such poles and wires as may be necessary for the purpose of making house connections or for connecting with telephone lines outside the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend title of bill so that it shall read as follows: "A bill regulating the use of telephone wires in the District of Columbia."
Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "and directed."
Page 4, line 12, strike out the words "and directed."
Page 6, line 9, strike out the words "and directed."
Add a new section, as follows:
"SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have sent to the Clerk's desk two amendments that I wish to have pending for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend section 1 by striking out in the tenth line thereof "Thirteenth street west" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Sixteenth street west (extended), Park street, Whitney avenue, and Eleventh street west."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to regulate the use of telephone wires in the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker——

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for some explanation of this bill on the part of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have that before the amendments are adopted?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide, first, for the removal of all overhead wires in the thickly settled portion of the city, and to provide also for underground conduits to take their place. The bill in its provisions gives to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the same authority to grant permits to the telephone company that the electric-light companies and the gas companies now have under the present law. At this time the Commissioners and the telephone company are confronted with a peculiar condition of affairs. There are now some 700 applications on file for telephones that the company is unable to install for the reason that they can build no more underground conduits without the authority of Congress. The Commissioners have also issued all the permits that they are authorized to do and can give no further permit for construction, either underground or overhead. We have had in the committee a number of complaints, not only from citizens of Washington but from members of Congress, who wanted to know why they can not get telephones put in. These are the facts as presented to the committee, not only by the Commissioners but by the telephone company themselves.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will not the effect of this section, or the section which authorizes the construction of these conduits, be to virtually give the telephone company that to-day controls the business in this city an absolute monopoly in the city of Washington? Would it not be better, in the interest of the users of the telephones, to have this so arranged that if there is another company that might want to install a telephone a telephone exchange in this city they may, upon paying reasonable compensation therefor, be permitted to use these conduits we are now authorizing the construction of?

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that that is the very condition that the District Committee and the Commissioners have guarded against. This bill does not grant a single right or privilege to this telephone company. It simply authorizes and empowers the Commissioners to do cartain things in their discretion and judgment, and interferes in no manner whatever with any other company.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the gentleman knows very well that the discretion given to the Commissioners will inure wholly to the benefit of the existing telephone company. They will be the company designated and authorized to construct these conduits. Now, after the construction the only way that a new company or a competing company can get into this city is by building additional conduits, tearing up the streets, etc., which may be objectionable to the Commissioners or the District, and for that reason the right would not be granted, whereas when you are building these conduits you ought, in my judgment, to reserve to any competing company that might want authority to install a telephone system the right to use these conduits, subject to the conditions that they shall pay a reasonable compensation for the benefit of that right. Then there would be no opportunity for the existing telephone company to extort unreasonable prices, as they are doing from the telephone users of this city.

Mr. BABCOCK. Is the gentleman through with his question? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say if the gentleman had given attention to the work done by the committee and by the House during past sessions in struggling with the conduit question perhaps he would not have made that statement. I myself, or the committee I have the honor to represent, have for more than one session endeavored to perfect a measure by which one system of conduits would accommodate all of the wires necessary in the city, but after a great many hearings and a great many efforts and a great many propositions were considered it all fell down. That was several years ago, and since that time no legislation has been enacted by the House, except the telephone bill we passed during the last session to a company that proposed to make rates of $36 and $54 for telephones. The House passed the bill and it went to the Senate and was defeated.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I remind the gentleman of another bit of legislation we indulged in? Did not Congress impose upon this telephone company a certain system of rates that they have contemptuously ignored and refused to pay any attention or obedience to? Was not there legislation of that kind?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman I will say that there was legislation of that kind.

Mr. HEPBURN. Which the gentleman overlooked.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; I did not overlook it. In reference to that amendment adopted by the House, it was one making all telephone charges the same, a flat rate of $50. It was an amendment to an appropriation bill. That was taken into the courts here in the District of Columbia, and the court decided that the rate was inadequate for service rendered. It is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and this legislation has been delayed and deferred waiting for that decision from the Supreme Court.

The demand, Mr. Speaker, has become such for telephones, and the necessities of the public of the growing city are such that some action must be taken, and I have been personally urged by the Commissioners to take some action, and take it promptly.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that I voted for that amendment, that I supported the telephone bill that passed the House; and I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that at the time we passed the bill chartering another telephone company they received a charter from the city of Baltimore, and that to-day they have applied to the city council of Baltimore, after installing 8,000 telephones at $36 and $54, for permission to change their rates. In common parlance they have thrown up the sponge, and say they can not conduct the business at those rates because they are not sufficient for the ordinary expenses of the company. If the gentleman wants it I can furnish him with the facts and the data.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to see the facts contradistinguished from the statements made by these companies. I want to remind the gentleman of this fact—that all over the country, in all villages of this country, people are having telephone service of the best character at one-half the rates, in some instances, that were fixed in this statute of ours, and that, if my friend will permit me to say it, I think that whenever it was established that the rate of $50 in the city of Washington was a confiscatory rate, that there was some scoundrelism somewhere along the line that established that proposition.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not propose to do with rates.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, if the gentleman will permit me; but it proposes to enlarge the powers, through the action of the Commissioners, of this telephone company that is rendering this inadequate service and is standing here in contempt of an act of Congress.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. Does he believe that it is desirable and good public policy for a telephone company to come to Congress when they want to make a house connection, when they want to cross the sidewalk, when they want to install a wire to reach and accommodate certain sections of the city?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly not; and if the gentleman will let me continue my answer, neither do I think it wise to waive the policy of excluding overhead wires from this city, having refused over and over again to grant privileges of that kind to railway companies, and when we have required wires to be removed from a street, neither do I think it is wise to put the power into the hands of the Commissioners and fill your alleys with these wires. I do not think that is policy, and that is what is done. I do not think it is policy to grant a company now in contempt, now refusing obedience to law, one iota of privilege, and while I would do anything I could to compel them to a proper observance of fair dealing with their customers and with the people, I would not extend one privilege to them until they had complied with the law already made.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman overlooked one fact, and that is that the overhead wires and poles can not be taken down until Congress has authorized some substitute. Under the present law this company can not build a foot of conduit in the city of Washington. Now, this bill authorizes the Commissioners to give them authority to build conduits and to put in wires. How would the gentleman accomplish results differently? Will he suggest in his wisdom some way of disposing otherwise of the wires?

Mr. HEPBURN. You propose to give them here in this bill the power to extend conduits. You give them the power to maintain these poles, and you impose no limitation as to how long they shall maintain these poles. You put upon them no requirement to place conduits in lieu of these poles. There is not in this bill a word of prohibition on the one hand or of requirement on the other. You give the Commissioners the amplest power to grant to this company all the further privileges that they may want, and you put no restraining hands upon them at all.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman evidently takes a view of this bill that is farfetched. Now, this is a bill which requires certain things to be done. It requires conduits to be built; it authorizes the Commissioners to require certain work to be done, and to put the wires into the conduits.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is, in the streets, not in these alleys. It is a power to enlarge their business, to increase their service, and all that; and yet you have not done anything whatever to compel them to observe the law. Why do you not put a condition in here that these privileges shall be available to them when they have complied with the statute now on the statute book?

Mr. BABCOCK. Would the gentleman vote for a law that the Supreme Court would say confiscates the property of this company?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would not care what the supreme court of this District might have said on a question of this kind.

Mr. BABCOCK. I mean the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. Who tried this case? Who made up the case? What was there tried? The case was prepared, I undertake to say, in all its features in the interest of the telephone company; and the court under such circumstances has held that a $50 rate is confiscation. Does the gentleman believe that? He voted for this bill. Does he not know that there was some chicanery, some fraud, some deceit, brought to bear upon that court?

In the town where I live, in all the villages of this country, we are getting to-day the very best telephone service, with the very best appliances and with long-distance phones, for $25 a year, where there are only three or four hundred subscribers. The gentleman knows that is being done; yet, in a city like this, where there are eight thousand, ten thousand, or fifteen thousand subscribers, paying $125 or $150 a year these gentlemen constituting this company are saying that there is confiscation if you add new lines and require a $50 rate. I think the gentleman knows that that is only a pretense.

Mr. BABCOCK. I am astonished, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman should suggest that the courts here are guilty of chicanery.

Mr. HEPBURN. I did not say the courts were guilty of chicanery, but that imposition was practiced upon them.

Mr. BABCOCK. The parties who defended this suit were the Commissioners or other officers of the District of Columbia; and never in all my experience as chairman of the District Committee have I found one circumstance upon which it could be charged that there had been chicanery or dishonest acts on their part. And certainly I do not believe that the gentleman from Iowa wants to make that broad charge. I believe that they have done their duty honestly and faithfully. This matter of rates has gone to the Supreme Court of the United States; and as I stated before, the officials of the District of Columbia have waited and waited for this decision, and the committee has waited without taking any action, until we have reached the point where some action is necessary.

I believe I may say here that no member of this House has done more than I have to secure the rights of citizens on the rate question. I supported the amendment to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then you believed in it?

Mr. BABCOCK. I did.

Mr. HEPBURN. And you believed in it from observation?

Mr. BABCOCK. I believed in it from observation, but not from information.

Mr. HEPBURN. Were you not informed?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; I am not informed. And is the gentleman from Iowa informed what this service can be rendered for?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not a bit of doubt but that the gentleman is informed; and while he has not studied this matter from the statements of interested telephone people he has observed what other companies are doing in other places. He has observed at what rates this valuable service is rendered to other communities, and therefore he takes the position of believing that when a man says it costs four times as much to render the service in the city of Washington as it does to render it in the villages of this country of four and five and six thousand inhabitants that man simply lies in his own interest and he does not believe him, and therefore he is not willing to foster his interests while he is imposing upon the public in that way. Now, I say that this bill does nothing but to increase the value of this franchise to this company that is now contumacious of an act of Congress, that is now robbing the people of this District every day, and that ought to be brought in some way or other to a speedy reckoning with the people. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the gentleman from Iowa finds so many robbers and conspirators this morning.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; he has found but one; he has found only one.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to call his attention to a few facts——

Mr. HEPBURN. And that is the telephone company.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to call his attention to a few facts that evidently he is not advised about. First, I wish to ask him a question, as to whether he can state to this House what the telephone rates are here to-day.

Mr. HEPBURN. I know this. I know that I tried to get the service in my house and I could not do it for less than $75 or $80.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, I will state a few facts in reference to these matters, which will probably be a matter of news to the gentleman from Iowa. The rates that were in force in the District of Columbia at the time this amendment was passed on the appropriation bill were $96 flat for private residences and $125 for business houses?

Mr. HEPBURN. When?

Mr. BABCOCK. At the time the amendment was passed on the appropriation bill. I do not remember the date. Now, the present rate runs from $36 to $120 for the year. The highest rate in the city is in the largest business houses, $120 for unlimited service, and it runs down to $36 in private houses.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman ought to explain that $36 business. It is simply a delusion and a snare.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will explain it, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. WACHTER. With about 12 on a line.

Mr. BABCOCK. Here is the rate which is published by the company, and anybody can see it. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that since that time the telephone rates have been reduced more than 35 per cent.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Is it to be a question or a speech?

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that the $36 rate is the rate given to people who will go on to a party wire?

Mr. BABCOCK. A party wire.

Mr. TAWNEY. Where there are from four to eight subscribers?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; four.

Mr. TAWNEY. Four is the limit?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. So that the company is getting out of the service of one wire four times $36 a year.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is hardly a fair statement, Mr. Speaker, because there are four telephones.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. The rates, as I stated before, since this discussion in the House, have been reduced more than 35 per cent. Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I offer increases the area of the proposed underground system in the city, and includes Washington Heights, Columbia Heights, and all of the thickly settled part of Washington. It meets the views of the Citizens' Association and of the District Commissioners; and I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that that amendment be read—the amendment that I offered to the first section.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the committee amendments in the bill have been adopted, but the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin have not yet been voted on. If there is no objection, they will again be read to the House.

The Clerk again read the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COWHERD. I desire about five minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I violate no confidence of the committee in saying that when this matter first came up in the committee I opposed the passage of the bill at that time, not because I opposed any particular provision in the bill, but I thought the time was not ripe for legislating on this subject. As everyone knows the history of this telephone case, there is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States a case appealed first from the supreme court of the District, and then again from the court of appeals of the District.

That case arose upon the law under which we fixed the rates at $50 a year. As I understand it, the supreme court of the District held the rate fixed by Congress to be unreasonable. The court of appeals of the District reversed the supreme court and sustained the law. The case is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. I thought we should wait until that case was determined. The matter has been argued and submitted there and has been held by the court now for something more than a month. If nothing is done in the passage of this bill, or this bill amended as it may be by the House, the people of the District will be unable to obtain additional telephone service until Congress shall act upon the matter at the next session. Now, the matter has been held here before the House since it was reported by the committee, something over a month, I think, or nearly two months. I do not feel like opposing the passage of this bill any longer. I am not opposed to the provisions of the bill. As I understand the provisions of the bill, they simply give to this company the right to extend its wires and conduits under the authority of the Commissioners of the District without coming to Congress for a special act.

Now, I fully agree with the gentleman from Iowa that this company is to-day charging entirely too much for its service; so much so in fact that its charges are little less than robbery. But we have attempted to regulate those charges. I do not know how we can further regulate them until the court acts upon that case; that is, I do not know how we could act further intelligently in regulating them until the Supreme Court acts upon that case. If the Supreme Court holds that regulation was valid, no further action of Congress would be needed. If they hold that regulation was invalid or unreasonable, then in the light of the decision of the court it will be the duty of the District Committee and this House to proceed to pass some bill that is just and valid, fixing the rates of that company. In this bill we reserve the right to change, alter, or amend. And while I believe, and so stated in the committee, that it would have been better to await the decision of the court, and while I have done what I could to delay action on this bill for some time, because I believed that it was better for us to regulate the rate at the same time that they were asking for an extension of their lines under the authority of Congress, yet I do not believe that we would be acting justly toward the people of the District of Columbia in refusing to give any further right for the extension of lines and letting the matter go over for some six or seven months until Congress should meet again.

Mr. BARTLETT. This company, as the gentleman from Missouri says, has absolutely refused to carry out the requirements that Congress placed upon it in the act that we passed as an amendment to the appropriation bill. Now, why should these gentlemen come here and ask additional privileges from Congress until they either comply with the law or until the law is held to be invalid? This is a privilege which they are asking.

Mr. COWHERD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Why should we grant any additional privilege to the company under the circumstances?

Mr. COWHERD. I would not grant it by reason of anything that the company asks or does. The company has no equities whatever worthy of consideration; but the people of the District of Columbia have. There are some 700 applications now pending, I understand, where the people are asking for additional telephone service. Several of them have come to me and to other members of the committee and asked us to withdraw our opposition to this bill in order that they might get telephones in their houses.

Mr. BARTLETT. At the exorbitant rates now asked?

Mr. COWHERD. At the exorbitant rates now being charged. Still the people are demanding the service, notwithstanding the charges for it are too high. It seems to me it is our duty to permit them to put these telephones in. It is our duty to proceed to regulate those rates. If the Supreme Court of the United States upholds the present law, we have regulated them, and no further legislation will be necessary. If it holds the present law bad, then we should pass another.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What are the rates now imposed in the District?

Mr. COWHERD. I can not give them exactly. We have had that up a time or two. There is no law fixing the rates, and the company fixes them at what it pleases.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you know how much the rates are at present?

Mr. COWHERD. About a hundred dollars a year, I think, for a metallic circuit in a business house.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How long since the rate was fixed at $50 by Congress?

Mr. COWHERD. I think it was in 1898.

Mr. SHAFROTH. An appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. COWHERD. The case has been argued and submitted in the Supreme Court of the United States something more than two months ago.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does that go upon the regular calendar, to be reached in its regular order, or is it preferred by reason of it being District business?

Mr. COWHERD. I know of no reason why it should be preferred.

Mr. McDERMOTT. It has been reached, and has been argued and submitted.

Mr. COWHERD. It has been reached and argued and submitted, and I inquired of the clerk of the court some two weeks ago when we might hope for a decision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What did he say?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I want about two minutes more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What did the clerk reply?

Mr. COWHERD. The clerk said, when I inquired when this decision would be rendered, that he could give us no information whatever—that there might be a decision in a week or it might not be decided for months.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Another question.

Mr. COWHERD. Just one moment. I understand from the gentleman from Tennessee that it will be decided on Monday next.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A press representative stated to me just a while ago, and he is very reliable, that a decision was looked for next Monday,

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can the gentleman state whether if these rates shall be held by the court to be legal will the people get back the money that they have been compelled to pay the telephone company?

Mr. COWHERD. I am unable to answer that question. That is a question of law, and I would rather rely upon the opinion of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. COWHERD. I yield first to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman has stated that there were 700 applications for telephones which could not be considered because of the want of this legislation. How many of these applications are dependent upon the conduit system which is authorized in this bill?

Mr. COWHERD. I can not answer that question. I only know that several gentlemen have come to me—one of them Senator Blackburn—and stated that they could not get telephones, because the Commissioners had no authority to permit the company to extend their wires and stretch them across any street or alley except by special act of Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the fact I wanted to bring out. Now, this authorizes the Commissioners in their discretion to grant the extension of existing lines or ducts necessary to give connection with the residences of the applicants for these phones. Is that what is necessary to get the service to the 700 people for which they apply? It is not necessary to extend the conduit system in order to accomplish that, but to stop taking down the poles and wires that are now standing and which are required to be taken down by direction of the Commissioners.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to say, in reply to that, that so far as the telephone company is concerned, it has no franchise in the city of Washington, but they have come in from time to time and got authority to lay a duct or extend their poles here and there; and I want to say that I think they ought to have authority to build this duct system and authority to extend it from time to time, but when the act is passed giving them that authority there ought to be a reservation of the right to regulate the rates. If Congress passes an act regulating the rates charged, I am not in favor of a competing company. I have never been in favor of that except in order to regulate the rates.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there anything in the bill which will prevent Congress from regulating the rates?

Mr. COWHERD. This bill especially reserves the right to alter or amend or repeal.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I just wish to have time for this question.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman to answer this question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood that this proposition has been deferred until the Supreme Court could render its decision in this matter.

Mr. COWHERD. I stated that I opposed action in committee until a decision should be rendered by the Supreme Court. It has been held up since the committee voted to report it for about two months, waiting and expecting I suppose—I know that that was what I had in mind—that there would be a decision made. And now, unless some decision is made at this time, the chances are that no action will be taken at this session which will give these people an opportunity to be furnished with the service which they desire to have. For this reason I have decided to vote for the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. It will be impossible to pass a bill before Congress adjourns.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Congress is not going to adjourn, Mr. Speaker, before the middle of July, and the case will be decided before then. I am informed that it will be decided next Monday.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? If I understand, if this bill does not pass it will preclude affording any additional telephone service until we do pass a bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is it exactly. No additional service can be given where ducts are required or wires are required. The Commissioners have issued all the permits they can under existing law.

Mr. SWANSON. If Congress adjourns without passing this bill, the chairman of the committee gives it as his understanding that during the summer, and until Congress reconvenes, these people will not get this additional service that they require?

Mr. BABCOCK. They will get none at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman has stated that unless this bill passes 700 applicants for telephones will be deprived of that service until Congress convenes.

Mr. BABCOCK. Until the company has the right or authority given them to make connections.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, now, the passage of this bill is not essential, is it, to give these people that telephone service that they want?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, there is no authority to reach them by wire.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can not we authorize the Commissioners, by resolution or bill, to give to the telephone company authority to so extend its overhead wires to make the necessary residence connections, and extend the conduits that are at present laid.

Mr. BABCOCK. Congress has acted time and again against any extension of overhead wires. And I want to say to the gentleman that no resolution could pass Congress authorizing an extension of overhead wires in the city of Washington.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is an existing law; why can not they put on the additional wires on the poles that are now up?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is not a question of existing law; it is a question of whether they can be reached from the present poles and from the conduits that they have.

Mr. SWANSON. Does this bill specifically reserve the right in the future for Congress to fix the rates?

Mr. BABCOCK. The bill specifically reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, Congress has already fixed the rate?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. And the question of rates and the fixing of rates is still pending in the United States courts?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. If they decide that the rates are constitutional and legal, these new privileges given under this bill will be subject to the rates previously fixed?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. If it is decided legal, this bill reserves the right to fix the rates in the future so they can not be exorbitant?

Mr. BABCOCK. It does.

Mr. SWANSON. Then what is the contention about here?

Mr. BABCOCK. I must say that I hardly understand it myself. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BABCOCK. They take in the thickly settled part of Columbia Heights.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendments reported again.

The Clerk again reported the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] ten minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, if I was to make a statement here about the progress of the bill it would be a repetition of what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has stated. I have asked all along on every occasion that action be deferred until the Supreme Court rendered its decision. The court now has the case under advisement, having heard it, and we do not know of course what moment they may decide it or how long they will hold it up. I was anxious to-day to further delay the action on the bill in order that we might get the benefit of the decision of the Supreme Court; but the argument is made to me that if there is any further delay action will not be taken on the bill at all at this session, and therefore no additional telephones can be put up. I thought, and think yet, that the bill may be rendered unobjectionable by making an amendment, and here is the amendment which I will propose at the proper time. I want to say, further, that I would be glad if any gentleman that is acquainted with the matter more than I am will perfect it, because I am not sufficiently acquainted with telephone matters to undertake to perfect the bill. I believe this amendment which I will offer as a separate section would make the bill unobjectionable in every way. This is the amendment I propose:

Any telephone company operating under the provisions of this law shall charge not exceeding $50 a year for telephones.

If the present law is sustained there will be no use for this amendment; if it should go down, this amendment will be needed. This amendment, it seems to me, can not be objectionable.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman how this amendment changes the law that is now in force?

Mr. SIMS. It does not change it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I thought we provided for two classes of service, for a business house and for private houses.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to this amendment being perfected, as I am not familiar with these matters. This puts the rate at $50, which I understand to be the maximum rate under existing law.

Mr. HULL. That is the law now, as I understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HULL. And that question is now before the court?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HULL. Wherein does it benefit the people to put it in the statute again? If Congress holds it is a legal rate under existing law, it already applies. If the court holds it is confiscation, would not they hold the same thing in this case?

Mr. SIMS. The point is this: I am intending to make the granting of privileges under this bill conditional upon the idea that they shall not exceed $50, making it in the nature of a contract, so that they must comply with it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's intention is to make this in the nature of a contract?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; in the nature of a contract.

Mr. TAWNEY. And it would be perpetual?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. So they could charge that rate for all time? No matter what improvements were made in the service, they would continue to charge for residence phones as well as for business phones $50 a year?

Mr. SIMS. Not exceeding $50.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not exceeding $50. Does not the gentleman think he ought to classify the service or the charges, so as to make the charge for the resident phones not to exceed thirty-six and the business phone not to exceed fifty dollars?

Mr. SIMS. That might be very proper. As I have stated, I am not sufficiently familiar with this business to perfect the amendment, but I do want substantially this amendment to go upon the bill, because it makes this measure in the nature of a contract, so that whether the law now existing is sustained or not by the courts this act will remain valid. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] can offer an amendment to my amendment so as to better accomplish the object I have in view, I certainly have no objection.

Mr. SWANSON. If I understand the gentleman from Tennessee correctly, this amendment will simply apply to new extensions of the telephone service.

Mr. SIMS. New extensions granted under this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Then this is a new extension?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. And if anybody is willing to pay more than $50 for additional service, and the company refuses to furnish it, such a person can not get a phone until Congress sees proper to adopt new legislation on the subject. Suppose a man is willing to pay more than $50 for a phone, and the company is not willing to grant him the service, then he can not have this new extension under the present bill.

Mr. SIMS. My intention is that there shall be no charge exceeding $50 for the extended service which may be granted under this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Then there may be two or three different rates for similar service.

Mr. SIMS. I am undertaking to deal with this bill now before us—not with reference to making a classification of the service heretofore established.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My colleague [Mr. SIMS] says, if I understand him, that this amendment is to apply only to new routes. Now, if $50 should in the future prove to be too high a charge——

Mr. SIMS. Then it can be lowered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the company should want a further extension of its privileges, we can say "You must grant a reduction upon the $50 rate or we will not grant you the privileges you ask."

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. There can be no law, of course, to keep the company from reducing its rates, but this will simply fix a maximum. I have nothing more to say on the amendment. I will send it up to the desk as soon as it is written out.

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The Clerk will read the amendment for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill a new section, to be section 8, to read as follows:
"Any telephone company operating under the provisions of this bill shall charge not to exceed $50 per year for telephones."

Mr. BABCOCK. I make a point of order against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] for the purpose of offering the amendment?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yielded to the gentleman ten minutes, without stating any specific purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has no right to offer any amendment unless the gentleman from Wisconsin yielded to him for that purpose.

Mr. BABCOCK. I did not yield for that purpose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There was no objection made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has not offered the amendment; it has been read now for the information of the House. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for the purpose of offering the amendment now?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; but I will make a point of order upon the amendment. There is no provision whatever in this bill in reference to rates; there is no provision granting any rights to any telephone company. The bill simply grants authority to the Commissioners to do certain things that only Congress is authorized at the present time to do. The amendment is not germane at all to the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I have offered the amendment, the gentleman from Wisconsin yielding to me for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on the point of order. The point of order is made that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin hold that this amendment is not germane to the purposes of the bill? Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose it is necessary to make an argument on that matter. If we are granting to this company the privilege of laying wires through streets and alleys, we certainly may couple with that privilege conditions under which it may be done.

Mr. BABCOCK. We are not granting privileges to any company. We are authorizing the Commissioners, a separate branch of the Government, to do this thing.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I am frank to say that I am in favor of this amendment. In the committee I reserved——

The SPEAKER. That is not an argument on the point of order.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I am going to argue on the point of order. This is not an appropriation bill upon which legislation can not be attached. This is a bill giving privileges in the way of extensions to the telephone company, and I can not imagine under what theory of the rules it can be argued that we can not annex conditions as to the exercise of the rights which we vote here to grant. I do not think the point is susceptible of argument as against the amendment. There is nothing in the rule that applies to it. It is simply annexing conditions to the grant and user of the rights which we undertake to give, or, rather, it is stronger than that. We are undertaking here not to give an absolute right but a conditional one, and Congress, it seems to me beyond question, can always do that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply on this point of order to call the attention of the House to a decision made by the Chair at the last Congress, to be found on page 1262 of the RECORD. A bill which was then being considered on Monday, the day on which bills relating to the District of Columbia were under consideration, and it had for its purpose the authorizing of the laying of mains in the streets by the gas company. An amendment was offered to that bill fixing the price of gas to be charged by the company, which was then seeking to obtain the right and privilege to lay its mains in the streets and to extend its mains in the streets, and on a point of order it was held the amendment was germane to the bill. It was so held in the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and the decision will be found on page 1262 of the RECORD and on page 319 of the Manual. I think that is exactly in point, from my recollection of the case. The authority reads that the bill referred generally to affairs of the gas company, and the amendment introducing the subject of the price of gas was held to be germane. Now, this is a bill in which they ask Congress to permit them to extend their wires along the streets.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman to give the citation to which he refers. Page 319 does not give the case. What is the RECORD page?

Mr. BARTLETT. It is in the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, RECORD page 1262. I will hand up to the Chair the Manual from which I am reading.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that the bill he refers to was an entirely different proposition. It authorized an increase of capitalization; it granted certain and specific rights in the streets of the District. This bill does nothing of the kind. It has nothing to do with the capital or with any specific rights, but simply grants authority to a coordinate branch of the Government to do a specific thing. It gives the Commissioners authority to do certain things, which authority is not now possessed by them.

Mr. BARTLETT. In reply to that suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, it occurs to me that there is a similarity, and that the case is on all fours with the case referred to. In that case the gas company came to Congress asking it to permit it to do certain things in the District of Columbia, either to increase its capital stock or to extend its mains, dig up the street and extend them along the streets, which it had not then the authority to do. The present bill proposes to give this telephone company authority and rights which it did not possess, authority to extend its lines and mains along the streets——

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. This statement is misleading. This bill does not do anything of the kind. It authorizes the Commissioners to do certain things, but it does not confer upon the telephone company any rights. They can not do a single act by the passage of this bill except by applying to the Commissioners and getting permission from them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on this question. The Chair finds the authority cited by the gentleman and remembers the case very well. The title of that bill was a bill referring generally to the affairs of a gas company, and an amendment introducing the subject of the price of gas was held to be germane. On January 21, 1901, the House was considering a bill (H. R. 13660) relating to the Washington Gaslight Company, and for other purposes. Mr. William W. Grout, of Vermont, moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to report the bill back with this amendment:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1902, the Washington Gaslight Company shall furnish gas to the people of the District of Columbia for 90 cents per 1,000 cubic feet; on and after July 1, 1903, for 80 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, and on and after July 1, 1904, for 75 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

Mr. JOSEPH W. BABCOCK, of Wisconsin, made the point of order that the bill did not deal with the price of gas, and that therefore the amendment proposed would not be germane.

The Speaker said:

The Chair has not read the bill through, and the confusion of this morning made it almost impossible to hear it. Still the Chair sees that this is for the purpose of giving a franchise to this company, and here is a proviso:

"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may require said company to lay such mains or conduits in any graded street, highway, avenue, or alley in the District of Columbia not already provided therewith, as may be necessary."

It seems to be a general bill regulating the gas business and this gas company, and the Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken and that the instructions of the gentleman from Vermont are in order.

Now, here was a general bill going into the question of the regulation of the gas company. As is stated in the decision, it treated of a franchise; but there is nothing of that character in the present bill. It does not grant any corporate rights. It does not establish a company or clothe it with power. It does not treat of stocks, bonds, or any of the elements connected with the organizing of a corporation, but treats of a corporation in existence and franchises and powers that the corporation already possesses. How? By authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate this matter. It does not go into the question of prices or rates in any shape or form, nor does it invite anything of that kind. When you come to treat of incorporating a company, these are limitations that should be put on and enforced, but not on a bill of this kind, which treats wholly of the question of conduits.

The Chair thinks that the point of order is clearly well taken.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the bill has been pretty thoroughly discussed, and I rose for the purpose of asking the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right, but he has no right to control the floor and prevent the offering of amendments, after having yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee to offer an amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. I did not understand the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to demand the previous question, but he can not control the floor to prevent amendments, after having yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee to offer an amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will withhold the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not demand the previous question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not now.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end of section 6——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HEPBURN (reading):

Provided, That the privileges herein authorized to be extended to persons or corporations shall be exercised on condition only that service shall be furnished on the terms and at the prices now authorized by law.

Mr. BABCOCK. I make the same point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I drew that amendment——

The SPEAKER. The amendment has not been reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 6 the following:

"Provided, That the privileges herein authorized to be extended to persons or corporations shall be exercised on condition only that service shall be furnished on the terms and at the prices now authorized by law."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, the same as to the other amendment, that the bill does not deal with rights or franchises, and that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this bill originally bore this title:

To provide for the removal of overhead telegraph and telephone wires in the city of Washington, for the construction of conduits in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The amended title, however, reads:

A bill regulating the use of telephone wires in the District of Columbia.

Now, the bill gives to the Commissioners certain powers. It gives them the right to authorize this corporation to extend its conduits, and to establish poles in the alleys in the city and on the highways in the District, to renew those poles, to use them in house connection and otherwise. Now, here is simply another limitation upon the power of the Commissioners that they shall not give that privilege to any corporation except a corporation that furnishes service in accordance with the provisions of existing law. It is only an additional limitation upon the exercise of power on the part of the Commissioners.

The SPEAKER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is substantially the same as the one that has just been ruled upon, although framed in a different way. The Commissioners can not be treated from any standpoint except that which is tendered by the bill under consideration. The gentleman from Iowa can offer amendments affecting these conduits, the depth that they may be placed in the ground, the size of them, or anything bearing upon the propositions in the bill; but when he attempts to instruct the Commissioners and to bind them on a matter that is purely reached by the incorporating acts themselves, he steps entirely outside of the province of the bill, and offers a proposition that is not germane thereto.

Mr. HEPBURN. I thought, Mr. Speaker, it would be entirely legitimate to state by law the number of wires that may be used in a cable, the number of compartments that may be in a conduit; and if that is so, then can not we go a step further and say how and under what terms one of these 10, 15, or 20 wires in a cable may be used.

The SPEAKER. The distinction is a very sharp one. It is a pure conduit-planting bill, and anything bearing upon that question is legitimate and germane; but when you go back to the constituting instrument and the questions therein this bill does not permit it. If that should be permitted, then you could in this bill take up the question of capital stock. The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that this amendment is not germane.

Mr. HEPBURN. That would be a matter of organization; this is a matter of the use of a franchise after granted.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 26.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 56, answered "present" 20, not voting 166; as follows:

YEAS—109.

Adams,	Dalzell,	Knapp,	Payne,
Alexander,	Draper,	Lacey,	Powers, Me.
Allen, Me.	Eddy,	Landis,	Powers, Mass.
Babcock,	Emerson,	Latimer,	Rhea, Va.
Ball, Del.	Esch,	Lessler,	Richardson, Tenn.
Bates,	Fletcher,	Lewis, Pa.	Ruppert,
Blackburn,	Flood,	Lloyd,	Ryan,
Blakeney,	Fowler,	Loud,	Shattuc,
Bowersock,	Gibson,	Loudenslager,	Sherman,
Bowie,	Goldfogle,	McCleary,	Sibley,
Bromwell,	Graff,	McDermott,	Smith, Ill.
Brownlow,	Greene, Mass.	McLachlan,	Southwick,
Burk, Pa.	Grow,	Mahon,	Sperry,
Burke, S. Dak.	Hamilton,	Mann,	Stewart, N. Y.
Butler, Pa.	Hay,	Metcalf,	Storm,
Cannon,	Hitt,	Mondell,	Sulloway,
Capron,	Holliday,	Moody, N. C.	Sulzer,
Cassel,	Howell,	Moody, Oreg.	Swanson,
Clark,	Hughes,	Morgan,	Tirrell,
Connell,	Hull,	Morris,	Tompkins, Ohio
Coombs,	Irwin,	Moss,	Wachter,
Cooney,	Jack,	Mudd,	Wadsworth,
Cooper, Wis.	Jenkins,	Mutchler,	Warner,
Cousins,	Jett,	Needham,	Watson,
Cowherd,	Jones, Wash.	Otjen,	Woods.
Creamer,	Joy,	Overstreet,
Cromer,	Ketcham,	Palmer,
Cushman,	Kleberg,	Patterson, Pa.

NAYS—56.

Adamson,	Driscoll,	McLain,	Sims,
Allen, Ky.	Foster, Ill.	Maddox,	Small,
Ball, Tex.	Gaines, Tenn.	Neville,	Smith, Ky.
Bartlett,	Gilbert,	Perkins,	Snodgrass,
Bell,	Henry, Miss.	Randell, Tex.	Snook,
Bishop,	Hepburn,	Ransdell, La.	Sparkman,
Brundidge,	Hill,	Ray, N. Y.	Spight,
Burleson,	Hopkins,	Robinson, Ind.	Tawney,
Candler,	Howard,	Rucker,	Underwood,
Cochran,	Kehoe,	Rumple,	Vandiver,
Conner,	Kitchin, Claude	Scarborough,	Williams, Ill.
Davis, Fla.	Lanham,	Selby,	Williams, Miss.
De Armond,	Lever,	Shackleford,	Wooten,
Dinsmore,	Little,	Shafroth,	Zenor.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—20.

Boreing,	Griffith,	Meyer, La.	Richardson, Ala.
Boutell,	Henry, Conn.	Miers, Ind.	Shallenberger,
Cassingham,	Johnson,	Naphen,	Stephens, Tex.
Cooper, Tex.	McClellan,	Padgett,	Thomas, Iowa
Evans,	McRae,	Reid,	Trimble.

NOT VOTING—166.

Acheson,	Dovener,	Knox,	Robertson, La.
Aplin,	Edwards,	Kyle,	Robinson, Nebr.
Bankhead,	Elliott,	Lamb,	Russell,
Barney,	Feely,	Lassiter,	Schirm,
Bartholdt,	Finley,	Lawrence,	Scott,
Beidler,	Fitzgerald,	Lester,	Shelden,
Bellamy,	Fleming,	Lewis, Ga.	Sheppard,
Belmont,	Foerderer,	Lindsay,	Showalter,
Benton,	Fordney,	Littauer,	Skiles,
Bingham,	Foss,	Littlefield,	Slayden,
Brantley,	Foster, Vt.	Livingston,	Smith, Iowa
Breazeale,	Fox,	Long,	Smith, H. C.
Brick,	Gaines, W. Va.	Lovering,	Smith, S. W.
Bristow,	Gardner, Mich.	McAndrews,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Broussard,	Gardner, N. J.	McCall,	Southard,
Brown,	Gill,	McCulloch,	Stark,
Bull,	Gillet, N. Y.	Mahoney,	Steele,
Burgess,	Gillett, Mass.	Marshall,	Stevens, Minn.
Burkett,	Glenn,	Martin,	Stewart, N. J.
Burleigh,	Gooch,	Maynard,	Sutherland,
Burnett,	Gordon,	Mercer,	Talbert,
Burton,	Graham,	Mickey,	Tate,
Butler, Mo.	Green, Pa.	Miller,	Tayler, Ohio
Calderhead,	Griggs,	Minor,	Taylor, Ala.
Caldwell,	Grosvenor,	Moon,	Thayer,
Clayton,	Hall,	Morrell,	Thomas, N. C.
Conry,	Hanbury,	Nevin,	Thompson,
Corliss,	Haskins,	Newlands,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Crowley,	Haugen,	Norton,	Tongue,
Crumpacker,	Heatwole,	Olmsted,	Van Voorhis,
Currier,	Hedge,	Parker,	Vreeland,
Curtis,	Hemenway,	Patterson, Tenn.	Wanger,
Dahle,	Henry, Tex.	Pearre,	Warnock,
Darragh,	Hildebrant,	Pierce,	Weeks,
Davey, La.	Hooker,	Pou,	Wheeler,
Davidson,	Jackson, Kans.	Prince,	White,
Dayton,	Jackson, Md.	Pugsley,	Wiley,
De Graffenreid,	Jones, Va.	Reeder,	Wilson,
Deemer,	Kahn,	Reeves,	Wright,
Dick,	Kern,	Rixey,	Young.
Dougherty,	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Robb,
Douglas,	Kluttz,	Roberts,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. LITTLE. I desire to vote. I have been in my seat.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present in the Hall of the House?

Mr. LITTLE. In my seat.

The SPEAKER. Listening when his name was called and failed to hear it?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Call the name of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The name of Mr. LITTLE was called, and he voted "nay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. DAYTON with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. STARK.

For this day:

Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. KERN for balance of day.

On this vote:

Mr. DICK with Mr. RIXEY.

Mr. DEEMER with Mr. BURNETT.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. BRANTLEY.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment to the title will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OCCUPATION OF STREETS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BY CERTAIN RAILROADS DURING ENCAMPMENT OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of Senate resolution 87, to permit steam railroads in the District of Columbia to occupy additional parts of streets in order to accommodate the traveling public attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in October, 1902.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue to steam railroad companies in said District permits to temporarily occupy additional parts of streets for the purpose of accommodating the traveling public attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in October, 1902: Provided, That such temporary occupation shall not exceed the period of fifteen days and shall be subject to conditions prescribed by said Commissioners.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take up House bill 12805, requiring the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company to extend its Eleventh street line, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia, be, and it hereby is, authorized and required to construct the necessary tracks and to make the necessary connections for the purpose of operating its cars by the underground electric system, such as is now in use on its Eleventh street line, over and along the following route, namely: Beginning at the northern terminus of its Eleventh street line at Eleventh street and Florida avenue north, by double track, along Eleventh street to Lydecker avenue; thence easterly, by single track, along Lydecker avenue to Morgan street; thence northerly along Morgan street to Lamar place; thence west along Lamar place to Eslin street; thence south along Eslin street to Lydecker avenue, connecting at that point with the tracks herein authorized.

SEC. 2. That the extension herein authorized shall be completed and the cars operated thereon within two years from the date of the issuance of a permit by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the extension herein provided for shall be constructed in accordance with plans satisfactory to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and approved by them.

SEC. 4. That the said Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company shall have over and respecting the route herein provided for the same rights, powers, and privileges it has, or hereafter may have, by law over and respecting its other routes, and be subject in respect thereto to all the other provisions of its charter and of law.

The Clerk read the following amendments, recommended by the committee:

In line 14, page 1, strike out the words "Lamar place" where they occur and substitute therefor the following: "Spring street."

Add as a new section to the bill, to be designated "Section 5," the following:

"SEC. 5. Congress reserves the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 282. An act providing for the appointment of James W. Long, late a captain, United States Army, a captain of infantry, and for placing his name on the retired list.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3360) for the promotion of First Lieut. Joseph M. Simms, Revenue-Cutter Service, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4264) providing that the statutes of limitations of the several States shall apply as a defense to actions brought in any courts for the recovery of lands patented under the treaty of May 10, 1854, between the United States of America and the Shawnee tribe of Indians.

PREVENTION OF SMOKE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take up the bill (H. R. 14147) to amend an act for the prevention of smoke in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved February 2, 1899.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act for the prevention of smoke in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved February 2, 1899, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "That on and after the passage of this act the emission of dense or thick black or gray smoke or cinders for a continuous period of three minutes from any smokestack or chimney used in connection with any stationary engine, steam boiler, or furnace of any description within the District of Columbia shall be deemed and is hereby declared to be a public nuisance: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as applied to chimneys of buildings used exclusively for private residences.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHURCHES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA OUTSIDE OF FIRE LIMITS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14050) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia," approved March 1, 1899, be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That this requirement shall not apply to churches erected outside of the fire limits as now or hereafter established within the District of Columbia."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

DOGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 4792) relative to the control of dogs in the District of Columbia. The House committee reported a substitute for the Senate bill, and I ask that the substitute be read instead of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment by way of substitute will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3, 4, and 9 of the act of Congress approved June 19, 1878, entitled "An act to create a revenue in the District of Columbia by levying a tax upon all dogs therein, to make such dogs personal property, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the pound master of the District of Columbia shall, during the entire year, seize all dogs found running at large without the tax tag issued by the collector aforesaid attached, and all female dogs in heat found running at large, and shall impound the same; and if within forty-eight hours the same are not redeemed by the owners thereof by the payment of $2 they shall be sold or destroyed, as the pound master may deem advisable, and any sale made by virtue hereof shall be deemed valid to all intents and purposes in all courts of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 4. That any dog wearing the tax tag hereinbefore provided for, except female dogs in heat, shall be permitted to run at large within the District of Columbia, and any dog wearing the tax tag hereinbefore provided for shall be regarded as personal property in all the courts of said District, and any person injuring or destroying the same shall be liable to a civil action for damages, which, upon proof of said injuring or killing, may be awarded in a sum equal to the value usually put upon such property by persons buying and selling the same, subject to such modifications as the particular circumstances of the case may make proper.

"SEC. 9. That if any owner or possessor of a fierce or dangerous dog shall permit the same to go at large in the District of Columbia, knowing said dog to be fierce or dangerous, to the danger or annoyance of the inhabitants, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $20; and if such animal shall attack or bite any person, the owner or possessor thereof shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $50, and in addition to such punishment the court shall adjudge and order that such animal be forthwith delivered to the pound master, and said pound master is hereby authorized and directed to kill such animal so delivered to him.

"If any owner or possessor of a female dog shall permit her to go at large in the District of Columbia while in heat he shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $20."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment by way of substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

REFUNDING OF CERTAIN LICENSE TAXES BY THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take up the bill (S. 3208) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain license taxes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to refund to wholesale and retail liquor dealers who were engaged in business in said District on March 3, 1899, moneys erroneously collected as license taxes for the license year ending October 31, 1899.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the preceding section the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to adjust the amounts found to be equitably due by the accounting officers of the District, and pay the same out of the fund provided for the erroneous payment of taxes.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO DISTRICT CODE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill (S. 493) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia." I ask that the substitute reported by the House committee may be read in lieu of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House be read instead of the Senate bill. Without objection, this course will be proceeded with.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what does this bill call for?

The SPEAKER. This is the District code bill.

Mr. CANNON. I think that bill is subject to consideration in Committee of the Whole House. It increases the salaries in some instances. I do not care anything about making the point provided it can be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JENKINS. We have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois, to avoid any misapprehension, that there is no increase of salary in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. There is on the face of the bill. For instance, it increases the salary of some insurance officer from $2,500 to $3,500.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I merely read the part in italics.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] admit the point made by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. I think we can adjust this question. I think this matter ought to be considered in the way I have suggested.

Mr. JENKINS. Very well; I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill by paragraphs, read the following:

Amend section 3 by adding at the end of said section the words: "No justice of the peace during his term of office shall engage in the practice of the law, subject to the penalty of removal from his office."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that section 3 is subject to amendment. I do not see why it should not be, under the rules. Section 3, which was embraced in this code as passed, starts out—

There shall be ten justices of the peace in the District.

Now, this part of the bill proposes to amend section 3 by declaring that these officers shall not practice law. I think there ought not to be more than four justices of the peace in this District.

Mr. CLARK. How can four transact the business?

Mr. CANNON. Well, the whole ten have not much business. These are salaried officers, at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and they earn in fees only a small part of their salaries.

I am not very particular about the number. It may be that there ought to be five of these officers. I have no objection to that number. But I would like to have it settled whether the section is subject to amendment. It is proposed in the bill to amend section 3 in one particular. Now, why is it not subject to amendment in another? It seems to me that it ought to be.

Mr. CLARK. Why not put the justices of the peace on a fee basis and then allow them to practice law for all it is worth?

Mr. CANNON. Formerly the justices of the peace in this District were on a fee basis, but the new code puts them on a salary basis, with salaries of $3,000 each, and gives them an allowance of, I think, two or three hundred dollars for ordinary expenses.

A MEMBER. Two hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; they are quite lordly gentlemen.

Mr. CLARK. I am not in favor of having more than four of them, if they are salaried officers.

Mr. CANNON. I do not wish to speak disrespectfully of them. In a few minutes I can get a statement of the amount of fees that they earn. The amount is a very small part of what it costs to pay them their salaries.

Mr. CLARK. If these officers are going to receive salaries at all, ought not the salaries to be on the basis of the fees? That is the way it is everywhere else.

Mr. CANNON. It would seem so; yet a different arrangement was adopted in this codification, which was made last year. I think it might be well that these should be feed officers, provided they turn in their fees in excess of $3,000.

Mr. CLARK. I know of only one place where justices of the peace get salaries, and that is St. Louis. I was a member of the legislature that helped pass the law allowing them salaries, and they were allowed salaries amounting to about one-half what they had received in fees. The reason for fixing salaries was the contention that those officers were receiving too much as fees—that they were making more than the circuit judges.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will move as an amendment to strike out, in line 1, section 3, the word "ten" and insert the word "four."

Mr. JENKINS. It seems to me the gentleman's motion ought to be to amend the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know how to offer my amendment otherwise than I am doing. The Clerk is now reading what you propose to do. You propose to substitute for the pending bill what is printed in italics. Now, I propose to amend your substitute. I ask the Clerk to put my amendment in shape.

Mr. MUDD. Allow me to say that this bill consists of certain specific amendments to the code, and we can not well amend anything which is not in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. This proposed substitute does that.

Mr. MUDD. It seems to me that the proper thing for the gentleman from Illinois to do would be to ascertain the section of the code which fixes the number of justices of the peace.

Mr. CANNON. I have done so; it is section 3.

Mr. MUDD. There is another thing which, perhaps, ought to be provided for if this amendment is to be adopted. I do not know just what shape it is in, but if I understand correctly, there is a provision in this code that each justice of the peace shall have a deputy marshal, this officer taking the place of the constable under the old law.

Now, if the gentleman thinks it is proper to reduce the number of justices of the peace, I submit to him that he better consider whether or not he wants each justice of the peace to have three or four deputy marshals or whether he wants to reduce the number of marshals.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we will reach that when we get to it.

Mr. MUDD. We must be consistent in our economy as we go along.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. MUDD. Suppose we pass that for the present.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; there are a whole lot of them. I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "office," in line 17 of the bill, amend by striking out the word "ten," in line 1 of said section, and inserting the word "four."

Mr. CANNON. So that it will then read: "There shall be four justices of the peace in the District."

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me for a moment, just for the purpose of asking a question——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will suspend a moment. The Chair is at a loss to know just the mode of procedure that the gentleman from Illinois is seeking to pursue. We have before us the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901. The Senate brought in a bill proposing certain amendments to that code. The House committee in this case has adopted section 3 by way of a substitute, the same section that the Senate has. It seems to the Chair that all we can do now is to consider these amendments and that they must be germane to the proposition in the bill, not to the code itself. The gentleman's amendment is aimed at the code.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. And there is nothing in the amendments here that touches the code so far as the amendment of the gentleman is concerned. The amendment must be germane to the bill, not to the code, and the bill does not take up the subject of the number of justices of the peace at all, neither the Senate amendment nor the amendment recommended by the committee. The Chair is of opinion that in considering this bill we have to consider the bill and not the code. Now, if the gentleman has any views on that subject, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. CANNON. I have not. I supposed the object of this bill was to amend the code. It might as well have read in this way, after reading section 3 of the code, adding what is contained in lines 15, 16, and 17. Then, undoubtedly, it seems to me it would have been subject to amendment, but that is certain which can be rendered certain. Now, the proposition is to amend section 3 by adding at the end of said section the following words:

No justice of the peace during his term of office shall engage in the practice of the law, subject to the penalty of removal from his office.

That is the proposition. This is to amend the code—a bill to amend the code. The first thing to amend is section 3. I say, very well. Now, this entire amendment to section 3, it seems to me, is germane. It is true that it is unhandy to get at.

Mr. HILL. It is to amend the code.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; the title is "To amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia.'" It seems to me any amendment from section to section, as this is being considered under the five-minute rule, and paragraph to paragraph, is apt, that amends the act. Of course, you have got to refer to the act to do that, otherwise we would deal strictly within very narrow limits in revising this act, and that is what it is, amending the whole act. We run from one section to another, and this, as I understand it, is a House substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield a moment, I want to call his attention to the fact that the section would then be very imperfect. Section 3 provides for the appointment of 10 justices of the peace.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. It further provides that the Supreme Court shall divide the district into 10 subdistricts and prescribe the place in each subdistrict where the justice thereof shall have his office, etc. Now, it would still need further change.

Mr. CANNON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. JENKINS. I would suggest that the gentleman take time to prepare a substitute for the pending proposition here on page 63, providing that section 3 of the act is hereby amended so as to read as follows, etc., and then embrace his amendment. Then the whole matter will be in harmony.

Mr. CANNON. I think that is wise, because these words ought to be stricken out:

By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

It is getting so now that you can not appoint somebody to attend an ash-hopper——

Mr. MAHON. Or a pound catcher.

Mr. CANNON. Or a pound catcher, but what under the law as it creeps in through the carelessness of the House he has got to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. [Laughter.] I think a substitute ought to be prepared, and I will say to my friend, if he is willing, I think I can in five minutes prepare a substitute for section three.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say to the gentleman and to the House that I feel it to be my duty to state, inasmuch as this matter has been brought up here, that when the code passed the House we were of opinion that five justices of the peace were all that were required; but the bill as finally passed provided for ten. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has called the attention of the District Committee to this matter, and insists that according to his information ten justices of the peace are too many at a fixed salary of $3,000 a year apiece. Now, I do not see how I can possibly make any objection to the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Illinois; but I want the legislation harmonious. I therefore ask unanimous consent that we pass this section without prejudice, to return to it when it is convenient for the gentleman from Illinois to present his amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question or two. What sort of jurisdiction do these justices have, criminal and civil both, or simply civil jurisdiction?

Mr. JENKINS. Civil jurisdiction.

Mr. CLARK. Then four are enough.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair can have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois a moment, the Chair sees what the gentleman from Illinois is seeking to accomplish. There have been a number of decisions bearing upon this question, some by the Chair in the last Congress, and others before that. It seems to the Chair that the gentleman can reach the matter that he seeks to reach by an amendment to this bill in section 3, where the justices of the peace are treated of, by a proviso that there shall not be more than eight, or whatever number he wishes, so long as the amendment is aimed at the pending bill. Of course, the House can revise the code if it wants to; but it has here simply the amendments of the Senate. Those amendments are the subject-matter now before the House.

Mr. JENKINS. Then, I will ask unanimous consent to pass over this section.

Mr. CANNON. I think I have it ready now.

Mr. JENKINS. Then I withdraw my request, as the gentleman says he has his amendment prepared.

Mr. CANNON. I will read it. I propose this amendment by way of a substitute:

SEC. 3. Appointment and qualifications.—There shall be four justices of the peace in the District, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States for a term of four years, unless sooner removed as provided by law: Provided, That no person shall be appointed to said office unless he shall have been a bona fide resident of said District for the continuous period of at least five years immediately preceding his appointment, and shall either have held the office of justice of the peace in said District for a period of at least two years or shall have been engaged in the actual practice of law before the supreme court of the District for a period of at least five years prior to his appointment. Each of said justices before entering upon the duties of his office shall take an oath for the faithful and impartial performance of the duties of his office, and shall give bond in such form, in such penalty, and with such surety or sureties as may be prescribed by the supreme court of the District. And said supreme court shall divide the said District into four subdistricts and prescribe the place in each subdistrict where the justice thereof shall have his office for the transaction of business, and may change the boundaries of such subdistricts and the localities of the offices of the justices therein from time to time as the volume and convenience of the business may require.

And then add the words that appear in this bill.

Mr. JENKINS. I should like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not think his proposed amendment will operate as a repeal to section 3 of the code.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then why not put that in there?

Mr. JENKINS. The code provides for ten justices of the peace, while the proposed amendment provides for four. It might make fourteen, instead of reducing the number.

Mr. CANNON. No; my proposition is to amend section 3——

Mr. JENKINS. Amend section 3 "so that the same shall read as follows."

Mr. CANNON. That is what I propose to do—to amend section 3 so as to read as follows; and then if the Clerk will just add to the amendment those words——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman means to strike out lines 14, 15, 16, and 17, after figure 3, and to insert.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will make it conform.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out after the figure 3, in line 14, all of the paragraph and insert the following: "So as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Appointment and qualifications.—There shall be four justices of the peace in the District, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States for a term of four years, unless sooner removed as provided by law: Provided, That no person shall be appointed to said office unless he shall have been a bona fide resident of said District for the continuous period of at least five years immediately preceding his appointment, and shall either have held the office of justice of the peace in said District for a period of at least two years or shall have been engaged in the actual practice of law before the supreme court of the District for a period of at least five years prior to his appointment. Each of said justices before entering upon the duties of his office shall take an oath for the faithful and impartial performance of the duties of his office, and shall give bond in such form, in such penalty, and with such surety or sureties as may be prescribed by the supreme court of the District. And said supreme court shall divide the said District into four subdistricts and prescribe the place in each subdistrict where the justice thereof shall have his office for the transaction of business, and may change the boundaries of such subdistricts and the localities of the offices of the justices therein from time to time as the volume and convenience of the business may require. No justice of the peace during his term of office shall engage in the practice of the law, subject to the penalty of removal from his office."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows;

Amend section 7 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 7. Jury trials: Trial by jury before justices of the peace is hereby abolished. Each justice of the peace is authorized and required on complaint under oath or actual view to issue warrants free of charge returnable to the police court, against persons accused of crimes and offenses committed in the District of Columbia, and to make a record thereof in a book to be kept for that purpose."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the entire section and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Section 7 is hereby repealed." The District code by another section gives the justice's court——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 3 to 10, inclusive, on page 64.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; 4 to 10, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is simply to strike out section 7.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please reduce his amendment to writing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, page 64, after the word "trial," in line 2, strike out all down to the word "amend," in line 11, and insert "and section 7 of said act is hereby repealed."

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, section 7, as it now stands, reads, "jury trials, trial by jury before justices of the peace is hereby abolished." That is all there is in it now. The jurisdiction of these justices of the peace extends to controversies involving the sum of $300 or less, and replevin cases, etc., involving the same amount, and then in certain cases they have concurrent jurisdiction with other courts. Now, these cases may involve substantially all that the parties are worth who are compelled to go into these courts to have their rights determined; and I simply say that, in my judgment, it is an outrage upon the people of this District, the poorer classes of people, to deny to them the right of trial by jury. Their all is as sacred to them as is the property and property rights of the more prosperous citizens.

Now, the bill proposes to amend further—and it is the gist of this amendment—that each justice of the peace is authorized and required "on complaint under oath or actual view"—I do not know what view; but on view of something, I do not know what—"to issue warrants free of charge, returnable to the police court, against persons accused of crimes and offenses committed in the District of Columbia, and to make a record thereof and in a book to be kept for that purpose." In other words, it is proposed to give jurisdiction to these justices of the peace to issue criminal process. While they are deprived of all criminal jurisdiction, they may issue criminal process either on written complaint or do it "on view," whether it is "view of the crime," "view of the complainant," "view of the defendant," "view of the heavens," or "view of the adjacent property," or what they do not say. But I am opposed to this provision, and I hope this House is opposed to it. If they are unworthy to have criminal jurisdiction to hear and determine the merits of a complaint, they ought not to have the right to issue criminal process. Let the complainant go to the criminal courts or police justices.

In the State of New York a criminal process can not be issued by any officer until he has before him a complaint reduced to writing, until witnesses have been sworn to ascertain whether there is some cause to believe that a crime has been committed. Then the police justice or a judge or officer having criminal jurisdiction may issue process and make it returnable before himself or in certain contingencies before some other criminal officer. Now, in the first place, these two subjects-matter ought not to be confounded in the same section. In the second place, we ought not to deprive these people of a jury trial where so much to them is involved. It may seem a small amount to some of us and to the rich men of the District, but to thousands of citizens the sum is large.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, there is another thing about this jury business. Article 7 of the amendments of the Constitution says:

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

I do not believe if we put that in the law it is of any account after we put it in. Surely there is not a man in this country that ought not to have a jury trial if he wants one.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to oppose the amendment. Now, I want so say to the House that the only opposition that is made to this amendment is made by the gentleman from New York, who says he does not want it passed. I would like to accommodate the gentleman from New York whenever it is convenient and let his judgment prevail, but I ask that this House be informed before it votes on this question. I want to say to my friend from Missouri that he need not have any fears with reference to the right of trial by jury. Any man can now have a trial by jury. But I do not want the gentleman from Missouri to be misled by anything that the gentleman from New York has said. It is very evident that the gentleman does not understand this from what he has said.

In the first place, the policy of Congress has been to have all these criminal proceedings tried in the police court, where every advantage and opportunity is given for the trial of any case brought there. It is deemed much better for the administration of justice to have all these cases tried there. The judges are excellent men, men of experience, and men of judgment, and have the confidence of this community. They have their arrangements for the trial of all these cases. They have the officers there to assist them in the execution of their duty, and convenient rooms for the trial of all cases. All criminals now brought for trial, if they so desire, can be tried by jury. I want to say to the House and the gentleman from New York that this amendment that he is so bitterly opposed to is placed here before this House by the earnest and unanimous request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and does not prevent justice being done, and does not deprive any man of his legal rights.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt the gentleman? Have not the people of the District anything to say whether they shall have a trial by jury in civil cases involving $300 or less, or not? Are we going to deprive several hundred thousand people of a trial by jury because the District Commissioners want it done?

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman does not ask any question.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, I do; I ask that question.

Mr. JENKINS. There is no one complaining. If anyone has complained to the gentleman from New York, he has not communicated the complaint to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt again?

Mr. JENKINS. I decline to yield.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me say——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is out of order; he does not address the Chair.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. No; not at this time. I was saying to the members of the House, for their information, that if anyone has uttered any complaint no complaint has come to any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia with reference to this matter. Everybody that is charged with an offense can be tried by a jury in the police court of this District. The amendment is introduced at the request of the Commissioners in the interest of justice, because it is not always convenient for a person who knows when a crime has been committed to come down to the police court and make complaint, but it was deemed advisable, after considering the question, to recommend to this House that this amendment be adopted, because it simply gives any person who knows, or who has reason to believe, that a crime has been committed, an opportunity to go before one of the justices of the peace and make complaint, so that that party can be arrested; the warrant is returnable to the police court.

It makes no difference to the committee whether the amendment is struck out, but I want the House to understand that it does not deprive anyone of any right under the Constitution of a trial by jury; they are tried the same, but it is recommended because it may prevent the escape of criminals.

It might as well be understood that the people of Washington labor under a great many embarrassments here that no other community in the country labors under.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has stated over and over again that every person may have a jury trial under the provisions of this law, and he criticises the gentleman from New York for suggesting something to the contrary. Now, let us read the law that they propose to put upon the statute book:

Amend section 7 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 7. Jury trials: Trial by jury before justices of the peace is hereby abolished. Each justice of the peace is authorized and required on complaint under oath or actual view to issue warrants free of charge returnable to the police court, against persons accused of crimes and offenses committed in the District of Columbia, and to make a record thereof in a book to be kept for that purpose.

Mr. JENKINS. That is the present law.

Mr. RAY of New York. And I move to strike it out and restore jury trial; that is my amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin has stated over and over again that the people are not deprived of a jury trial, but are entitled to it. In that he is mistaken. I say that in my judgment, and I submit it to the judgment of the men of this House, that here in the District of Columbia the people who have $300 or even less at stake have a right to a jury trial and ought to have it if they see fit to demand it. If they do not demand it, then they can go to trial before a justice of the peace without a jury. Strike this out and they can have a jury trial or not, as they see fit. Strike this out and the man with $300 or even less at stake may have his case submitted to a jury.

Leave it in and you and I here in this District seeking justice are compelled to go to trial before one of these justices of the peace, who may be an enemy of ours, and we can not have a jury. You deny one of the greatest privileges sought to be guaranteed to these people by the Constitution of the United States. If it is $350, you can have a jury trial; but if it is $300 or less, no. If it is $3,000, a part of what the rich man has, he may have the jury trial; but all that the poor man has may be swept away from him without a jury trial.

If a Republican House in the twentieth century desires to write that infamy on the statute book, I want them to do it; but I will give you a fair chance to go on record before it is done. [Applause.]

Mr. KLEBERG rose.

Mr. RAY of New York. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KLEBERG. I agree with the gentleman from New York, but I wish to bring out this fact: Is it not a fact that this amendment has reference to civil cases as well as criminal?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly. They propose the section as it stands with an amendment to the section which gives a justice of the peace who has no criminal jurisdiction the power to issue warrants in criminal cases, even on a view; some indefinite view, and the amendment does not say what. It may be a view of the crime itself; that is what is meant, probably. It may be a view of the criminal; it may be on a view or inspection of the complainant. I say the section as it stands is ill-advised; I say it is wrong; I say it is a violation of the principles of our Government, a violation of the liberties of the people of the District of Columbia, and I trust the amendment will be agreed to. It strikes the section—section 7—from the law—the District code.

Mr. BARTLETT. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman on the proposition that we ought to have jury trials in the District of Columbia. The gentleman remembers that I have a bill before his committee to give trial by jury to other citizens who are charged——

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, we will take care of that when we get to it. Let us correct one evil at a time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am with the gentleman on the present question; but I hope he will remember his present views about jury trials when he comes to frame a report on that bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, you will get no promises out of me now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want any "promises" from the gentleman. I merely ask that he shall carry out his views consistently in other cases in reference to jury trials.

Mr. RAY of New York. I can not say what the committee will do with the gentleman's bill when it is reached; but I do not think there is any such statute as that I am now discussing anywhere on any of our statute books.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to say what my limited time prevented me from saying a moment ago—that the law to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] seems so bitterly opposed now, in the interest of the poor man, is the existing law; and the gentleman from New York voted for it if he was present in the House discharging his duty at the time the measure was under consideration. And this provision of law was recommended unanimously by the bar of this District; and I think the bench also approved of it. But, at any rate, section 7 as it now reads here in the code was pending here before Congress for at least six months, and not a single individual in or out the city of Washington, in or out of Congress, raised any objection to the proposed law, and it received the approval of both Houses and the approval of the President of the United States; and I repeat, up to this time not a single person has uttered a complaint against it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me a single suggestion? As everybody knows, the Constitution secures to every individual a jury trial in all cases involving more than $20. Now, on what authority do we undertake to change that provision by making the limitation $300 instead of $20?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, I have not time to enlighten my friend from Georgia with reference to the Constitution. If he will only read it, he is capable of understanding it himself.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to know the gentleman's construction.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, the only amendment that has been recommended by the committee is to permit a justice of the peace to issue a warrant for the arrest of an offender and to have that warrant returnable to the police court. That is the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Have I the gentleman's permission for a single further suggestion? I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] to refer to a jury trial in civil cases.

Mr. JENKINS. Well, that is the law in the District now; and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] voted for it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, if I did, I did not know it.

Mr. MANN. Nobody voted for it; it passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK. Suppose that the law is now as the gentleman states, why not change it? The House has power to do that.

Mr. JENKINS. I have not the slightest objection, if it is at present the opinion of Congress that the law ought to be changed. I simply want the House to understand the question. We are not now recommending that provision.

Mr. CLARK. What reason do the proponents of this proposition to take away the trial by jury give for it?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, this was passed nearly two years ago, I believe.

Mr. CLARK. I do not care when it was passed. What reason is there for taking away the trial by jury? There must be some reason or the provision ought not to be sanctioned.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not know anything about that question at this time.

Mr. RAY of New York. I can answer that question if the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit.

Mr. JENKINS. Very well.

Mr. RAY of New York. The object of putting that provision in was to make it easy for these gentlemen—these 10 justices of the peace in the District of Columbia—to draw their salaries out of the public Treasury. That was the object—to do away with the labor of drawing a jury, to give these 10 justices of the peace more personal power, more dignity.

Mr. CLARK. How does taking away the trial by jury help them to draw their $3,000 a year?

Mr. RAY of New York. They get their salaries more easily—don't you see?

Mr. CLARK. I do not.

Mr. RAY of New York. They do not have the work of impaneling a jury, or their power or influence lessened. The law makes them both judge and jury.

Mr. CLARK. Let me ask another question. Is not this abolition of trial by jury directly and squarely in the face of the seventh amendment of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CLARK. Wait a minute. I desire the gentleman to answer that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think it is unconstitutional, I will state to the gentleman from Missouri. It is unjust. It may be held that the District of Columbia is not entitled to the benefit of the constitutional provision referred to, but subject to such arbitrary acts as Congress sees fit to enact.

Mr. JENKINS. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I simply want the House to understand the question. I have no personal pride about it, and I do not think any gentleman on the committee has. I simply want them to understand that some year and a half ago the law was passed in this District that trial by jury before justices of the peace be abolished. Now, then, if Congress wants to change it, I have not the slightest objection. I am simply saying that up to this time no citizen of this District or any person else has come and made any complaint to the committee on the question. I will ask for a vote on the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman trom New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 39 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 39. Retiring justices, and removal, resignation, and death.—It shall be the duty of every justice of the peace hereafter appointed, upon his resignation or removal from office, or the expiration of his commission, and in case of his death, it shall be the duty of his executor or administrator, to deliver all dockets and all original papers in cases in the possession of such justice of the peace at the time of his resignation, removal, expiration of commission, or death, to his successor in office."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 65, after the word "administrator," insert the following: "if such dockets or papers have come to his possession or are within his control."

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the House to what this section as it reads provides. It is as follows:

It shall be the duty of every justice of the peace hereafter appointed, upon his resignation or removal from office or the expiration of his commission, and in case of his death it shall be the duty of his executors or administrators, to deliver all dockets and all original papers in cases in the possession of such justice of the peace at the time of his resignation, removal, expiration of commission, or death to his successor in office.

Then the following:

Upon failure of any person to deliver such dockets and papers as in this section provided, he shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500, to be recovered as other penalties are recovered.

Now, of course it is presumed that on the death of the justice of the peace these papers would be in his possession, but months may expire before an administrator is appointed. Other people may have access to the papers and remove or destroy them, but when the administrator or executor is appointed, so that he has power to take possession, he may not find these dockets, he may not find these papers, and they may never come into his possession or under his control; but still the law makes it the absolute duty of the executor or administrator to deliver them over, and if he does not he is subject to a penalty of $500. The amendment simply provides that it shall be the duty of the executor or administrator, etc., adding as follows:

If such docket or papers have come into his possession or are within his control.

Now, you can not answer that by saying that the law would not be enforced against him if he does not have the possession, because it is his duty, as the proposed law reads, to deliver them whether he has them or not. He is the executor or the administrator, and the law that you have written here would be absolute. Therefore the amendment makes it safe for the executor or administrator, even if some might argue that it is unnecessary that the court would give a more favorable construction.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the committee has no objection to the amendment. It does not change the law. This amendment was drawn by the Bar Association, and certainly any lawyer on earth would know that if the books and papers never came into the hands or keeping of the administrator he certainly could not be punished for failure to deliver them over; but as I say, the committee has no objection to the hypocritical amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 42 by substituting for said section the following:

SEC. 42. Constitution.—There shall continue to be a police court in the District as at present constituted, consisting of two judges learned in the law, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the term of six years, or until their successors are appointed, who shall each receive a salary of $3,000 per annum. The said judges shall hold separate sessions and may carry on the business of said court separately and simultaneously, and are empowered to make rules for the apportionment of the business between them, and the act of each of said judges respecting the business of said court shall be deemed and taken to be the acts of said court. Each judge when appointed shall take the oath prescribed for judges of courts of the United States.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4, page 67, the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, there are at present in the District of Columbia two police judges who, under existing law, receive a salary of $3,000 per year. The amendment proposes an increase of this salary from $3,000 to $4,000 a year. I appreciate that there are those who think that it is unwise to offer to increase any of these salaries, and yet if it is right there should be no objection. If they are not receiving what they are entitled to for the work performed, Congress should see that they are properly paid.

There have been tried in this court in the District of Columbia, covering the last several years, an average of over 16,000 cases per year. There have been on an average from 150 to 175 jury cases each year. These judges are given no holidays, because, gentlemen, understand that, unfortunately, holidays produce a large amount of police-court business. They are not paid in proportion to the time they are at work nor the amount of business which they discharge. They are two of the best men in the District, who have served a long time, who are familiar with the law, and who by their acts have proven that they understand the proper discharge of their duties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the fines paid have something to do with evidencing the amount of work done; not the fines assessed, but the fines paid. The fines paid during the last several years have averaged between thirty-five and fifty thousand dollars per year in this court, and I submit that in justice to these men, who work without holidays, who are allowed only a little sum extra over and above their salary of $3,000, namely, $300 a year to cover emergencies when they are obliged to employ some one to sit for them when they are incapacitated from illness or otherwise, they should receive this increase, which does not go beyond the amount usual in cities of this size. I understand that in other cities of about equal population and equal business, perhaps, the salaries are larger than those proposed by this amendment.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that for the first four months of this year, January, February, March, and April, the fines actually paid in the police court of this District amount to over $20,000. The cases have averaged a larger number than for the preceding three or four years, so that the amount of work is increasing constantly, and I trust that gentlemen will not undertake to be parsimonious with these men, but will recognize that as men of high character and good qualifications, of long experience in this business, a most delicate and embarrassing business for any jurist to transact, gentlemen will see to it that these men are properly paid, under the custom prevalent in such courts. I have here a little statement showing the business for the last few months only. If this average should continue, the business of this court will greatly increase this year over any preceding year in the history of the District.

I speak of this only as an evidence of the constantly growing business of the court. I will not detain the House, but will ask that this statement be printed, showing the growth of the business in the District, and that it thoroughly and completely warrants this slight increase in the pay.

Number of cases disposed of in the police court from January 1, to December 31, 1901.

United States branch	6,621
District of Columbia branch	12,581
Total	19,202
Committed to jail and reform school	2,065
Committed to workhouse	4,408
Committed to board of Children's Guardians	451
Total committed	6,924

Fines paid.

United States branch	$16,304.87
District of Columbia branch	39,463.13
Total	55,768.00

Fines paid in 1902, by months.

Date.	United States branch.	District of Columbia branch.
January	$1,082.37	$3,828.67
February	1,148.72	3,535.98
March	1,704.96	4,558.42
April	1,324.04	4,304.38
Total	5,260.09	16,227.45

Total both branches	$21,547.54
Estimating 1902 at the above rate	64,642.62

The appropriation for the police court for the next fiscal year as passed the House of Representatives is:

For salaries	$30,840.00
Witness fees	4,000.00
Jurors' fees	8,000.00
Feeding jurors	100.00
Repairs to building and furniture	1,000.00
Rent of ground occupied by police-court cells	600.00
Total	34,540.00
Receipts over expenditures for all purposes, more than	30 000.00

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. How many police courts have you in Indianapolis?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Only one.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have one in Buffalo. How many have they in Pittsburg?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think Pittsburg has magistrates.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why do they need two police justices in this quiet, orderly city of Washington?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The fact that there are over 16,000 cases a year, and that fines actually paid amount to $50,000 a year, would show that this city is not always a quiet one.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why not have one police justice, as there is in most cities, I apprehend, and then give him a salary of $4,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. This is a larger city than Indianapolis and a larger city than Buffalo, and upon the merits of the case I think the amendment is entirely proper.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to the gentleman from New York that there is no police court in Pittsburg, but that justices of the peace attend to all that sort of thing.

Mr. DAYTON. May I suggest in answer to the gentleman from New York that the justices of the police court here have a double jurisdiction—one as regards offenses against the city and the other offenses against the United States.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a moment. I regret to oppose any amendment offered by my friend from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], but it seems to me that these judges are certainly paid enough in comparison with the pay that is given to judges of the United States courts and judges of the different State courts. The gentleman talks about the great amount of business they transact. This is simply an ordinary police court, and the gentleman knows in what way they transact business there. They try twenty, thirty, or forty cases a day with as much ease or more ease than a circuit judge tries one case that comes before him. The trials ordinarily are very informal. A man is brought up, a policeman testifies and the man testifies, and perhaps one or two other witnesses, but more frequently none, and that is all there is of it. I venture to say four-fifths of the defendants plead guilty. These men now get $3,000 a year.

The average judge of a circuit court in the States of the Union does not get more than that, although he tries both civil and criminal cases of the utmost importance. The judges of the United States district courts, who, as we all know, transact the circuit court business, also get only $5,000 a year.

It seems to me it would be a piece of folly for the Congress of the United States to give a police judge in the city of Washington $4,000, when the salary given to judges of the United States district courts is only $5,000. It would be out of all harmony with the action of Congress in reference to the judges of the United States courts. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment. I move to strike out in line 2 the following words:

The SPEAKER. What page?

Mr. CANNON. Page 67. "By and with the advice and consent of the Senate." This is the criminal justices of the peace.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. CANNON. No; I am ready for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 51 by substituting for said section the following:

SEC. 51. DISABILITY OF JUDGE.—In cases of sickness, absence, disability, expiration of the term of service of or death of either of the judges of said court, any one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia may designate one of the justices of the peace to discharge the duties of said police judge until such disability be removed or vacancy filled. The justice so designated shall take the same oath prescribed for the judge of the police court and shall receive the sum of $5 for each day of service, in addition to the salary now provided for by law, to be paid in the same manner as the salary of the judge of the police court.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment for the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 22, 23, 24, and 25 on page 67:

"And shall receive the sum of $5 for each day of service, in addition to the salary now provided for by law, to be paid in the same manner as the salary of the judge of the police court."

Mr. JENKINS. I desire to further amend by striking out all after the word "court," in line 22. In preparing the amendment I observe that I did not include enough. The object and purpose of the amendment, I will say, Mr. Speaker, is to prevent paying a justice of the peace $5 a day when called to preside when the police judge is absent. Under the present law each justice of the peace gets $3,000 a year salary and an allowance of $250 for stationery, office rent, etc. The police judge gets $3,000 a year only.

Now, if the police judge happens to be sick or desires to be absent, one of the justices of the supreme court can designate one of the justices of the peace to act temporarily during the absence of the police judge; but under the present law the justice of the peace gets $5 a day extra for this service. The object and purpose of the amendment is to prevent that and to compel that officer to perform those duties without extra compensation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 65 by inserting in the fourteenth line thereof, after the word "auditor," the words "and also," and by striking out the comma in said line 14 after the word "crier;" also by adding at the end of said section the words "Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall affect the jurisdiction of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in special or general term in the case of the United States v. Martin F. Morris and others, now pending therein, but the jurisdiction of the said court, both in special and general term, and the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States shall remain and continue as to said cause, under the act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats in the District of Columbia,' approved August 5, 1886, and an act of Congress approved January 7, 1895, entitled 'An act supplementary to an act entitled "An act establishing a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1893,' and an act of Congress entitled 'An act relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats,' approved March 2, 1901, as if the act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia,' approved March 3, 1901, had not been passed."

Mr. RAY of New York. It may be all right, but I desire to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill about amendment 65. You say nothing shall affect a certain suit. What suit is that? Of course, special legislation that might not affect other suits, but only one particular suit, or the contrary, ordinarily would be objectionable.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from New York will remember that the Committee on the Judiciary last Congress passed a bill with reference to the case known as the United States against Morris, affecting some land down here. The amendment to the code is not to affect that suit, after that law was passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 102 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 102. Process against infants.—Whenever an infant is party defendant in any suit, in equity or at law, the subpœna or summons issued in such suit shall be served upon him personally, if within the District, and said infant shall in such case be produced in court, unless, for cause shown, the court shall dispense with his appearance; and it shall be the duty of the court to appoint a suitable and competent person guardian ad litem for such infant, to appear for and defend such suit on his behalf, and whenever in the judgment of the court the interests of such infant shall require it the court shall assign a solicitor or attorney to represent such infant, whose compensation shall be paid by the plaintiff, or out of the estate of such infant, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I can not find in the code adopted for the District of Columbia any provision anywhere that provides for the service of process where a suit is brought against an infant of tender years, upon his guardian, next friend, parent, or person with whom he resides. I do not think there is any such provision in the act. Of course, if the gentleman can assure me that there is such a provision elsewhere, then I will not offer this amendment. But in the State of New York and in all the States where I am familiar with the practice the code provides, not only for personal service upon the infant of tender years, but for service upon the parent of such infant or person with whom he resides.

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not want to duplicate the law. I send the following amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, page 70, after the word "personally," insert the following: "And also the person with whom he resides, if under 16 years of age."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 115b. Estates of lunatics.—The said court shall have full power and authority to superintend and direct the affairs of persons non compos mentis, and to appoint a committee or trustees for such persons, and to make such orders and decrees for the care of their persons and the management and preservation of their estates, including the collection, sale, exchange, and reinvestment of their personal estate, as to the court may seem proper. The court may, upon such terms as under the circumstances of the case it may deem proper, decree the conveyance and release of any right of dower of a person non compos mentis, whether the same be inchoate or otherwise.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 72, after the word "persons," insert the following: "After hearing the nearest relatives of such person or some of them if residing within the jurisdiction of the court."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it has been proposed that we adjourn from Thursday of this week to Monday next on account of Decoration Day. Many members have been asking me about it. and I move that when the House adjourn on Thursday of this week, it adjourn to meet on the Monday following.

Mr. KEHOE. Mr. Speaker, would not that interfere with war claims day?

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman had better leave that open. The truth is by passing the omnibus bill the Committee on War Claims have had a pretty good chance already.

Mr. KEHOE. We have had only one day.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, that was a pretty good day.

Mr. KEHOE. We have no objection to it if you will give us another day for war claims.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDOX) there were—49 ayes and 4 noes.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. If we can get unanimous consent to have Tuesday next for war claims, I will withdraw the point, but we will never get it unless we have some understanding about it.

Mr. PAYNE. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims I do not feel like making any agreement. If I can withdraw the motion now, I will do so. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. That can be done if the gentleman from Georgia withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. MADDOX. I will withdraw the point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point is withdrawn, and the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I will make the motion to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

AMENDMENTS TO THE DISTRICT CODE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 121 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 121. The said register of wills may receive inventories and accounts of sales, examine vouchers, and state accounts of executors, administrators, collectors, and guardians, subject to final passage or rejection of same by the court, may take probate of claims against the estates of deceased persons that are proper to be brought before him, and pass any claims not exceeding $300; may take the probate of wills and accept the bonds of executors, administrators, collectors, and guardians, subject to approval by the court. It shall be his duty to make full and fair entries of the proceedings of said court, and also to make a fair record in a strong bound book or books of all wills proved before him or said court, and of all other matters by law directed to be recorded in said court, and to lodge every original paper filed with him in such place of safety as the court may appoint. He shall make out and issue every summons, process, and order of the court, and in every respect act under its control and direction in reference to matters coming within the jurisdiction of said court. He shall be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint two deputies, who may do and perform any and all the acts necessary in the administration of his office and the certification of the records of said court which he himself is authorized to do; also to appoint and fix the number and the compensation of the employees of said probate court and office of register of wills; Provided, That any expenditures incurred by him in so doing shall not be a charge upon the public treasury, but shall, together with his own compensation, be paid out of the revenues of the office of register of wills.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 17, page 77, after the word "compensation," the following: "which shall be at the rate of $4,000 per annum."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if that is a change of existing law or the same salary that he has now?

Mr. BABCOCK. This is the salary of the register of wills.

Mr. COWHERD. But is it the same salary that is provided by law or is it an increase?

Mr. BABCOCK. The salary of the register of deeds is $4,000, and this will equalize them and make them the same—the register of wills and the register of deeds.

Mr. COWHERD. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when this matter was considered in the subcommittee we came to the conclusion that his salary was sufficient at present, and it did not require any increase. It seems to me that if the register of wills, who, I admit, sometimes acts somewhat in the capacity of a probate judge—that the salary is sufficient and that we ought not to increase these salaries.

Mr. BABCOCK. Just a word, Mr. Speaker, in reference to that. The salary of the register of wills is $3,600, and of the register of deeds, $4,000. As a matter of fact, the register of wills ought to have a greater salary than the register of deeds.

Mr. COWHERD. Could they not be equalized by reducing it at the other end?

Mr. BABCOCK. That might be done. But, as I say, the register of wills ought to have a larger salary than the register of deeds for the reason that the register of wills is acting in the capacity of a probate court.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was considered; and the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 175 by striking out the proviso at the end and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That for proceedings in the probate court deposits and fees shall be paid to the register of wills, who shall be entitled to demand and may require, upon the presentation for filing of a petition or a caveat to a will, a deposit for his fees to be charged for the proceedings under such petition or such caveat; and upon such deposit becoming exhausted in the liquidation of his fees so charged, he may demand and require a further deposit from the original petitioner or caveator; but such deposits shall not be required in excess of $10 at any one time."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 81, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 275 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 275. Special bond.—If the person appointed as administrator shall be entitled to the residue of the estate after the payment of the debts, he may, instead of the bond herein provided for, execute a bond, with security approved by the court, in such penalty as the court may consider sufficient, conditioned for the payment of all the debts and claims against the deceased, and all damages which shall be recovered against him as administrator; and where the administrator shall file the consent in writing of those entitled to the residue and they shall all be of full age, the court may, if it see fit, direct that only such special bond be given, and in such cases the administrator shall not be required to return any inventory or account, but shall be personally answerable for all debts, claims, and damages that may be recovered against him, in like manner as the executor who gives a similar bond: Provided, That the surety or sureties in said bond shall not be liable for a greater amount than the penalty thereof."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call the attention of this House to the legislation being written on the statute book. Here we have a special section in relation to estates of deceased persons. Now, if a person dies, the creditors have a lien on all the property, real and personal, for the payment of debts, and the executor or administrator, after it came to his possession, should he waste it, is liable criminally.

This section that you are about to adopt, or amend—it has already been adopted in the District code—simply does away with the criminal liability where the executor or administrator is a residuary legatee or principal devisee, and the property can all pass to his hands as owner. He may dissipate it, he may spend it, but if he has given the bond here provided the creditors of the estate must look to the bond for their protection for the payment of their debt. They are without the other, the usual remedies, the remedies the law has heretofore given creditors of deceased persons.

And if the bond turns out to be bad, uncollectible, then they have no remedy against the executor or administrator, as the case may be.

I shall not now occupy the time of the House to oppose the provision or to attempt to strike it out, but I want to enter my protest against it, because I dare say there is no such provision anywhere in any State of this Union.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Is there any State in the Union where a residuary legatee, being an executor, can not waive the ordinary duty of filing an account?

Mr. RAY of New York. So far as the account is concerned——

Mr. McDERMOTT. That is all this section does.

Mr. RAY of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. McDERMOTT. My reading of the section is this——

Mr. RAY of New York. What the section does is this: It substitutes a special bond for the liability, civil and criminal, of the executor or administrator and does away with the ordinary bond protecting the creditors, if he wastes the estate and does not pay the debts. This permits him to give a bond, and he is released from all criminal responsibility, whether the creditors get their pay or not.

Now, in nearly every State of this Union—every State with whose laws I have any familiarity—an executor or administrator remains liable criminally; and if he dissipates or wastes the property, then his bondsman is liable to the creditors. Not only are they liable to the creditors, but the executor or administrator may be prosecuted criminally.

Mr. McDERMOTT. There is nothing in the proposition of this section that relieves the executor or administrator from criminal liability.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly there is.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Well, where is it?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, it is in the language of the section——

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would like to have it pointed out.

Mr. RAY of New York. Because this substitutes a bond, upon the assumption——

Mr. McDERMOTT. There is no proposition in section 275 as amended that relieves the executor or administrator of criminal liability. Such a proposition has never been placed in any statute.

Mr. RAY of New York (reading):

If the person appointed as administrator shall be entitled to the residue of the estate after the payment of the debts, he may, instead of the bond herein provided for, execute a bond, with security approved, etc.

And then the section goes on to provide that he then becomes the owner of the property; and the only protection to the creditor is the bond which has just been given. He can not misappropriate his own money or property. The creditors lose their lien.

Mr. McDERMOTT. If he is the residuary legatee there is no necessity for his filing an account. All that the section provides is that in any civil procedure for the administration of the estate he may and shall file a bond. That is the procedure in every State of the Union. On filing that bond to carry out the terms of the trust that rests upon him under the law, he is released from the necessity of filing an account, he being the residuary legatee. That, in my opinion, is the law in every State in the Union.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. McDERMOTT. The proposition that he is released from criminal liability is unwarranted.

Mr. RAY of New York. Criminal liability attaches for the wasting of the property and not applying it, first, to the payment of the debts and funeral expenses, and second, in the case of a will, to the payment of legacies, or, where there is no will, to the payment of the distributive shares. Now, the bond protects that, and the creditors, legatees, devisees, or distributees, as the case may be, have another remedy, which is to prosecute the executor or administrator criminally, if he wastes the property. But the trouble with this section is that it does away with the criminal liability and allows the executor or administrator to give a bond for the payment of the debts and become the owner of the property. Then he can not be made liable for wasting his own property, because the lien of the creditors, the distributees, the devisees, or the legatees is gone. That is the point of my objection. Also the bond may be insufficient in amount. The court may be deceived as to the amount of debts.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The proposition that an executor or an administrator is relieved from criminal liability for abuse of his trust by the filing of a bond under this section is preposterous. There is no word of the section which warrants any such construction. On the contrary, this section provides that within the District of Columbia one who is appointed an executor and is a residuary legatee under the will shall give an additional security to that called for in any State of the Union. If the gentleman will read any part of this section which relieves a man under such circumstances from criminal liability I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. RAY of New York. The exemption is conveyed in express terms. It is not a question of construction; it is a question of words written in the law.

Mr. McDERMOTT. What words give any exemption from criminal liability?

Mr. RAY of New York. If the executor or administrator gives this bond, he becomes the owner of the property; and the creditors, if he does not pay, must look to what? The bond.

Mr. McDERMOTT. He becomes the owner of the residuary property; and in addition to his obligation as executor his payment of the legacies is further secured, and he being the residuary legatee, that is all that is required of him.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have offered no amendment. I simply call attention to it for the benefit of the future, but the gentleman simply ignores the express language of the law.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock for the purpose of completing this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I would like to renew the motion I made a few moments ago, that when the House adjourn on Thursday next it adjourn to meet on the Monday following.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that when the House adjourn on Thursday next it adjourn to meet on the following Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 11 o-clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it the understanding that no business be considered except this bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. With the understanding that no other business be considered except this bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, is it a unanimous consent that is asked?

The SPEAKER. That is what is asked.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not hear it and I came over here to try and hear. What is asked?

The SPEAKER. That the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock for the purpose of concluding this bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And no other business to be considered?

Mr. JENKINS. No.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

Mr. HOLLIDAY, for eight days, on account of important business.

Mr. SKILES, for ten days, on account of important business.

Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana, for ten days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13503. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Haltenhof;

H. R. 13266. An act granting an increase of pension to Elbert N. Remson;

H. R. 13265. An act granting an increase of pension to John Whalen;

H. R. 13249. An act granting an increase of pension to Ada Trowbridge;

H. R. 13162. An act granting an increase of pension to Augustin M. Adams;

H. R. 13132. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie Cotter;

H. R. 12780. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Wheeler;

H. R. 12778. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward R. Blain;

H. R. 12562. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Temple;

H. R. 12458. An act granting an increase of pension to William M. Barstow;

H. R. 12012. An act granting an increase of pension to Walter C. Tuttle;

H. R. 11921. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. De Graw;

H. R. 11644. An act granting an increase of pension to Edgar A. Hamilton;

H. R. 11285. An act granting an increase of pension to William Sheldon;

H. R. 10731. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel P. Milburn;

H. R. 10201. An act granting an increase of pension to Otis R. Freeman;

H. R. 10165. An act granting an increase of pension to Delia E. Slocum;

H. R. 9926. An act granting an increase of pension to James F. Patton;

H. R. 9569. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert Deits;

H. R. 9437. An act granting an increase of pension to Elias A. Calkins;

H. R. 8921. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse C. Rhodabeck;

H. R. 14099. An act granting a pension to Samantha B. Van Brocklin;

H. R. 13822. An act granting a pension to Hannah T. Knowles;

H. R. 13807. An act granting a pension to Jeremiah Horan;

H. R. 13350. An act granting a pension to Presley P. Medlin;

H. R. 12685. An act granting a pension to Hiram J. Springfield;

H. R. 11343. An act granting a pension to Mary Louise Lowry;

H. R. 9928. An act granting a pension to Benjamin E. Styles;

H. R. 9249. An act granting a pension to Amos Allport;

H. R. 9226. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth I. Ogden; and

H. R. 8466. An act granting a pension to Lucinda A. Sirwell.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 5406. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland of Aiken County, of South Carolina, to the mainland of Richmond County, Ga.;

S. 4264. An act providing that the statutes of limitations of the several States shall apply as a defense to actions brought in any courts for the recovery of lands patented under the treaty of May 10, 1854, between the United States of America and the Shawnee tribe of Indians;

S. 3908. An act granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Bridger, Fort Sanders, and Fort Laramie military reservations, in Wyoming, the right to purchase one quarter section of public land on said reservation as pasture or grazing land, and for other purposes;

S. 1172. An act granting an increase of pension to Catharine F. Edmunds;

S. 593. An act for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of a national sanitarium of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota; and

S. 2782. An act to authorize the construction of a bride across the Columbia River by the Washinghton and Oregon Railway Company.

EDWIN A. WILSON.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. FLYNN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Edwin A. Wilson, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

C. AUGUSTA URQUHART.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. MEYER of Louisiana, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of C. Augusta Urquhart, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes the House took a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House at 11 a. m. Tuesday, May 27, 1902, resumed its session.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next paragraph.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to page 81 of the bill, between lines 21 and 23. When we passed this yesterday no amendment was offered, as was originally intended, because we had not an understanding with the Appropriation Committee with reference to it, and I desire now to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to recur to page 81 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. If there is no objection, this will be done. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 182 so it will read as follows:

"SEC. 182. If a balance be found due from the United States to the clerk, the same shall be paid (out of the appropriations for fees of clerks of United States courts), upon presenting to the Treasurer a copy of the decree duly certified. The clerk shall, as in other cases to which the United States is a party, furnish the Solicitor of the Treasury a copy of the decree immediately after it is pronounced."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the reasons, I will say to the House, for asking for the adoption of the amendment are these:

Section 182 of the code provides for the payment of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and his assistants, but makes no appropriation for the purpose when a balance is found due the clerk.

The Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that without an appropriation the section would be inoperative.

The expenses of the clerk's office, including salaries, are paid out of the fees of the office. Usually there is a balance due the United States, which is paid into the Treasury. Sometimes it occurs, however, that there is a balance due the clerk, in which case the expenses can not be paid without an appropriation.

The proposed amendment simply provides that when there is a balance due the clerk's office it shall be paid out of the current appropriation for fees of clerks of United States courts.

The proposed amendment has been submitted to and is not objected to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and is approved by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I would ask what is the salary of the clerk and how it is paid now?

Mr. JENKINS. The clerk's salary is paid by the fee system. This is to render it unnecessary to have an appropriation when the amount is insufficient to pay him at that time; it rests in abeyance, so to speak, and when the fees come in he is then paid.

Mr. KLEBERG. Out of the fees?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. He is paid a salary?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; he is paid a salary out of the fees.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. But the fund is created by charging fees?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; and he is paid out of the fees only. I will ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after section 826 a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 826a. Offenses against property.—Whoever shall connect or disconnect any electrical conductor belonging to any company using or engaged in the manufacture and supply of electric current for purposes of light, heat, and power, or either of them, or makes any connection with any such electrical conductor for the purpose of using or wasting the electric current, or who in any wise tampers with any meter used to register current consumed, or who interferes with the operating of any dynamo or other electrical appliance of such company, or tampers with or interferes with the poles, wires, conduits, or other apparatus used by such companies, unless such person or persons shall be duly authorized by or be in the employ of such company, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. I notice that section reads:

Whoever shall connect or disconnect any electrical conductor belonging to any company—

And so forth.

It makes him guilty of a crime. I move to insert after the word "shall," in line 15, page 101, the word "knowingly;" so that it will read "whoever shall knowingly connect or disconnect."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert following section 845 the following additional section:

"SEC. 845a. Whoever having no title or color of title to the land affected shall maliciously cause to be recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia any deed, contract, or other instrument purporting to convey or to relate to any land in said District with intent to extort money or anything of value from any person owning such land, or having any interest therein, shall be fined not less than $500 or imprisonment not more than two years, or both."

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] to line 13, page 103. It seems that the letter "d" should be inserted in the word "recorded."

Mr. JENKINS. I ask that that correction be made.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 921 so that the first sentence thereof will read as follows:

"When two or more persons are jointly prosecuted, the court, before a defendant has gone into his defense, may direct any such defendant to be discharged that he may be a witness for the prosecution."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 19 to 24, both inclusive, page 107.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 962 so it will read as follows:

"SEC. 962. When lands escheat.—Any lands in the District of Columbia of which any person shall hereafter die seized in fee simple intestate, without any heir capable of inheriting, shall escheat to the United States."

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 106, after line 24, insert the following:

"Amend section 963, by adding at end of section the following:

"Provided, however, That all petitions for divorce pending on the 31st day of December, 1901, may be proceeded with and disposed of under the provision of the statutes in force on said date."

Mr. JENKINS. We have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of chapter 25, following section 1073, insert the following additional section:

"SEC. 1073a. Whenever the court shall be satisfied that the party producing a witness has been taken by surprise by the testimony of such witness, such party may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to prove for the purpose only of affecting the credibility of the witness that the witness has made to such party or to his attorney statements substantially variant from his sworn testimony about material facts in the cause; but before such proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statements sufficient to designate the particular occasion must be mentioned to the witness and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statements."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, on page 117, commencing with the word "whenever" in line 23, I move to strike out all down to line 9, page 118, and insert the following.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers the following, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 117, commencing with the word "whenever" in line 23, strike out all down to line 9, page 118, and insert the following:

"The party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by evidence of bad character, but may contradict him by other evidence, and may also prove that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but before such last-mentioned proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement sufficient to designate the particular occasion must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he made such statements, and, if so, allowed to explain them."

Mr. RAY of New York. All I desire to say in regard to that is that the proposed amendment is the Massachusetts statute, which has worked very well, I am informed, but it is not the rule of law in my State and in some other States. I will consent to it as a compromise, however.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the caption of section 1141 by adding thereto the words "or lunatic." Amend section 1141 by inserting in the eighth line thereof, after the word "copies," the words "of so much;" also by striking out in the same line the word "showing" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "as shows."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 17 to 22, inclusive, page 119:

"Amend the caption of section 1141 by adding thereto the words 'or lunatic.' Amend section 1141 by inserting in the eighth line thereof, after the word 'copies,' the words 'of so much;' also by striking out in the same line the word 'showing' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'as shows.'"

And insert the same between lines 19 and 20 on page 121.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to page 91, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to return to page 91 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is only a few words. Insert the words "not having a seal" after the word "Territory" in line 22 of said page.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 91, line 22, after the word "Territory," insert the words "not having a seal."

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1180 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 1180. WHAT IS USURY.—If any person or corporation shall contract in the District, verbally, to pay a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent per annum, or shall contract, in writing, to pay a greater rate than 10 per cent per annum, such person or corporation shall forfeit the whole of the interest so contracted to be received: Provided, That nothing in this chapter contained shall be held to repeal or affect the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, relating to pawnbrokers."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. I wish to strike out the word "ten," in line 1, page 122, and insert the word "six." This provides that the legal rate of interest by written contract shall be 10 per cent in the District, whereas the same chapter only provides for 6 per cent where verbally made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, strike out "ten" and insert "six."

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, on account of the shortness of the time, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be omitted, with the privilege that any gentleman on the floor who has an amendment to any part of the bill not read shall offer it and have it considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, by reason of the brevity of the time, asks unanimous consent that the rest of the bill be considered as read, reserving to each member the right to offer an amendment now that he has to offer to the remaining part of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask if there is any provision in that part of the bill that has not been read providing for an increase of salaries?

Mr. JENKINS. None whatever. We have just passed one, I will say to the gentleman, for a warden down here, but it has already passed the House, and we do it at the request of the Senate to keep it altogether uniform.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Every gentleman has the right to offer an amendment to the remaining part of the bill without being yielded to.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to call the attention of my colleague to page 90, an amendment to section 462.

The SPEAKER. It will require unanimous consent to go back to that part of the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to call the gentleman's attention to it first, and then ask unanimous consent to go back. That amendment should be stricken out. It is an amendment put in by the Senate, and if it stays there, then it will have passed both the Senate and the House——

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection to that being stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, unanimous consent will be given to return to that part of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. What I want stricken out is the words "except in cases before a justice of the peace." But strike out the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 4, 5, and 6 on page 90.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. I also desire, on page 92, to strike out section 498.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the amendments on lines 16, 17, 18, and 19, page 92.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none.

Mr. COWHERD. One other amendment, please, Mr. Speaker. I want to call my colleague's attention to the word "hirelings," on page 112. I think it was intended to be "hirings." The letters "el" should be stricken out of the word "hirelings."

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 5, page 124, after the word "age," the following: "except for necessaries."

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection to the amendment being agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other amendment? If not, the question is on the substitute amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the substitute amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I desire to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order after this day's adjournment takes place.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 55 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers relating to the claim of Herman Uthoff—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting recommendation of an appropriation for payment of the claim of John Stewart, civil engineer—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MOODY of Oregon, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11573) for the relief of settlers on lands granted in aid of the construction of wagon roads, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2243); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11572) for the relief of certain settlers upon Wisconsin Central Railroad and The Dalles military road land grants, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2244); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GROW, from the Committee on Education, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4419) to incorporate the general education board, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2245); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 105) supplementing and modifying certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1903, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2240); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14353) to authorize the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to establish fish-cultural stations, including the purchase of sites, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment; to establish in the State of Florida on the Gulf of Mexico a station for the investigation of problems connected with the marine fishery interests of that region; to provide for an investigation to determine the best available locality in Oregon or Washington at which to establish a biological station, making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2246); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11258) granting a pension to William F. Randolph, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2198); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4710) granting a pension to Anna May Hogan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2199); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14024) granting an increase of pension to John R. Curry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2200); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5402) granting an increase of pension to Hiram H. Thomas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2201); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14355) granting an increase of pension to Timothy Donohoe, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2202); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3567) granting an increase of pension to Peter J. Osterhaus, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2203); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14136) granting an increase of pension to John D. Thompson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2204); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4783) granting an increase of pension to Mary Breckons, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2205); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13411) granting an increase of pension to Clarence D. Hess, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2206); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3041) granting an increase of pension to Emma F. Shilling, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2207); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14273) granting a pension to John H. Whidden, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2208); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5424) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia J. Shattuck, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2209); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9691) granting an increase of pension to James H. Joseph, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2210); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committttee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5141) granting an increase of pension to Charles Barrett, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2211); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13848) granting an increase of pension to James H. Chedister, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2212); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1184) granting a pension to Mary Florence Von Steinwehr, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2213); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10214) granting an increase of pension to Henry Thomas, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2214); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 896) granting an increase of pension to James E. McNair, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2215); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13722) granting a pension to Edd Lodge, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2216); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5227) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Whitty, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2217); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2483) granting a pension to James A. Clifton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2218); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5214) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Smith, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2219); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13598) granting a pension to John J. Southerland, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2220); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2048) granting an increase of pension to Lewis G. Latour, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2221); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 636) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin S. Bogardus, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2222); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4934) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. McAdams, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2223); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11979) granting an increase of pension to William W. Anderson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2224); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2050) granting an increase of pension to Edward N. Goff, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2225); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11485) granting a pension to Julia McCarthy, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2226); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2289) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin S. Harrower, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2227); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10876) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Mote, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2228); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5650) granting an increase of pension to William R. Raymond, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2229); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10005) granting an increase of pension to William A. Henderson, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2230); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5466) granting an increase of pension to Edgar T. Chamberlin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2231); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14477) granting a pension to John Bruff, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2232); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5007) granting an increase of pension to James Irvine, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2233); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7013) granting an increase of pension to Jason E. Freeman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2234); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3825) granting an increase of pension to Lizzie I. Rich, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2235); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5920) granting a pension to Washington T. Filson, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2236); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13547) granting a pension to David B. Wood, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2237); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12563) granting an increase of pension to Horace Fountain, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2238); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. JOY, from the Committee on Accounts, to which was referred the House resolution (H. Res. 243) providing two additional clerks for the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2239); which said report was ordered printed.

Mr. SCHIRM, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8260) for the relief of F. H. Driscoll, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2241); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STORM, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4903) for the relief of Emma Morris, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2242); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 831) granting an increase of pension to Fannie M. Lorain; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 14695) for the protection of the President, Vice-President, and any person acting as President of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GAINES of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 14696) for the relief of the widows and orphans left destitute by the recent mine explosion in Tennessee—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. FOSS: A bill (H. R. 14697) regulating the duties and fixing the compensation of the customs inspectors of the port of Chicago—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 14698) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 14699) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Brig. Gen. Nathaniel Lyon at St. Louis, Mo.—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. McCLEARY: A bill (H. R. 14733) granting right of way for telegraph and telephone lines in the district of Alaska—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A resolution (H. Res. 270) for a rule for the consideration of S. R. 105, supplementing and modifying certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. MOODY of North Carolina: A resolution (H. Res. 271) for a rule for the consideration of H. R. 13523—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. COCHRAN: A resolution (H. Res. 272) requesting the President to furnish information of the investigation of the alleged maintenance of the British military supply camp in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 14700) granting a pension to Frederick Agastoff—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 14701) granting a pension to Mary A. Peters—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURLESON: A bill (H. R. 14702) for the relief of the heirs of A. G. Compton and J. R. Herndon—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14703) for the relief of the heirs of A. G. Compton—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 14704) granting an increase of pension to William Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK: A bill (H. R. 14705) to increase the pension of Lucien Bonapart Love—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14706) granting a pension to Harrison N. Gourley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14707) granting an increase of pension to Albertus Leovisin Paine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14708) granting a pension to James W. McCune—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14709) granting a pension to James R. Gibson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14710) granting a pension to John Snay—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14711) granting a pension to John Tucker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14712) granting a pension to Alice Harrison—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14713) granting a pension to Emma A. Baxter—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14714) to enable Fredrich Burckhardt to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. COUSINS: A bill (H. R. 14715) granting an increase of pension to Edward Walsh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14716) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah S. Alexander—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DINSMORE: A bill (H. R. 14717) for the relief of John W. Foster—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FLETCHER: A bill (H. R. 14718) granting a pension to Martin H. Gerry—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOOCH: A bill (H. R. 14719) granting a pension to Nettie Hume, widow of W. R. Hume—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14720) granting a pension to William R. Buford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14721) granting a pension to Jasper Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14722) granting a pension to C. H. Conn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14723) to remove the charge of desertion against W. H. Liter—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14724) to remove the charge of desertion against Jordon Kidwell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HANBURY: A bill (H. R. 14725) to correct the military record of Michael Keegan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 14726) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Booth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAYNARD: A bill (H. R. 14727) granting a pension to Eliza A. McWilkie—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 14728) granting a pension to John Maldoon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 14729) granting an increase of pension to Lee P. Garrett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELBY: A bill (H. R. 14730) granting an increase of pension to John M. Koffenberger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14731) granting a pension to Martha Day, widow of Harrison Day—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SKILES: A bill (H. R. 14732) granting an increase of pension to Grace M. Read—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COCHRAN: A bill (H. R. 14734) for the relief of John F. Tyler—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRUNDIDGE: A bill (H. R. 14735) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Crawley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 14736) for the relief of Thomas B. Bird—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14737) granting an increase of pension to James A. Cilley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Petition of William T. Campbell Post, No.

375, of Normalville, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, favoring the passage of a bill to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ADAMS: Resolution of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., in favor of Senate bill 1118, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy," etc., in certain cases—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ADAMSON: Petition of members of the bar of Muscogee superior court, favoring the sitting of circuit court of appeals at Atlanta, Ga.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania: Resolutions of the National Business League, of Chicago, Ill., for the establishment of a department of commerce and labor—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., against the passage of Senate bill 1118—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: Petition of citizens of Ragged Top, S. Dak., in favor of House bills 178 and 179, for the repeal of the tax on distilled spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CANNON: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to William Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK: Petition of Vandalia Post, No. 466, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Missouri, for investigation of the administration of the Bureau of Pensions—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CONRY: Resolution of the Norwood, Mass., Board of Trade, in favor of a permanent exposition at Shanghai, China—to the Select Committee on Arts and Expositions.

Also, resolutions of the city councils of Malden and Somerville, Mass., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. COUSINS: Petition of the Keokuk Dental College, Keokuk, Iowa, favoring the passage of House bill 13971, in relation to dental surgeons in the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CROMER: Resolutions of the common council of New Britain, Conn., and Yonkers Republican general committee, of Yonkers, N. Y., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DINSMORE: Petition of John W. Foster, of the State of Arkansas, for reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of D. W. Evans and other citizens of Boone County, Ark., for relief—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of J. L. Longroith, for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSS: Resolutions of thirty-sixth annual encampment of the Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, in relation to the perpetuation of the Vicksburg Military Park—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOOCH: Resolutions of Turn Gemeinde, of Covington, Ky., advocating the adoption of a resolution of sympathy for the Boers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution of North American Gymnastic Union of Covington, Ky., favoring an educational immigration test—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Petition of Hon. S. A. Barnes and 150 other citizens of Seymour, Ind., urging the passage of Senate bill 1890, the per diem pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: Petition of North American Gymnastic Union of Evansville, Ind., in opposition to the passage of House bill 12190—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: Resolutions of the city council of Tacoma, Wash., urging the passage of House bill 163, to pension employees and dependents of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of W. H. D. Blake and 20 others, of Ettinge Post, Grand Army of the Republic, New Paltz, N. Y., favoring a bill to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEHOE: Petition of sundry citizens of Maysville, Ky., in favor of House bills 178 and 179, for the repeal of the tax on distilled spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KERN: Resolutions of the Central Trades and Labor Union of East St. Louis, Ill., in support of House bill 3057, for the enactment of irrigation legislation—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Also, memorial of Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the retention of three commissioners for national military parks, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MANN: Resolutions of thirty-sixth annual encampment of the Department of Illinois in relation to Vicksburg Military Park—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NAPHEN: Resolutions of the board of aldermen of the city of Boston, Mass., and city council of Malden, Mass., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. OTJEN: Petitions of citizens of the State of Wisconsin in favor of House bills 178 and 179, for the repeal of the tax on distilled spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PADGETT: Petition of Julia Gailey, widow of Hiram Gailey, of Wayne County, Tenn., for reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania: Resolutions of United Mine Workers' Union No. 1687, of Seek; No. 1688, of Delaware; No. 1638, of Mount Pleasant, and No. 1464, of Girardsville, Pa., favoring an educational qualification for immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. RIXEY: Petition of the heirs of Thomas Cooksey, deceased, for reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUPPERT: Resolutions of Atlantic Coast Firemen's Union and Clothing Cutters and Trimmers' Association, of New York City, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Resolutions of the common council of New Britain, Conn., favoring the letter carriers' classification bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: Petition of citizens of Ohio County, Ky., favoring the passage of the Hoar-Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPERRY: Resolutions of the common council of New Britain, Conn., in favor of the proposed increase of pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of the Connecticut Electric Medical Association, favoring a physiological and psychological laboratory—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SULZER: Resolutions of Atlantic Coast Marine Firemen's Union of New York City, in favor of the proposed increase of pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. TIRRELL: Resolution of the Fitchburg Benevolent Union, for the passage of laws which will prevent the immigration of persons who can not read—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 27, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. W. E. PARSON, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

NONDISAPPEARING CARRIAGES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, tables prepared by the Chief of Ordnance, showing the number of barbette carriages which have been manufactured in each year since July 1, 1893, with the price paid for manufacture, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF NAVAL OPERATIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th ultimo, a statement prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Navy relative to the amount of money expended, the amount for which the Government is liable, remaining unpaid, for equipment, transportation, supplies, and naval operations in the Philippine Islands each year from May 1, 1898, to the present time. The Chair is in doubt as to what committee this communication should be referred, and suggests that, if there be no objection, the communication, with the accompanying papers, will be ordered printed and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 3208) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain license taxes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 87) to permit steam railroads in the District of Columbia to occupy additional parts of streets in order to accommodate the traveling public attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in October, 1902.

The message also announced that the House had passed with an amendment the bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2783) granting a pension to William Dixon;

A bill (H. R. 5153) granting a pension to Mary Welch;

A bill (H. R. 6414) granting an increase of pension to William W. H. Davis;

A bill (H. R. 8644) granting a pension to John W. Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 11252) granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Gowdey;

A bill (H. R. 11374) granting an increase of pension to William McCord;

A bill (H. R. 11711) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Gibson;

A bill (H. R. 11879) to correct the military record of Michael Mullet;

A bill (H. R. 11893) granting an increase of pension to Cornelia A. Dennis;

A bill (H. R. 12805) requiring the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company to extend its Eleventh street line, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 12865) regulating the use of telephone wires in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 13178) granting a pension to William F. Bowden;

A bill (H. R. 13233) granting a pension to William A. Nelson;

A bill (H. R. 13505) granting an increase of pension to William F. Stanley;

A bill (H. R. 13683) granting an increase of pension to Ella B. S. Mannix;

A bill (H. R. 14050) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 14147) to amend an act for the prevention of smoke in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved February 2, 1899;

A bill (H. R. 14208) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Murdock;

A bill (H. R. 14224) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Tod;

A bill (H. R. 14234) granting a pension to John Williamson;

A bill (H. R. 14251) granting an increase of pension to Hugh J. Reynolds; and

A bill (H. R. 14359) granting a pension to Luther G. Edwards.

The foregoing House pension bills were subsequently read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

A bill (S. 593) for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of a national sanitarium of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota;

A bill (S. 1172) granting an increase of pension to Catharine F. Edmunds;

A bill (S. 2782) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River by the Washington and Oregon Railway Company;

A bill (S. 3908) granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Bridger, Fort Sanders, and Fort Laramie military reservations, Wyo., the right to purchase one-quarter section of public land on said reservations as pasture or grazing land;

A bill (S. 4264) providing that the statutes of limitations of the several States shall apply as a defense to actions brought in any courts for the recovery of lands patented under the treaty of May 10, 1854, between the United States of America and the Shawnee tribe of Indians; and

A bill (S. 5406) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland of Aiken County, S. C., to the mainland of Richmond County, Ga.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kentucky, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue laws relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio County, Ky., praying for the enactment of legislation to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KEAN presented a petition of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of Rahway, N. J., and a petition of the Liquor Dealers' Protective Association of Orange, N. J., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue laws relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Central Trades Council, American Federation of Labor, of Bridgeton, N. J., and a petition of the Essex Trades Council, American Federation of Labor, of Newark, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FORAKER presented petitions of 316 citizens of Cincinnati and of 8 citizens of Sandusky, in the State of Ohio, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 124 citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of a per diem pension service bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of 550 members of St. John's African Methodist Episcopal Church, of Cleveland; of the Second Baptist Church, of Urbana, and of 60 members of the First Baptist Church, of Fostoria, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to make effective the provisions of the Constitution relative to reduced Congressional representation by reason of the disfranchisement of certain citizens; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Christian Endeavor Society of Hunts Corners, of the members of the Sunday school of the Universalist Church of Norwalk, of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church of Norwalk, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Norwalk, of the Young People's Society for Christian Endeavor of Norwalk, and of members of the Sunday school of the Congregational Church of Norwalk, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called anticanteen law; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of Local Division No. 73, Order of Railway Conductors, of Ashtabula; of Local Division No. 457, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Toledo; of Safety Lodge, No. 142, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Toledo; of Lodge No. 105, International Association of Machinists, of Toledo, and of Deer Lick Division, No. 292, Order of Railway Conductors, of Chicago, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented a petition of the city council of Tacoma, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men of the Life-Saving Service and their widows and minor children; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of Lodge No. 82, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Minneapolis, Minn., and a petition of Local Division No. 144, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Staples, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of Local Division No. 236, Order of Railway Conductors, of Melrose; of Local Division No. 215, Order of Railway Conductors, of Austin; of Local Division No. 144, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Staples; of Local Division No. 90, Order of Railway Conductors, of Waseca; of Local Division, Order of Railway Conductors, of Duluth, and of Local Division No. 494, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Minneapolis, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUARLES presented a petition of Local Division No. 536, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Antigo, Wis., praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Division No. 46, Order of Railway Conductors, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the city council of Malden, Mass., and a petition of the board of aldermen of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HARRIS (for Mr. BURTON) presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cherryvale, Chetopa, Galena, Osawatomie, Manchester, Longford, Talmage, and Huron, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAY presented a petition of sundry members of the bar of Muscogee County, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation requiring the circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit of the United States to hold at least one term of court during each year in the city of Atlanta, Ga.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCCOMAS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the Lafayette Square Presbyterian Church, of Baltimore, Md., praying that an appropriation of $1,000,000 be made to establish reading and recreation rooms for the soldiers of the United States Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Wyoming Audubon Society, of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect game and birds of all kinds, and to prohibit the exportation of birds for commercial purposes from the Territory of Alaska; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Lodge No. 88, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Evanston, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. HALE (for Mr. FRYE) presented a petition of Robert T. Wilson Post, No. 597, Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Albany, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to modify and simplify the pension laws of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (for Mr. FRYE) presented a petition of the city council of Malden, Mass., and a petition of the board of aldermen of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3309) to remove the charge of desertion against Ephraim H. Gallion, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13613) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Howard, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1743) granting a pension to Cornelia F. Whitney, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. COCKRELL, proposing to appropriate $13,500 to grade and macadamize New Hampshire avenue, Whitney avenue (Jackson street) to Seventh street (Brightwood avenue), intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CLARK of Montana, proposing to appropriate $2,000 for grading, regulating, and macadamizing Kansas avenue, in Petworth subdivision, from Trenton to Utica streets, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN, relative to certain proposed changes in the electrical department of the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN, relative to the appointment of an inspector of meters, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, to submit an adverse report thereon. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have reported adversely upon the amendment, and I move that it be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3983) authorizing the transfer to the retired list of the Navy of Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12796) providing for free homesteads in the Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments:

A bill (S. 4848) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 4923) to ratify and confirm a supplemental agreement with the Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4083) for the relief of Surg. John F. Bransford, United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

CHERSTIN MATTSON.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5913) granting a pension to Cherstin Mattson, to report it favorably, without amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BATE. I ask the Senator why the bill should be acted on now. There are times set apart for bills from the Committee on Pensions. Is there any special reason why it should be acted on this morning? I am not here to oppose the bill.

Mr. NELSON. The widow is in needy condition; it is near the close of the session, and I am anxious to get the bill to the House in order to secure speedy action.

Mr. BATE. I do not want to raise an objection, but we have times set apart for the consideration of just such claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Cherstin Mattson, widow of Hans Mattson, late colonel Third Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if this lady is not pensionable under the general law?

Mr. NELSON. No; she is not pensionable under the general law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has she not a pensionable status at the Pension Bureau?

Mr. NELSON. She has not been able to secure the necessary technical evidence. It is one of those cases where we grant pensions when the case shows merit, but the applicant is not able to supply all the technical proofs needed in the Pension Office.

Mr. BATE. Has this claim been referred to the Pension Bureau?

Mr. NELSON. The case has been considered like other cases.

Mr. BATE. And did the Pension Bureau decide against granting her a pension?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it has been considered in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BATE. They decided against giving her a pension, though a very meritorious case?

Mr. NELSON. They decided on technical grounds against granting her a pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. PETTUS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 12648) establishing a regular term of the United States district court in Roanoke City, Va., and I ask that it be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia shall be held each year at Danville on the Tuesday after the second Monday in April and November, at Lynchburg on the Tuesday after the second Monday in March and September, at Abingdon on the Tuesday after the first Monday in May and October, at Harrisonburg on the Tuesday after the first Monday in June and December, at Charlottesville on the second Monday in January, and at Roanoke City on the second Monday in February.

SEC. 2. That in the western district of Virginia the clerk of the circuit and district courts at Lynchburg shall appoint two deputy clerks, each of whom shall be deputy clerk both of the circuit and district courts, and one of whom shall reside and keep his office in the city of Charlottesville, and the other in the city of Roanoke, for the purpose, in said respective cities, of taking charge and custody of the court records and papers, attending the sessions of the said courts, issuing all proper process, and discharging all the clerical duties in connection with the business of said courts.

SEC. 3. That the marshal for the western district of Virginia shall discharge all the duties of marshal in connection with the business of said courts at Charlottesville and Roanoke.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a regular term of the United States district court in Roanoke City, Va., and for other purposes."

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Mr. BURROWS. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report back to the Senate that the majority of the committee is adverse to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 41) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States, and that a majority of the committee favored an amendment to the resolution, known as the Depew amendment, which provides that—

The qualifications of citizens entitled to vote for United States Senators and Representatives in Congress shall be uniform in all the States, and Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation and to provide for the registration of citizens entitled to vote, the conduct of such elections, and the certification of the result.

And, thirdly, I am directed to report that a majority of the committee is opposed to the joint resolution when thus amended.

I make the report for such action as the Senate may see fit to take.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is uncertain what the action of the Senate should be. Will the Senator make any motion?

Mr. BURROWS. I make no motion. I make the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the report made by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. What order will the Senate take?

Mr. HOAR. I understand the report will go on the Calendar. I suppose, although it is verbally made, it is to be taken as a report of the committee, and it will go on the Calendar.

Mr. BURROWS. Let it take its place on the Calendar as the report of the committee.

Mr. BATE. We did not understand the report made by the committee. We could not hear it on this side. There was no formal report made by the Senator from Michigan?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A verbal report was made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BATE. That is what I supposed; but we could not hear it over here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a report stating the action of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. What action is proposed to be taken? We can not hear over here anything that is going on upon the other side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Michigan state it again?

Mr. TELLER. I could not hear what the Senator said, although I gave my best possible attention.

Mr. BURROWS. I supposed my voice would reach every part of the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. It was not the fault of the Senator from Michigan at all.

Mr. BATE. It was owing to confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. BURROWS. I stated to the Senate that I had been directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report to the Senate that a majority of that committee was opposed to House joint resolution No. 41, proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States; secondly, that a majority of the committee was in favor of what is known as the Depew amendment being added to that resolution; and, thirdly, I was directed to report to the Senate that a majority of the committee was opposed to the joint resolution when thus amended, and, having made that report, to leave the matter in the hands of the Senate for such action as it should see fit to take; and I ask that the matter may be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposed that the House joint resolution with the amendment suggested by the committee should be placed upon the Calendar with an adverse report. If there be no objection, that will be the order of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. The chairman stated that there was an adverse report on the joint resolution itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And on the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. BERRY. Then I think it would go on the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. There was no such report as the Senator from Arkansas suggests. The committee did not instruct the chairman to make such a report and the chairman did not make such a report. The chairman reported that a majority of the committee were opposed to the House joint resolution as it came to the committee, but a majority of the committee were also in favor of amending the resolution by adding to it the Depew amendment, and, thirdly, that a majority of the committee were opposed to the resolution when so amended.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Michigan states that a majority of the committee are opposed to the House resolution, that is unquestionably adverse, and so I did not misstate the meaning of the report of the Senator from Michigan. He did not use the word "adverse," but he said a majority of the committee were opposed to the House joint resolution which was referred to them. That is all I said about it.

Mr. FORAKER. A majority of the committee refused to favorably report the House joint resolution, but the committee did not take any action as to reporting it adversely, because a majority of the committee, when there had been a refusal to act favorably on the joint resolution itself as it came to them, wanted to hold the resolution to amend it in the committee.

Mr. BURROWS. Although I have stated it, I think accurately, in obedience to the instructions of the committee in this matter, I ought to state that a majority of the committee by a vote is opposed to the resolution of the House.

Mr. BERRY. That is what I said.

Mr. BURROWS. Secondly, a majority of the committee was in favor of what is known as the "Depew amendment," and it was voted on as an amendment, and after so amending it a majority of the committee was against the resolution; upon a vote to report the resolution to the Senate with the Depew amendment it was voted down, and upon a vote to report it to the Senate adversely with the Depew amendment it was voted down.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Under the circumstances, would it not be proper to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the joint resolution and place it upon the Calendar without any recommendation? I make that motion, if it be in order.

Mr. HOAR. That must be a separate motion, to go over one day on objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland moves that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the House joint resolution and that it be placed on the Calendar. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TELLER. I rose to find out what is the parliamentary situation. I think the motion of the Senator from Maryland to put the joint resolution on the Calendar is a proper motion. I do not understand that the committee, under the statement made by the chairman, have really disposed of this case. I do not see how it gets here. How did they report it? Did they report it without any recommendations?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; with a personal explanation.

Mr. TELLER. As I understand the chairman, it is equivalent to an adverse report, and the joint resolution can go on the Calendar with the adverse report. It is entitled to go on the Calendar with the adverse report if anybody wants to have it placed there, and I think the Senate does desire to take that course.

Mr. BATE. I submit that the committee are already relieved from any further consideration of it by their own action. It is an adverse report, and it is now to receive an expression of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the impression that the joint resolution should be placed on the Calendar as being adversely reported by the committee.

Mr. BERRY. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. That is correct, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. DEPEW. As the committee has perfected the joint resolution, it will be placed on the Calendar, I take it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee did not recommend any action to the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Should it not be reported favorably with an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the committee stated that the committee had declined to report it favorably with an amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the report of the committee? I ask to have it stated.

Mr. TELLER. They bring back the joint resolution, and we are entitled to have it go on the Calendar without any amendment, because they have declined to make any amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the report?

Mr. TELLER. The committee could have recommended an amendment, but they declined to do that.

Mr. HOAR. They recommend an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will endeavor to state what the chairman of the committee reported. He reported that a majority of the committee were opposed to the House resolution; that a majority of the committee were in favor of adding to the House resolution what is known as the Depew amendment; and then that having been added, that the committee were opposed to the resolution as thus amended and that he had been directed not to report the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, there ought not to be any misunderstanding about it. The majority of the committee directed its chairman to report these facts to the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. The facts, but not the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. That is the report made by the committee for such action as the Senate may see fit to take.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from Michigan a question? Did the committee direct the chairman of the committee to report the joint resolution back to the Senate?

Mr. BURROWS. It did not. I have reported precisely what the committee directed me to report.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then the motion of the Senator from Maryland is strictly in order, in my judgment.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the report of the committee, as the committee directed the chairman to make it and which the chairman has made, is the equivalent in substance and effect of a report that the committee is unable to agree. That is all it amounts to in legal effect, as I understand it, and I participated in that action. I think the motion made by the Senator from Maryland would be in order as one way of dealing with it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I merely desire to say that I understood the committee was unable to make any report whatever. That was practically the result of what the Senator from Michigan stated. For that reason I moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that the joint resolution itself shall go upon the Calendar without recommendation. I think that motion is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. HOAR. Now let the motion go over.

Mr. SPOONER. As the committee makes it I do not know what right the Senate has to deal with the report of the committee. The committee reported the House joint resolution with an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No; they did not.

Mr. TELLER. They have not done so.

Mr. SPOONER. As amended they reported against it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They declined to make any report at all. As I understood the chairman, he only reported to the Senate how the committee stood on the joint resolution, retaining the joint resolution in the committee.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me state to the Senator from Wisconsin that the joint resolution of the House is before the Committee on Privileges and Elections now. I was not directed to report it to the Senate, but to state to the Senate the condition in which the joint resolution stands.

Mr. BACON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I should like to know whether the committee in directing that report to be made intended to indicate to the Senate that the committee deemed it a hopeless undertaking to come to an agreement?

Mr. BURROWS. I am not able to state what the committee intended by it, but I think I may say that the committee has labored diligently and persistently to reach an agreement by the majority as to what ought to be done, and, in my judgment, it will be impossible for the committee to reach a conclusion.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator, with his permission, while I am on the floor, if he understands the committee to mean to indicate to the Senate that it recognizes the propriety of the committee being discharged from the further consideration of the subject?

Mr. BURROWS. Well, there was no discussion about that, and I have no opinion about it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in relation to the motion under which the chairman of the committee acted, I think I am better entitled to answer the question of the Senator from Georgia than anyone else. I would say in answer to it that the committee recognized that there was a good deal of anxiety among Senators to know what progress we were making. There was a week or two ago a motion made to discharge the committee, and it was announced then in the utterance in the Senate Chamber that unless action was speedily taken there would be a renewal of that motion. The committee felt that it was in duty bound, under all the circumstances, to report to the Senate exactly the state of this matter as it is in committee. They do not know whether they can agree or not. No one is, I suppose, authorized to do anything more than speculate about that. All we know is that we have not yet been able to agree. When it was simply a question whether we would accept the House resolution there was a majority against it.

Mr. MORGAN. It is a mere report of progress.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a mere report of progress. Then when the majority added the Depew amendment the scene shifted and the vote of some of the Senators changed, and there was a majority against the resolution as so amended. That is all we know. Whether we will be able to get out of it if you leave it with us I do not know.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If Senators will permit the Chair, the Chair on reflection thinks that the committee has not brought back the resolution to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. That is what we first understood the Senator from Michigan had done. Now we understand he has not done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Therefore the suggestion the Chair made that the resolution should be placed on the Calendar is withdrawn.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] moves that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution and that it be placed on the Calendar. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks that that motion shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that that motion or resolution is at present in order. The time for motions or resolution in the order of business has not yet come. So the motion can not be made now because we are on reports of committees. I do not care, as the Senate has had it all before it, to raise any such question as that, because it is only putting off for five minutes what might as well be done now; but if the motion is treated as being in order now, I desire to claim the right that it shall go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is technically correct. The motion can not be made at this time, and when made, it can only be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that the motion may now be made as if made in the proper time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BATE. Before that is done, I wish to state that the objection made to the motion of the Senator from Maryland was upon the idea that the matter had been consummated and was not to be considered further in the committee room. Therefore I withdraw my suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON]. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks that the motion may go over. That order will be taken.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 5983) granting an increase of pension to Lydia A. Jones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5984) granting an increase of pension to David B. Turnipseed;

A bill (S. 5985) granting an increase of pension to Freeman Stoddard; and

A bill (S. 5986) granting a pension to Edwin M. Harley.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 5987) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Bollong; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS (for Mr. BURTON) introduced a bill (S. 5988) to provide the manner of perfecting appeals and effecting supersedeas in cases where judgments are rendered against municipal corporations and quasi municipal corporations; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (for Mr. BURTON) introduced a bill (S. 5989) for the relief of F. C. Schrader; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (for Mr. BURTON) introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5990) granting an increase of pension to Lewis W. Dennen;

A bill (S. 5991) granting an increase of pension to William Barrett;

A bill (S. 5992) granting an increase of pension to Norman A. Rupe;

A bill (S. 5993) granting an increase of pension to James G. Davis; and

A bill (S. 5994) granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Clark.

Mr. HARRIS (for Mr. BURTON) introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5995) granting an increase of pension to Milton Spence;

A bill (S. 5996) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Morris; and

A bill (S. 5997) granting an increase of pension to Gilead M. Shell.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 5998) for the relief of the heirs of Edmund H. Chambers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 5999) for the relief of the estate of Dr. J. E. Prestridge, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6000) for the relief of Thomas W. White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 6001) granting an increase of pension to Horace D. Baker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 6002) for the relief of Charles R. Hooper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6003) to remove the charge of desertion standing against James McGreevey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 6004) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John F. Weston the sum of $241.60, and so forth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6005) for the relief of Lafayette D. Settle, administrator of Marcus Settle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6006) for the relief of the heirs of David C. Williams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 106) empowering the State of Minnesota to file its selections for indemnity school lands upon public lands in Minnesota, otherwise undisposed of in townships, immediately upon the survey thereof in the field and prior to the approval and filing of the plat and survey thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. MCMILLAN) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for paving and grading Mintwood place, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUARLES submitted an amendment directing the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board of naval officers to recommend a suitable site for a naval training station at some point on the shores of the Great Lakes, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY submitted an amendment authorizing the President to appoint a commission of two competent naval officers and one competent Army officer of the Engineer Corps to make a thorough examination of Sabine Pass, the Neches and Sabine rivers, and contiguous territory in the State of Texas, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLESTON (S. C.) NAVY-YARD.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution which relates to a matter that is now being considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask for its adoption.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to send to the Senate, at as early a day as is practicable, estimates in detail covering such public works as can either be erected or started during the next fiscal year at the United States navy-yard at Charleston, S. C.

LIFE-SAVING STATION ON MONOMOY ISLAND, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. LODGE. About ten days ago the Senate passed a bill establishing an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, in Massachusetts, and before the bill reached the House the House passed a bill in identically the same words. The bill came over yesterday. I had asked that it be laid before the Senate for action when it came, but it came with about a hundred pension bills and was not held over. By mistake it was referred to the Committee on Commerce, which had reported the identical bill favorably and it had passed the Senate. I ask that the Committee on Commerce may be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill and that it be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the Committee on Commerce may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13168) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts, and that it may be placed upon its passage. If there be no objection, the Committee on Commerce will be discharged. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the bill (S. 4995) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts, be recalled from the House of Representatives, and when returned I shall ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

HATTIE M. WHITNEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House, and ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 12805) requiring the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company to extend its Eleventh street line, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 12865) regulating the use of telephone wires in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 14050) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 14147) to amend an act for the prevention of smoke in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved February 2, 1899.

The bill (H. R. 11879) to correct the military record of Michael Mullett was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LIEUTENANT ARNOLD AND SERGEANT EDWARDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 22d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all official papers in his possession which relate to charges against Lieutenant Arnold and Sergeant Edwards by Private Andrew K. Weir, including the report of Capt. P. W. West, United States Army, of date August 21, 1901.

Mr. LODGE. Yesterday, after I asked to have the resolution go over, I received a letter from the Secretary of War, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 26, 1902.

DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry regarding the charges against Lieutenant Arnold and Sergeant Edwards by Private Andrew K. Weir, and the report of Capt. P. W. West thereon, of August 21, 1901, I have to inform you that since the report of Captain West, who had made a partial investigation in the Philippine Islands as inspector-general, further investigation has been had, leading to a direction that Sergeant Edwards should be tried by court-martial, and preparation for that trial is now being made; but the investigation has failed to develop facts justifying the trial of Lieutenant Arnold, and a further investigation in this country by an inspector-general authorized to examine witnesses under oath has been ordered.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. H. C. LODGE,
Chairman Committee on Philippines, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the resolution pass?

Mr. LODGE. Under those circumstances, a court-martial being pending in the case of the noncommissioned officer and an investigation proceeding, with a view to a court-martial probably, in the case of the commissioned officer, we ought not to ask for those papers at this time.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I again ask the Senator the question I asked him yesterday, when that court-martial was ordered?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know, and I do not think it is of importance, though it will be easy to find out.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow if the Senator will advise us then.

Mr. LODGE. I think if the Senator means to press this resolution we might as well vote on it now. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO SUBJECT OF LYNCHINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. GALLINGER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby directed to make inquiry into the subject of lynchings in the United States and to report to the Senate whether, under the laws and Constitution of the country, there is any remedy for the evil.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is the resolution I offered. As the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] suggested a wish to be heard upon it, and as he is not now present, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the resolution will lie over.

STATEMENTS BY FILIPINOS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate another resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HOAR, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate whether there be any law or regulation in force in the Philippine Islands which will prevent any native of those islands who may so desire, not under arrest and against whom no charge of any offense against the United States is pending, from coming to the United States and stating his views or desires as to the interest of his people to the President or either House of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives in relation to the Army appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives in relation to the Army appropriation bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 20, 1902.

Resolved, That the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. HULL, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. HAY be the managers of the conference on the part of the House, with the following instructions:

Whereas Senate amendments numbered 13, 14, and 15 to the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1903 makes the proposed appropriation of $4,000,000 for barracks and quarters available for the construction of such permanent buildings at established military posts as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and reappropriates from unexpended balances of former appropriations for barracks and quarters $550,000 for construction of necessary garrison buildings, notwithstanding appropriations for said objects are made, in accordance with the rules and practice of the House, in the sundry civil appropriation bill for said year; and

Whereas said amendments are subversive of the rules of the House, duplicate appropriations, and tend to confusion in the methods of making appropriations for the support of the Government, and will, if agreed to, give rise to a practice that will inevitably result in extravagant and wasteful expenditures: Therefore,

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 12804 are instructed not to recommend an agreement to said amendments Nos. 13, 14, and 15, or to any modification thereof that will, under authority of said Army appropriation act, permit the expenditure of any sum for construction of permanent buildings at established military posts, except as authorized by section 1136 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the parliamentary condition of the question. When it was last before the Senate, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made a motion that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask for a full and free conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon. The Chair had put the question, but had not decided it, and will treat it as still open.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I want to say a word about the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. That motion ignores the action of the House of Representatives, and is somewhat offensive to the House. I have no thought that the House intended to be disrespectful to the Senate. I believe that this matter can be accommodated if appropriate means shall be adopted by the Senate.

On reflection I am more and more inclined to think that the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], which finds precedent in the proceedings of the English Parliament, for the appointment of a committee to confer as to this request for a conference, is the better way out of the difficulty, and the best way out of it. I hope that the Senate, under the circumstances, will not grant this conference. If it does, it will be called upon to grant a great many more such conferences.

I have no feeling about it. It is a matter of no consequence to me, but it is not a mere matter of etiquette. It is a matter of very great consequence to the people, because it involves the harmony and cooperation of the two Houses. I believe if we pass a resolution like that which has accompanied this request for a conference the House will regard it as an invasion of its dignity and as an affront, and I think the House would be right. I am quite certain that such a proposition would not get one vote in this body. I am not a stickler for mere matters of procedure or form; but I do not think, while I have the profoundest respect for the Senator from Massachusetts, that in this situation it is exactly wise to ignore the action of the House.

The House has requested this conference, but the House has requested it with a message to us that it has instructed its conferees not to agree or to participate in a full and free conference. It is no adequate answer to that, in my opinion, for the Senate, entirely ignoring that request, to insist upon its amendments and request a full and free conference from the House. Why request a full and free conference from the House as to amendments made by the Senate, when already the House, the body requesting the conference, has notified us that it has not only disagreed to the amendments of the Senate, but has instructed its conferees never to recommend to the House, after the conference, an agreement to those amendments?

It is almost an impossible situation, and it ought to be accommodated. I believe the way to accommodate it and adjust it is not by ignoring the action of the House; not by substituting for the request of the House for a conference a request of the Senate for a full and free conference, but the appointment of a committee on the part of the Senate to talk this matter over with a similar committee from the House, to the end that we may get at something which is right and which conserves the dignity of both Houses.

I may be wrong about it, and very likely I am. If I differ from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on a proposition of this kind, I suppose I ought to feel I am wrong about it; but that is the way I feel, and therefore that is what I have to say.

Mr. HOAR. I am sorry to say, Mr. President, that while I reciprocate the great respect which the Senator from Wisconsin has so kindly expressed for me, although the Senator thinks he ought to feel that he is in the wrong whenever he differs from me, I notice he never backs down.

Mr. SPOONER. What is that?

Mr. HOAR. I say that while I reciprocate the expression of regard made by my honorable friend, when he says that he supposes when he differs from me he ought to feel that he is wrong, I have noticed that he never backs down from his own position.

Mr. SPOONER. I said on a question of this kind.

Mr. HOAR. I notice, in fact, the Senator never does that. I want simply to say that I am not very strenuous about the method of doing this thing; but I do not interpret the motion as the Senator from Wisconsin interprets it. Perhaps the fact that he interprets it otherwise may be a good argument against it, as other people may so interpret it.

As I understand it, the parliamentary practice is now completely established that either body may ask a conference on amendments. If we want to make amendments to bills coming from the House we can send down with the first notice of the amendments a request for a conference. That was stated by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the Senate thought that was a proper practice, and it has been a very common one. So that there is no difficulty, so far as the mere asking of the conference is concerned, as to which House asks for it.

Now, then, the House has disagreed to an amendment of ours and asks for a restricted conference. Before acting upon that restricted conference we say to the House, "We should like to talk the whole matter over with you freely, including, of course, the whole situation as it is made." So that our conference will be a free conference, and will enable our conferees to talk over not only the merits of the amendment, but the request of the House. We do not ignore it; we do not deny it; we do not accede to it; but we say, before going into this restricted conference of yours, let us have a free one. That is all we say. It seems to me that that is the simplest method of doing it. Of course, if the Senate prefers not to act at all upon the Army bill and to put it off and have this or some other conference on the general subject, perhaps, first, I shall not very much object to it. I do not think there is much choice between the two methods.

The purpose of my motion, and I think the parliamentary position of it is exactly what it ought to be. We do not want to express ourselves about this request of the House until we talk it over with them and see whether they adhere to their action. That is what I had in mind. I do not care about this method. I will be governed, Mr. President, in adhering to this motion or withdrawing it by the desire of the Senator who has the bill in charge, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and if he likes another way better I will follow him.

Mr. PROCTOR. In asking to have this bill laid before the Senate the other day, I did so without any expression of opinion. I hoped that what the late lamented Senator from New Hampshire used to call "the best thought of the Senate" would converge upon some method that would be satisfactory to all; but instead of that, "the best thought of the Senate" seems to diverge somewhat. I have therefore prepared a concurrent resolution in the line of the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], and I will ask that it may be read for information.

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw my motion and let the Senator move his resolution, if he likes that better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his motion, and the Senator from Vermont submits a concurrent resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee of three, the chairman of which shall be the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and two Senators, to be named by the President of the Senate, be appointed to meet with a committee of the like number to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to confer on the matter of conferences between the two Houses, and especially upon the matter of instructions to conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont offers a resolution for which he asks present consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before action is taken on the resolution, I wish to submit an observation or two concerning the question which is in controversy between the two Houses.

I notice that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] assured the Senate that, in his opinion, the House did not intend to be offensive to the Senate in sending the message that is now before us. The reading of that message will reveal the fact that the House does suggest that the action of the Senate will lead to extravagance, which, I think, is an offensive suggestion.

Mr. President, if you will go back to the debates in the House you will find that a very distinguished member of that body used these words:

Now, let the House——

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President; and that is that the Senator is proceeding to discuss what occurred in the other House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, this is a controversy between the two Houses, and I have, under those circumstances, I think, a right to do it.

Mr. PETTUS. It is a controversy between the two Houses, but it is a controversy as to which the Senate is not informed officially, except by the message which it received from the House, and I submit, Mr. President, that the very thing that rule is aimed at is arising now; that is, that we shall not refer to what is said in the other House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we are all acquainted with that rule, and in what I have said I have been simply following what has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Rules and by other Senators.

Mr. PETTUS. That was his opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. However, I will change my language so that I think it will suit the Senator from Alabama. I will say, Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Will my friend allow me to say a word?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator referred to my utterances. I want to say that is perhaps the only instance in my career where I could be successfully charged with having been diplomatic in my utterances. As to matters pending between the two Houses, I thought we ought not to show that the House had deliberately challenged the Senate; that it would not be wise to enter into that phase of the subject. I might not disagree with the Senator as to what he has said and what I imagine he will say, but I thought it would not tend to harmony and an arrival at the result we all desire to attain if we were to say that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may be permitted, there is no formal rule of the Senate relating to the point of order just raised by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. There is, however, in Jefferson's Manual a parliamentary suggestion that it is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House or to refer to the particular vote or majority on it there. The Chair understands the entire effect of the rule to be that reference should not be made to what has been said on the same subject in the other House—and the Chair supposes that refers to the present session—or to notice the votes or majorities on it in the other House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been very thoroughly acquainted with that suggestion in Jefferson's Manual for a good many years. I presume it ought to be observed; but, unfortunately, it is not observed in this body or in a certain other body; but I will say that in sending a message to the Senate from another body, suggesting that the Senate in its action was advising extravagance in the appropriation of the public money, is something that may properly be called in question.

I will not state what I was about to state as having been observed in that body, but I will refer Senators to the debates on the subject that is now before the Senate for enlightenment upon that point, and they will find, if they will take the trouble to go over those debates, some things that I think do not tend to harmony between the two Houses of Congress, that ought not to occur in either House of Congress.

Mr. President, what are the facts? The House, exercising its constitutional prerogative, passes a bill, it comes to the Senate. The Senate, in the exercise of its constitutional prerogative, amends that bill, and it is sent to the other House with those amendments. There is a well-recognized mode of procedure in such cases; that is, for the other House to either accept those amendments or to disagree to those amendments and ask a committee of conference thereon. Instead of doing that, the other body proceeds to instruct, before a conference is held, its conferees not to agree to the Senate amendments.

Now, supposing the Senate, in its constitutional right, should at this moment instruct its conferees to adhere to the Senate amendments, then what becomes of your conference; indeed, what becomes of your bill? It is absolutely destroyed. No action can be taken on the bill under those circumstances.

It does seem to me, Mr. President, that we are face to face with a proposition that has in some way got to be untangled, or else the legislation of Congress is going to come to a standstill. If the effect of a free and full conference, which has always been recognized in parliamentary bodies, can be destroyed by the action of one House before the conference is held, the other House can then take action that will absolutely prohibit the holding of a conference, and in that way destroy the bill.

Mr. President, I do not care how this thing is reached. I certainly have no feeling about it. I have regretted very much to observe the tendency during the present session of Congress to involve us in trouble on this matter of conferences. Nobody calls in question the rights of the other House, and the other House has no right to call in question the rights of this body.

If this matter can be adjusted by a committee such as is proposed by the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], very likely that is the best method of procedure. I certainly have no disposition to utter a word or to cast a vote that will in the least degree be offensive toward the body in which this bill originated; and while I held a different view in the first place and had prepared a resolution which I thought I should offer, upon reflection I am of opinion that the original suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]—who is very properly, I think, holding us down to an observance of the rules of the body, whether they are found in our rules or in Jefferson's Manual—and the plan perfected by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] who has charge of this bill—I say, upon reflection, I think that will be the wiser course, and I shall be very glad indeed to vote for the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont.

In closing, Mr. President, I will make the suggestion that hereafter I shall endeavor to not forget that Jefferson's Manual denies us the right of discussing what has happened in the other House, and I trust that Senators who have been here much longer than I have been here will be equally discreet in their utterances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that Jefferson's Manual prevents a Senator from discussing action which has been taken in the other House.

Mr. TELLER. Neither do I think it does, Mr. President, except that we have no right, as I understand, to refer to a vote taken in the other House for the purpose of affecting the vote here; that is one of the things that is forbidden, but when a matter has passed into history the rule does not apply. We can discuss, for instance, what has happened in the last Congress. I understand the rule is simply to prevent friction between the two bodies, and that is all there is about it. Keeping that always in view of course the rule is a safe one.

The PRESIDING OFEICER. The question is on the resolution presented by the Senator from Vermont. The Chair understands the Senator from Vermont to modify his resolution.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes; I have modified it in two or three particulars. Let the resolution be read as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee, consisting of three Senators, be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate to meet with a committee of like number, to be appointed by the House of Representatives, to confer upon the matter of conferences between the two Houses, and especially upon the matter of instructions to conferees."

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I move to amend that resolution by striking out all after the words "upon the matter of," and inserting what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "upon the matter of" it is proposed to strike out "conferences between the two Houses, and especially upon the matter of instructions to conferees," and to insert "the message of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 12804, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read as it will stand if the amendment be agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee, consisting of three Senators, be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate to meet with a committee of like number, to be appointed by the House of Representatives, to confer upon the matter of the message of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 12804, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903."

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I think that answers the same purpose as the original resolution, and I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] is accepted by the mover of the resolution. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will appoint as the committee required by the resolution the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. If the morning business is concluded, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2295.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is concluded, and the question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, before I proceed with my remarks this morning I desire to lay before the Senate, in response to the request of the president and secretary of the San Francisco Labor Council, the resolutions adopted by that council. They were telegraphed to me under date of 24th instant:

SAN FRANCISCO LABOR COUNCIL OPPOSES.

Whereas information about the Philippine Islands given to the American people in reluctant driblets shows a condition too bad to be permitted even in the Philippines; and whereas it appears there is at present neither power nor inclination to stop these islands from being used as a bridge over which Chinese may come into the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the San Francisco Labor Council, in regular session assembled, May 23, 1902, is opposed to any legislation about the Philippines being enacted until the public knows the real conditions in these islands and the real status of their inhabitants under our flag.

SENATOR FORAKER AND THE FILIPINO JUNTA.

I supposed, Mr. President, when I concluded yesterday, that there would be no further room for debate of any kind between the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and myself, but I desire, for the purpose of setting history aright, if the Senator from Ohio is wrong, and if the Senator is right, then that the Washington Post may be set aright, to read certain extracts. For that purpose, and that there may be no mistake about what was said by the Senator from Ohio when we were disputing upon the proposition that the attack on the night of the 4th of February, 1899, had been made upon the Filipinos instead of by the Filipinos upon the Americans, as was claimed immediately following that attack by all the press dispatches that were permitted to come from Manila, I will read what occured yesterday. I read from the official stenographer's notes.

Mr. FORAKER. Then the Senator's attitude, as expressed in this editorial, was due to the fact that he was, as he now thinks, imposed upon in regard to the opening of hostilities there. That is, he was of opinion at the time when the hostilities were reported that the Filipinos were the aggressors, and that now he is of the opinion, and proposes to demonstrate it, that, on the contrary, the Americans were the aggressors, and that it was part of the settled plan to make sure of the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. PATTERSON. I draw that inference.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes. Then I want to ask the Senator while he is doing that to explain to us why it was, for such is the fact, as I believe he will agree, that Agoncillo and Sixto Lopez, who were both here in this country at that time, the day before the fight commenced, left this country without anybody knowing at the time of their leaving and fled to Canada, where they were when the news came that fighting had commenced. In other words, does the Senator imagine that as a part of the American plan to bring about this conflict to effect the ratification of the treaty they notified the representatives of Aguinaldo, so that they could get out of the country before the commencement of the fighting which we were to precipitate?

Mr. PATTERSON. In the first place, the statement of the Senator from Ohio that these men fled to Canada is his conclusion.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator deny that they went to Canada?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator deny that they left Washington in a surreptitious way, in the nighttime——

Mr. PATTERSON. They may have gone upon a night train; I do not know.

Mr. FORAKER. And went to Canada by the most direct route possible, and never stopped even to check their baggage, hardly, until they got into Canada?

* * * * * * * *

Mr. FORAKER. I have called the attention of the Senator to it because it has always seemed to me to be practically a controlling fact upon that question, which nobody ever raised until long after the conflict began, because at that time everybody accepted the word of our officers, our generals, our representatives in the Philippines. But when their word was questioned and the facts of that time were recalled it always seemed to me to be a controlling fact. That is why I called the Senator's attention to the fact that these representatives of Aguinaldo here in Washington should have left and gone by the night train, never stopping until they got out of the country and got safely into Canada, and did it just in time to be safely in Canada before the fighting commenced. It looked on the face as though they had notice of it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very small facts acquire great significance in the minds of some when they have some view to uphold. Let that stand as stated by the Senator from Ohio until I come to the undeniable facts; and I may tell the Senator some of them now.

Mr. President, not questioning the truth of what the Senator from Ohio said upon the subject, I want to call the Senator's attention to a short extract taken from the Washington Post of February 5, 1899, the day following the night of the fighting. This is one item:

[From Washington Post, February 5, 1899.]

Señor Lopez, of the Philippine junta, is still at the Arlington with four other members of the commission, and in regard to the absence of Agoncillo asserted that his superior had gone to Baltimore to spend Sunday and would return either to-night or to-morrow morning. The Filipinos have not received any news from Manila, although Señor Lopez says that had an attack been made by the insurgents he certainly would have heard of it. His people, he said, are awaiting the action of Congress on the peace treaty, and have been very patient, and he placed no credence in the report that they had attacked the American troops. He did not think there could be any conflict unless the American forces had attacked the Filipino outposts.

In the Washington Post of February 7 I find this item:

[Washington Post, February 7.]

The three Filipinos at the headquarters of the junta at the Arlington will not leave Washington for the present. Señor Losado is suffering with inflammatory rheumatism, and Señor Sixto Lopez and Señor Luna will remain with the sick man.

I wanted to read those two items from the Post simply to show that either the Senator from Ohio or the Post labored under a serious mistake.

Mr. FORAKER. When I said what I did yesterday as to the action of Agoncillo and Lopez I was speaking simply from my recollection and upon a suggestion that was made to me which recalled that incident. My recollection is a very distinct one that they did leave here the night before the fighting, they did go to Canada, and that they did not remain in Washington, as that newspaper article seems to indicate they did. I may be in error about it. I stated it in entire good faith, thinking I was recalling an incident about which there was common knowledge and concerning which there was no dispute or room for dispute.

I will take pleasure in looking up the matter, and if I am mistaken about it I will, of course, recall it; but I stated what I did in entire good faith. I am quite surprised that the Senator has found such statements as he has read from the Washington Post.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will hand these to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no doubt that the Senator has quoted the newspaper correctly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Ohio will agree that it was perfectly proper for me, under the circumstances, to call his attention to the matter?

Mr. FORAKER. Entirely so. I am very much obliged to the Senator for having done so, because I would not want to inject into the debate any statement not absolutely correct. I will look into the matter further before I say more about it.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the statement I have read is true, then I suppose one of the main props upon which the Senator rested in taking issue with the proposition I made about the commencement of the attack on the night of February 4 has been removed.

Passing from that——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado in this connection if it is not a well-known and undisputed fact that a large number of Filipino officers were in Manila at that time in the power of our troops?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is true that a number were in Manila, but the principal officers of the Filipino army that night, as admitted by Generals MacArthur and Otis and Hughes, were at Malolos, far distant from the army lines, and those American officers gave it as their opinion that it was not the purpose of the Filipinos to commence an attack that night. That is most solemnly admitted in the testimony given before the Senate committee.

SENATOR SPOONER'S CONVERSION.

I think, Mr. President, before I leave the question of changes of views, I may well refer to the views once entertained by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], especially in view of the fact that he has repeatedly stated that he has not, even to this day, changed the views as expressed in a speech he made upon the 2d day of February, 1899. He said in that speech:

Mr. President, some gentlemen waltz up to this proposition of territorial expansion as gaily as "the troubadour touched his guitar." I can not do it. I have not been able to persuade myself that the best interests of this country, in the long run—and we ought to study its interests for the long run—are to be subserved by a policy of territorial expansion—permanent dominion over far-distant lands and peoples.

In the same speech the Senator from Wisconsin shrinks from connecting ourselves with an alien people in the following language:

But, Mr. President, I shrink from the notion that the interests of this country will be subserved by making permanently a part of our land territory thousands of miles away, inhabited by peoples alien to us, not of our blood, not of our way of thinking, foreign to all our associations, living in a tropical climate, where the white man can not work, under labor conditions of necessity which we would not permit to exist in the United States.

PERSONAL LIBERTY IN THE UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES.

Before going on with the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin, my mind recurs to the singular phenomenon presented by the presence of Sixto Lopez and Agoncillo, and other members of the Filipino junta, in the city of Washington and in the United States at the time of the attack upon the 4th day of February, and by the presence of some of the members of the Filipino junta who have remained here ever since. It is this: In the United States these men are entirely free from molestation or arrest. They were and are in thorough sympathy with the efforts of the Filipinos. They are native Filipinos. They were here in the United States advocating their cause. They addressed public meetings upon the subject of Filipino independence. Yet they remain in the United States free from molestation, whereas if they had been in the Philippine Islands they would have been sent to jail, deported, or possibly hanged.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

THE PHILIPPINE JUNTA IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator refers to the presence of Agoncillo and Lopez, representing the Filipinos, at the capital. They left one night. They folded their tents like the Arabs, and silently stole away.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is what the Senator from Ohio said.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I say.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then you will have to take issue with the Washington Post.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not care anything about that. They left so as to be in Canada or as near Canada as they could be when we received or could receive notice of the attack of the Filipinos on our troops at Manila. However, that is not the point about which I wish to ask the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me make a suggestion——

Mr. SPOONER. No, no; wait.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Wisconsin does not desire to be in error.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not in error.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me suggest that I have just read two articles from the Washington Post showing that Sixto Lopez and at least three other members of the Filipino junta were at the Arlington Hotel as late as February 7.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps Sixto Lopez. I do not know. One of them had the rheumatism and could not get off his bed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me a moment——

Mr. GALLINGER. Agoncillo?

Mr. SPOONER. No; Agoncillo left. The Senator from Colorado said, as I understood him, that other members of the junta had remained here ever since without arrest. Did I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; I said so. Sixto Lopez is in Boston now.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought the Senator meant at the capital.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no. He is in Boston. That is even preferential to the capital, I imagine.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; from one standpoint.

Mr. PATTERSON. And I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that we have done our best to get the Committee on the Philippines to summon Sixto Lopez to come before the committee, that he let us know what he knows about the hopes and aspirations of the Filipino people and affairs in those islands, and we have been unable to succeed.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator passes from this subject I want to make a remark. I have read over the quotations which the Senator from Colorado has put into the RECORD from the Washington Post. I heard them read by the Senator, but until I read them, he kindly having sent them to my desk, I did not get a clear idea of just what the statements were. I find now that I was in error in saying that Lopez and Agoncillo both left here in the manner I stated. I think it is quite clearly indicated by what is here, however, that Agoncillo did so leave, but Lopez remained here a day or two only because one of their party was confined to his bed with inflammatory rheumatism and could not leave the city. I remember that at the time the newspapers were full of it, and that Agoncillo did leave. He did not go to Baltimore with the idea of returning, but went on to Canada, and never stopped, as I understand it, until he got into Canada.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, the people at the hotel did not know he had left.

Mr. FORAKER. He left surreptitiously. He left in the nighttime. He left without anybody knowing it until his whereabouts were discovered in safe territory.

Mr. SPOONER. He left obviously, if the Senator will permit me, in order that he might be beyond our jurisdiction when the news came to us that the Filipinos had attacked our outpost at Manila.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Colorado smiles about that in a way which indicates he does not appreciate it, but nevertheless it is the fact that for some reason or other he did leave. Lopez, who was his secretary, remained behind. I should not have coupled Lopez with him in saying, as I did, that Agoncillo and Lopez left at that time.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator made this mistake: Lopez would have left if he could.

Mr. FORAKER. He would have left if it had not been for a sick companion, on account of whom he was bound to remain behind. There is no question—I will have it looked up; I have sent already to have it looked up—that in all the papers it was published that he had fled from here in that way. He left before anybody here knew there was any conflict on at Manila. That is the point to it all. He left before the fighting commenced. That is my recollection about it very distinctly. I will look it up, though, and whatever is the exact truth, as reported in the papers, I will take pleasure in stating.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am glad the Senator is going to look it up. Those two extracts were handed to me by a gentleman this morning who told me he had taken them from the files of the Washington Post last night, of the dates that appear upon the extracts, and I have no doubt in the world he speaks the truth.

Mr. FORAKER. One of the extracts is of date the 5th, the day after the fighting commenced, and it shows that Agoncillo had left.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh——

Mr. FORAKER. He was not here on Sunday, the 5th. Agoncillo was gone. They undertook to account for his absence by saying he had gone to Baltimore and intended to return, but he did not return, and went on and never stopped until he got to Canada.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator from Ohio says Agoncillo left on the 5th.

Mr. FORAKER. He left before the 5th. This article was published on the 5th. It is an interview given on the night before, in which they attempt to account for his absence from here.

THE TIME OF THE FEBRUARY 4 ATTACK.

Mr. RAWLINS. I rose simply to say that the notice of the commencement of hostilities was published in New York before 12 o'clock on Saturday, the 4th, and was telegraphed——

Mr. SPOONER. What was that statement?

Mr. PATTERSON. Gentlemen, I trust——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Colorado is not in it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin has a chip on his shoulder. However, go ahead; I am enjoying it.

Mr. SPOONER. No; not at all. What did the Senator from Utah say?

Mr. RAWLINS. I stated that the news of the commencement of the hostilities was published in New York before 12 o'clock on Saturday, the 4th.

Mr. SPOONER. I will say this to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know anything about the newspapers, but I know that the first intimation our Government had of the outbreak was at 5 minutes after 8 on the morning of the 5th of February.

Mr. RAWLINS. If——

Mr. PATTERSON. Just one moment. There is a great mistake upon both sides.

Mr. SPOONER. I——
Mr. PATTERSON. Let me suggest——
Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I think somebody ought to suggest.
Mr. PATTERSON. The Denver papers of Sunday morning, February 5, contained special dispatches from Washington which stated that shortly before midnight the President had received notice of an attack made upon the American lines by the Filipinos. So the Senator is mistaken when he says that the first intimation this country had of it was on 8 o'clock Sunday morning.
Mr. SPOONER. I am not.
Mr. PATTERSON. Well, now, let me state this. I think to a certain extent the Senator from Utah is in error. This is the fact about it: The news arrived here on Saturday just before midnight, but the news that got here on Saturday at midnight did not leave Manila until Sunday morning at 8 o'clock. It is by reason of the difference in time that that seeming contradiction arises. Dispatches that leave Manila one morning, say at 8 o'clock, will reach Washington midnight the night before, according to time.
Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I have here a dispatch from New York, published in the Morning Post of Sunday, February 5. I will read it, if the Senator has no objection.
Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.
Mr. RAWLINS. It is as follows:

[Special to the Washington Post.]

NEW YORK, February 5, 1899.

The New York World has a dispatch from Manila which says Aguinaldo and the insurgents attacked American outposts at Manila, but were successfully held at bay by the American forces. The attack, the dispatch says, was made at 8.30 o'clock Saturday night, and at 9 o'clock Sunday morning the firing is still continuing. The American vessels, Monadnock, Callao, and another, fired on the insurgents in aid of the American forces. Twenty Americans were wounded. As yet no fatalities are reported. American women and children were taken aboard the American war ships.

The dispatch adds that General Otis has the situation well in hand.

No confirmation of the World's dispatch had been received by the Associated Press or by any other New York papers up to 3 o'clock this morning. The story was telegraphed west shortly after midnight, and the Pittsburg Press and other papers printed extra editions. The Brooklyn Citizen also issued an extra containing the substance of the World's dispatch. All efforts to communicate with Manila after midnight were unavailing. It was asserted positively that no official messages had come over the wires.

Then follows these local comments:

The news of the alleged attack upon Manila by the insurgents reached Washington soon after 12 o'clock last night and was discredited because it had no official corroboration. At the White House, at 1 a. m., the President, who had been at work with his secretary, stated positively that no such news had been received from General Otis or Admiral Dewey.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator pardon me? What does the article say about Admiral Dewey?
Mr. RAWLINS. It says:

At the White House at 1 a. m. the President, who had been at work with his secretary, stated positively that no such news had been received from General Otis or Admiral Dewey.

Mr. SPOONER. When was that?
Mr. RAWLINS. That was 1 o'clock on Sunday morning.
Mr. SPOONER. One o'clock Sunday morning?
Mr. RAWLINS. The 5th.
Mr. SPOONER. The 5th?
Mr. RAWLINS. That was the 5th.
Mr. SPOONER. That was true.
Mr. RAWLINS. I will continue:

Adjutant-General Corbin left the War Department at 7 o'clock in the evening and did not return. Secretary Alger could not be reached at the time the news was received.

It was learned later that no official advices had been received over the wires from Manila the past twenty-four hours.

These last comments are made by the Washington Post of Sunday morning, the 5th. They reported the news as having reached New York at 12 o'clock Saturday night.
Mr. SPOONER. I want to say this——
Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?
Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. My recollection of the matter is that we had extras of the evening papers here some time between 9 and 12 o'clock giving the information.
Mr. SPOONER. What night?
Mr. TILLMAN. Saturday night. The difference in time being twelve hours, it had reached here. That is my recollection. I may be off.
Mr. SPOONER. You are off.
Mr. PATTERSON. Well, Mr. President, that we had news of the fighting in all of the Western papers in their Sunday morning issues there is no question.
Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——
Mr. PATTERSON. It struck me at first——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?
Mr. FORAKER. It is just to make an inquiry, so that I may not be mistaken. I understood the Senator from Utah to fix by the dispatch he read from the World that the receipt of the news was about 1 o'clock Sunday morning.
Mr. RAWLINS. No; it was about 12 o'clock Saturday night.
Mr. FORAKER. The article recited that here in Washington inquiries were being made at 1 o'clock Sunday morning.
Mr. RAWLINS. The news came here about 12 o'clock.
Mr. FORAKER. Saturday night?
Mr. RAWLINS. Well, Saturday night or Sunday morning.
Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I only wanted to make sure it was not Friday night. It was Saturday night. That is the only point I wanted to make sure of.
Mr. RAWLINS. It was Saturday night.
Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.
Mr. RAWLINS. But the news reached New York prior to 12 o'clock Saturday night.

WASHINGTON POST ARTICLES AGAIN.

Mr. FORAKER. I was wondering when the interviewer from whom the Senator from Colorado read in the Washington Post had interviewed Mr. Lopez. He did not interview him until after the news came. That was Saturday night, and Agoncillo had already gone.
Mr. PATTERSON. He interviewed Lopez and three or four others of the junta on the 7th.
Mr. FORAKER. There were two others on the 7th.
Mr. PATTERSON. I am not claiming to be mathematically correct, but then I am nearer correct than the Senator was last night.
Mr. FORAKER. No; I was mistaken only to this extent, that I included Lopez with Agoncillo. Now I think we have it straightened out.
Mr. PATTERSON. The way the Senator from Ohio impressed me yesterday was that the representatives of the Filipino junta here in Washington, Sixto Lopez, Agoncillo, and Luna, had fled the country in anticipation of this struggle. Now it turns out——
Mr. FORAKER rose.
Mr. PATTERSON. I trust the Senator from Ohio will allow me to finish one sentence. It turns out now that Agoncillo, according to the newspaper reports and the statement of Lopez or some other of the junta, had gone, but apparently he went before——
Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——
Mr. PATTERSON. I must insist on being permitted to finish one sentence. I will not ask to finish my speech, but to finish my sentence. It turns out that Lopez and two others at least of the junta were here, and continued here until after the 7th. I am quite unable to discriminate between Agoncillo and Lopez and the other two members of the junta. If one was in danger the other three were in danger, because they were all engaged in the same missionary work. I am perfectly satisfied if the Senator from Ohio had known as much about it as he does now, and if those facts are correct, as I believe they are, he would not have made the statement that he made last night.
Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?
Mr. PATTERSON. I do.
Mr. FORAKER. I rose simply for the purpose of qualifying the statement in this way, and I would be obliged to the Senator from Colorado if he will allow me to do it.
Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; I said I would yield as soon as I finished the sentence.
Mr. FORAKER. I would not ask to interrupt the Senator if it were not a personal matter. Agoncillo, as I understand it, was the real representative. Lopez was simply his secretary. The others were in still more subordinate positions. Three of them remained behind because of the illness of one, but Agoncillo, the representative, did leave, and the impression we all had at that time—I do not think there was any different opinion about it—was that he left because he had advance warning in some way what to do. That always seemed to me to be a controlling point in settling the question whether or not the Filipinos were intending to make a hostile attack on us.

THE CHANGE IN AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. PATTERSON. They were all members of the Filipino junta. There was no necessity for Agoncilla or any of the junta leaving, because it is one of the singular conditions that we find existing in the United States growing out of this unfortunate situation that men in the United States are free from arrest and interference by reason of any political views they entertain or express touching the relations and doings of this Government to the Philippines, while if those same gentlemen had been in the Philippines they would have been cast into prison under a system inaugurated by the Administration. We find Sixto Lopez.

nearly the ablest man of all the native advocates of Filipino independence here, practically making the United States his home, at all times asserting his loyalty to the cause of his country, while his three sons are in prison in the Philippine Islands, and, as the family maintained, kept in prison simply because they are members of the Lopez family and are in sympathy with the Filipino cause.

I say it is a most extraordinary condition, and one that members of the Senate five years ago did not think could possibly arise. It could never until now have been conceived that men could live in the United States in perfect safety from interference, protected by the Constitution, and when they went to the colonies they could be cast into prison for saying and doing what they did in the United States with impunity, and there was no agency in this great Government to relieve them. Our possessions! Our colonies! This one simple fact, Mr. President, discloses the tremendous change that has taken place in the institutions of this country since the controversy with Spain arose.

SENATOR SPOONER'S POSITION.

But, Mr. President, this controversy was put in between paragraphs of this splendid speech by my friend from Wisconsin. He said in the speech I before referred to:

> The jingle of words which we read every day about "hauling down the flag" does not in the least either thrill me or impress me. Our flag has been hauled down before, Mr. President. It will be hauled down again. Where we raise it we will permit no other power on earth to haul it down, but with us it may be as honorable to haul it down as it was to raise it. It was hauled down in Mexico when hostilities ended there. If we had sent our fleet across the sea to the peninsula of Spain and captured Barcelona, raising our flag above it, it would not have been there to stay; we would have hauled it down.
>
> * * * * * * * * *
>
> It is insisted that we must have permanent territorial expansion in order to extend our trade.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that all I said?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. SPOONER. I said something about the flag in Cuba.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator said "to-day it floats in Cuba."

Mr. SPOONER. Why did not the Senator read that?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will read it. The Senator said:

> To-day it floats in Cuba; the Spanish flag has gone forever, but our flag is not there to stay. It floats there in sight of the poor, wrecked Maine at Habana, but there will come a day, Mr. President—and I hope it will not be long—when we will take down our flag, raised there in the cause of liberty, and leave behind it liberty and an independent government, won and established under its folds. I hope that, too, about the Philippines, and that is not at all inconsistent in my view with the ratification of the pending treaty.

I suppose the Senator from Wisconsin still entertains those views?

Mr. SPOONER. Is that intended to be a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I depart in no wise whatever from what I there stated, nor have I ever departed at all from what I there stated.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now I will read this paragraph to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin:

> It is insisted that we must have permanent territorial expansion in order to extend our trade. Mr. President, I do not think so. I have been strongly inclined to think that in the long run, with all the embarrassments and complications and dangers it will bring upon our people, it will retard rather than develop the foreign trade of the United States. We have been growing rapidly in our trade without territorial expansion. To acquire distant, non-assimilable peoples in order, through permanent dominion, to force our trade upon them seems to me to be the poorest imaginable national policy. How far will that be carried? We want the trade of the world, and we intend to have our share of it. Are we, therefore, to obtain it by carrying this doctrine of expansion to the uttermost parts of the earth? If territorial expansion means national trade, if it be necessary to national trade, where are we to stop?
>
> I think, Mr. President, the trade of the world will go where its interest leads it in the long run, and the best avant-courier of civilization is a merchant ship carrying the products of civilization and teaching the wants of civilization.

Does the Senator from Wisconsin still entertain those views?

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Colorado adopt that?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do. Does the Senator from Wisconsin still entertain those views?

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is just about as good a speech as the Senator from Colorado ever made. I have never departed at all from it, nor do I now.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I recall listening to a songstress, the most beautiful voice that ever fell upon my ears, but when I looked at the artist the ecstacy was gone, for she was both colored and homely. I could close my eyes and enjoy the music. It was ecstatic and blissful. When the Senator from Wisconsin was making this speech I might have shut my eyes, and if I had not known his voice I would have believed that the most ardent Democratic opponent of territorial expension was engaged in pleading the case of the downtrodden Filipino.

Mr. SPOONER. It is important for the Senator to pay some regard to circumstances. When I was making that speech the Senator was writing editorials.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Wisconsin is mistaken. The Senator from Colorado had ceased writing editorials of the kind he refers to two months before. The Senator from Ohio and I fought that out yesterday. The Senator from Wisconsin was right on this great question and I had been wrong, and I want to say right now that I believe with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the gravest mistake this country ever committed was when that treaty was ratified. Probably if I had been in the Senate, with my views, I would have voted for it; but, Mr. President, experience is a school in which all men learn lessons that never can be forgotten. I am free to say now that to have originally entertained the views of the senior Senator from Massachusetts upon this gravest of all questions and to have maintained them at all times as stoutly and consistently as he has would be, in my estimation, a crown of greater glory than is the crown vouchsafed to the elect in the world beyond.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked me as I rose not to contradict that statement, and I will not do so publicly; but the Senator commends my song and also delivers himself upon my color and my ugliness. I am still of the same color and I am still as homely as I was then.

Mr. PATTERSON. The reference to looks had reference to political aspects.

Mr. SPOONER. But I still sing the same song. I have never yet found it necessary to withdraw one word of what I said in that speech. Senators on the other side read it over and over and over again; the oftener I hear it the better I like it, and I have not departed from it, while the Senator from Colorado has gone far, far afield from his editorials.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SENATORS.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the difference, I think, between the Senator from Colorado and the Senators from Wisconsin and Ohio is simply this, that finding out my error I frankly admit it. The two Senators I refer to, finding out their error, do not admit it. They are fighting against the logic of their own language. They are struggling against the noblest convictions they ever expressed upon the floor of the Senate. They, in effect, say, "We once stood for the principles of the Declaration of Independence, for the independence of the Filipinos; we once maintained that all just powers are derived by governments from the consent of the governed; but now, instead of maintaining those eternal truths, we stand for the very opposite, and we strive to convince ourselves and the public that we have not changed."

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator ever read the Declaration of Independence until after he had written those editorials, or did he never understand it until after?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I think that a question of that kind is hardly worthy of the Senator from Wisconsin. If he had been here yesterday he would have learned what I had to say upon that subject, and if it would not have satisfied him it would simply have been the fault of the speaker.

But, Mr. President, on the 22d of May, 1900, the Senator from Wisconsin made another speech.

SENATOR SPOONER'S 22D OF MAY SPEECH.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question before he passes? What regenerated the Senator from Colorado? What light was it that led him to reason?

Mr. PATTERSON. It was not the light that fell upon Governor Taft.

Mr. SPOONER. It was the light that fell upon non-President Bryan, was it not?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, at the time I changed there was no election on hand.

Mr. SPOONER. There was going to be.

Mr. PATTERSON. There was not. It was in the latter part of November, 1898. The fall elections were over. I had fought the campaign in the State of Colorado upon the line found in the editorials read by the Senator from Ohio. After that election was over, when we were two years away from another election, and when there was no President to apply to for patronage or otherwise, calmly and deliberately I changed my views, and so announced it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator there——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will have to, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. In the latter part of November, or not later than the 2d day of December, 1898——

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; the 2d day of December, 1898.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator to say yesterday (and I say this for the benefit of the Senator from Wisconsin, who was not in the Chamber at the time) the Senator announced that never after the 2d day of December, 1898, was there ever published in his newspaper or uttered by him any expression that even pointed in the direction of the editorials that I read, and that he stated in the face of the editorials appearing therein in February, in connection with the breaking out of hostilities, which I did read. If the Senator said——

Mr. PATTERSON. What I said is in the RECORD. I am a little astonished that the Senator from Ohio would make a statement of that kind in view of the controversy that occurred yesterday. My statements, in substance, were that while I did not in anywise change my attitude in favor of the independence of the Philippines after November 1, 1898, yet, in view of the false reports that were made charging that the Filipinos had wantonly made an attack upon the American army on the night of February 4, honor required that the American army should not be driven out.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know what it is that the Senator takes exception to in my statement. I had before me the stenographer's official report of the remarks that were made yesterday, and I was quoting his exact language as nearly as I could recall it as appearing in the official report made by the stenographer when I said that he did not, according to his statement, after December 2, publish anything in his paper that pointed in the direction of the editorials that I read.

Mr. PATTERSON. The RECORD was made up last night, and it is going to stand just as it was made up.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course it will stand just as it was made up. I suppose I have a right, inasmuch as we have a RECORD, to avail myself of it and to make use of it.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Ohio will admit——

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know what it is that the Senator took such exception to in the remark I made.

Mr. PATTERSON. We fought that out yesterday afternoon.

Mr. FORAKER. No; this is new matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. I believe this is really uninteresting to the Senate, and I do not want to dwell upon it too long.

Mr. FORAKER. But the Senator expressed surprise that I should have made the remark I did in view of what occurred yesterday, and I do not know what it was in my remark which surprised the Senator. I was quoting his own language as nearly as I could. But out of deference to the Senator's desire, I do not want to interrupt him unnecessarily. I will wait until after the conclusion of his remarks, when I can take it up.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, he said something about his former opinion. I would not want the Senator to think——

Mr. PATTERSON. That simply had reference to myself.

Mr. SPOONER. I know; but I would not want the Senator to think that I thought or suggested that any change of opinion against him was influenced by anything like that. I do not mean that or intend to suggest it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no.

THE COUNTRY NOT IN THE MISSIONARY FIELD.

Now, Mr. President, we have heard a great deal in support of this measure along this line, that in the cause of humanity we will stay in the Philippines; that we have a great work of regeneration to do there; that we should be in the attitude of missionaries bearing the burdens of the Filipinos upon our shoulders until by our teaching and example they have risen to the stature that fits them for independence. The Senator from Wisconsin had something to say about that on the 29th of February, 1900. It was this:

I suppose, Mr. President, it will be admitted that had there been no war with Spain and she had tendered to us "without money and without price" a cession of the Philippine Archipelago and a treaty accepting that cession had been transmitted to the Senate for its action, it would have received hardly a vote in this body, and would have proved entirely unattractive to the great body of our people. The suggestion in advocacy of it that we are "trustees" to lead the nations of the earth in the work of civilization could not have been at all persuasive.

The quick and sufficient answer to that would have been that while this is a missionary people, this is not and can not become a missionary government, and that it is not our function, philanthropic as we may be and as this people is, that their Government shall police the world, seeking for people oppressed, living in the darkness of ignorance and half civilization, in order to uplift them.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. In order to obviate the necessity of the Senator entering into any argument upon that, I will state to the Senator that I have never departed from it in the slightest degree, nor do I now.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then, Mr. President, we have this very peculiar picture presented. The Republicans of this Chamber are supporting measures that have for their object the taking away every vestige of independence and self-government from the Filipino people, the enactment of tariff and internal-revenue laws without their consent, proposing to sell their lands and to plaster their country with taxes, and to sell and dispose of all their franchises, and to burden their cities with millions upon millions of gold interest-bearing bonds; yet the Senator from Wisconsin, who is opposed to everything of that kind, is the one selected (and it is a great compliment to the Senator from Wisconsin) to champion those measures and through his great intellect rally the weak-kneed Republicans to their support.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. That is an imputation upon me that I do not think the Senator ought to indulge in.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, I did not intend it as an imputation.

Mr. SPOONER. I have never been selected by anybody to advocate any proposition. I am not without some criticism of the bill which is presented by the majority of the committee. In due time I will say what I have to say about that, but I would not want the Senator or anyone else to think that I act here by dictation or selection from anyone. I do not.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, that would be utterly impossible.

If what the Senator were to do was not congenial, he would not say it under any circumstances. I undertake to say that every speech he has made and every attitude that he has assumed is entirely congenial to his views and desires. But what I said was that it presented a very unusual situation to have—I will not say the Senator from Wisconsin selected—but to have affairs so ordered, or the majority of the Senate so order affairs, as that whenever questions of this kind come up in the Senate the Senator from Wisconsin brings up the rear and strengthens the cause of the majority by his logic and eloquence. And yet, Mr. President, taking the Senator from Wisconsin at his word, and no one would dispute it, he is distinctly opposed in this Philippine matter to everything that the great majority of his Republican colleagues insist upon.

THE MORAL RESPONSIBILITY.

Now, Mr. President, we will pass from that. I want to take up other features of this controversy to discover, if we can, if there is a great moral responsibility resting upon the American people in dealing with the Filipinos. I take it that, if it is true that before Admiral Dewey went to the bay of Manila to attack the Spanish fleet he sought the assistance of Aguinaldo, and after he destroyed the fleet that Aguinaldo was brought there upon an American war vessel, and at the suggestion of Admiral Dewey he landed at Cavite, raised the Filipino standard, and called beneath its folds Filipino patriots to fight the battle of liberty for the Filipinos as against the Spaniards, and if they played their part well and valiantly, if they did practically all the fighting that was done upon the land; if it were the Filipino forces with the aid of the fleet in the bay that hemmed in and ultimately forced the Spanish troops to surrender—if they did that without pay, if they did it expecting to achieve the independence of their archipelago as compensation for their valor and sacrifices, and if they did nothing thereafter to forfeit the right they thus acquired, it seems to me that, independently of the Declaration of Independence and the basic principles of the American Government, there is a moral obligation resting upon the American people to see that they are granted their independence.

THE QUESTION SHOULD BE CONSIDERED IN CHURCHS AND UNIVERSITIES.

This is a question, Mr. President, that should find discussion in every pulpit and in all our colleges and universities. Men who are moved by a high moral standard of public duty should take the question into serious consideration and use their great powers toward having justice done by the country. There is no longer any dispute upon the things I suggested. Aguinaldo was brought to Manila upon an American war vessel. Aguinaldo did land at Cavite at the request of the American commodore; he did raise the Filipino flag; he did purchase arms with money belonging to the Filipino people, and some arms were furnished to him by the American admiral; he did surround the Spanish forces; he fought many battles. The Filipino troops captured more than 4,000 prisoners, and when the first American soldiers arrived in Manila Bay they found the Spaniards completely hemmed in by Filipino earthworks. The supply of water for the Spanish army had long before that time been cut off, and by Filipino valor the Spanish army was compelled to resort to the use of horeflesh for sustenance.

That being the case, what occurred after the American troops reached Manila? I ask the Senate whether Aguinaldo was upon the muster roll of the War Department; whether any Filipino general held a commission from the United States, or whether any Filipino soldier received a dollar in payment of the services he rendered? On the contrary, Mr. President, they were there as an independent army, supplying their own commissary, and looking for compensation only through independence after, as allies of the United States, they had done their share in conquering their common foe. Have they done anything to forfeit that compensation? Through death and wounds and the fire and smoke of battle they did their share of the work that had to be done to conquer the land forces of Spain in the islands.

THE SURRENDER OF MANILA.

Mr. President, it is a fact now beyond dispute that had it not been for an agreement between General Merritt and the Spanish commander the Filipino army would have been in the very thick and front of the assault that would have been necessary for the capture of Manila. The American line extended from the shore but three quarters of a mile inland. The Filipino line was more than 7 miles in length, extending to the shore end north of the city.

That there may be no mistake about the fact I assert, that the city of Manila was practically surrendered without a fight under an agreement between the American commanders upon the one side and the general in command of the Spanish forces upon the other, I will read from the current history of those times. I have here notes from the diary of Mr. Edouard Andre, who at the time was the Belgian consul at Manila, and who was the medium of communication between the officers to the compact by which Manila was surrendered without a serious fight. The article appeared in McClure's Magazine for the month of June, 1899, and concludes as follows:

It will be remembered that the attack consisted simply of firing a few shells at the old fort at Malate—

Speaking of the apparent attack made upon the city of Manila on the 13th day of August, 1898—and that none of the city guns or of the Luneta guns fired a shot at our ships. The thoroughness of our fire can be understood from the fact that on the Raleigh the ranges were given at the start by the captain himself as 7,000 yards, but after a few shots had been fired, although the ship had not changed position materially, one of the gun captains found the range to be 1,700 yards.

In other words, the range of the guns, by order of the commander of the fleet, was placed at 7,000 yards, in order that the shots might not be effective and might fall beyond the city of Manila.

He had just passed the word along to the other guns in that battery when the captain ordered the bugle to sound, "Cease firing."

After the shelling was over André saw his recall go up on the Olympia and steamed back to the flagship, where he found Mr. Brumby and Lieutenant-Colonel Whittier, who represented General Merritt, and took them into the city. According to the arrangement the signal had been set on the Olympia and the white flag had been flown above the city. In response also to the signal from the Olympia the Spaniards had flown a signal expressing their desire to have a conference; and it was to this conference that Mr. Brumby and Colonel Whittier went in. At the conference the preliminary terms of the surrender were settled, which afterward were extended and ratified. This is the real story of the surrender of Manila.

I also read a short extract from an article which was published in the Century Magazine for April, 1899, written by Mr. John T. McCutcheon upon the same subject. He said:

Even then, when the gallant Colorado troops were tearing along through the surf in open view of the fort, with the band at their heels playing "A hot time in the old town," there came no sound of Spanish cannons. It was then thought that the guns of the fort had been disabled. The soldiers were seen to scale the enemy's embankments, and at 5 minutes to 11 a storm of cheers swept along the decks of the Olympia as the Spanish flag fluttered down and the Stars and Stripes went up in its stead.

This marked the beginning of the end. The fort had succumbed after only a meager resistance, and the troops could be seen advancing along the beach toward the walled city and along the road between Fort San Antonio and the suburbs of Malate.

Captain Lamberton turned his glasses on the walled city, and said, reflectively, "They were to raise a white flag on the southeast corner, but I don't see it yet." The Admiral said that it had been there for some time, and by close observation it was discovered at the appointed place, and had evidently been raised according to programme and at the proper moment. This was part of the agreement. The Spaniards would not give up the city without a theatrical show of resistance, which could be reported to Madrid, but they had arranged to fly a white flag when the Malate fort was taken. In the meantime it was tacitly understood that the guns of the fleet should not be turned on the walled city, and that the guns of Manila should not be turned on the Americans.

According to the testimony of General Otis, the night before our troops marched into Manila Aguinaldo was informed for the first time that the so-called fight to occur the next day would be exclusively between the Spaniards and Americans. That was a part of the agreement reached between the Americans and the Spaniards, and it was made because the Spaniards hated Aguinaldo far more than they did the Americans. The Spaniards had felt the strength of his arms, they had lost thousands of prisoners to him, he had beseiged them for nearly three long months, and they determined to deprive him, if they could, of all glory in a surrender in which he had a right to participate if anyone in the islands had.

WHAT OTIS SAID TO AGUINALDO.

Mr. President, after Manila surrendered, for a period of about a month the Filipinos held the lines that they occupied at the time of the surrender. Then a correspondence occurred between Aguinaldo on the one side and General Merritt upon the other. Aguinaldo's letter was written to Merritt, but it was answered by General Otis. It was in response to a demand previously made by General Merritt that Aguinaldo should retire with his troops from a part of the line the Filipinos had themselves constructed and held before Manila surrendered. The correspondence is very significant as showing the esteem in which Aguinaldo was held by General Otis, the sacrifices he had made, and the views of General Otis about the part the troops of the respective countries were to play. This letter was written to General Merritt by Aguinaldo in response to Merritt's demand that Aguinaldo should remove his forces from a section of his own intrenchments. In the letter Aguinaldo said:

If I have permitted the use of the waters before the promulgation of the treaty, it was more to demonstrate that I am disposed to sacrifice to friendship everything that does not prejudice too much the rights of the Philippines. I comprehend, as well as yourself, the inconvenience of a dual occupation of the city of Manila and its suburbs, given in the conditions stipulated in the capitulation with the Spaniards; but you ought to understand that without the long siege sustained by my forces you might have obtained possession of the ruins of the city, but never the rendition of the Spanish forces, who could have retired to the interior towns.

Then, again:

But before I retire to this line I pray you to reclaim from Admiral Dewey the protection of our ships for free navigation, and permit me to insist, if you will, upon the restitution of the positions that we now are going to leave, if in the treaty of peace to be celebrated between Spain and the United States they acknowledge the dominion of Spain in the Philippines. I expect as well that you order the American forces outside of above line to retire within the city, as already agreed to.

OTIS ACKNOWLEDGES THAT THE FILIPINOS FOUGHT FOR CIVIL LIBERTY.

I have read so much of Aguinaldo's letter to call attention to the letter that was written by General Otis in reply. General Otis writes to Aguinaldo on the 8th of September, nearly a month after the American troops took possession of Manila, in which letter the following recognition of the Filipino's great services are acknowledged:

Second. I note with pleasure your allusion to your very friendly disposition toward my Government, as manifested by your prompt attendance to our request for a supply of water; also your expression as to the inconvenience of the dual occupation of the city of Manila, and I do not forget that the revolutionary forces under your command have made many sacrifices in the interests of civil liberty and for the welfare of your people, and to this I will be pleased to allude hereafter.

"Sacrifices in the interests of civil liberty!" Whose civil liberty? Not that of the inhabitants of the United States. Their civil liberty was not even in danger. It was the civil liberty for which Aguinaldo raised his army and for which that army fought the common Spanish foe. General Otis thus officially recognizes the claims and hopes of the Filipinos when they took up arms and the United States cooperated with them in driving the Spaniards from the islands.

Again, in this letter he said, and he was the American commander at that time:

It is well known—

Referring to the Filipinos—

It is well known they have made personal sacrifices, endured great hardships, and have rendered aid. But is it forgotten that my Government has swept the Spanish navy from the seas of both hemispheres; sent back to Spain the Spanish army and navy forces recently embarked for your destruction and the secure holding of the Philippine possessions; that since May 1 last its navy has held the city of Manila at its mercy, but out of consideration of humanity refused to bombard it, preferring to send troops to demand surrender, and thereby preserve the lives and property of the inhabitants? Is it forgotten that the destruction of the Spanish navy and the retention of Spanish armed men in its European possessions has opened up to you the ports of the island of Luzon and held Spain helpless to meet its refractory subjects?

GENERAL OTIS DECLARES AGAINST SUBJUGATION.

And, again, in this letter of September 8 is a most extraordinary statement, and I call the attention of the Senate to it, because it discloses that at that time General Otis had no conception that it was the purpose of the United States to hold the islands and the waters of the archipelago against the will of the Filipinos. Mark his language:

Rather than see the ships of the Navy of the United States controlling the navigable waters of these islands and its Army devastating their territory, I would greatly prefer to advise my Government that there is no longer need to send more of its troops to this section of the country, and that those whom it holds waiting on its Pacific slope can be remanded to their homes or employed elsewhere, as it may determine.

Most significant language, Mr. President, coming from the general of the American forces one month after they had taken possession of Manila.

I have shown that on the 15th of September, in response to a demand from General Merritt, Aguinaldo retired, as he was requested to do, from the lines he had before occupied; but that was not enough. In October another demand was made upon Aguinaldo to retire still farther, and at that time it was disclosed that while the United States troops were entitled under the protocol to hold only the harbor, the bay, and the city of Manila, Aguinaldo and his forces were required to retire beyond the line that the American officers could not and did not at that time say was within the city. I turn to Major-General Otis's report, where, on page 15, he says:

In a former portion of this report I stated the fact that the insurgent authorities had received permission to continue in occupancy of certain suburbs of the city for a short time, when they, on September 15, withdrew their troops from its interior portions. They did not subsequently remove their troops in accordance with agreement, but appeared to be determined to retain Paco and Pandacan, as they believed them to be advantageous military positions, south of the Pasig River. The assertion was made and became current that these suburbs were not within the jurisdiction of Manila, and it became advisable to make search and survey to gain desired information on that point. These were made by Lieutenant-Colonel Potter, chief engineer of the corps.

The survey showed that the city had never been correctly mapped, especially as concerned the trend of the Pasig River and the lines of outlying districts. The best opinion did not consider the suburbs still occupied by the insurgent troops beyond city limits, but no decree could be found which fixed their political status.

Thus it is seen that General Otis had to make resurveys and run new lines to find grounds upon which to command Aguinaldo's further withdrawal.

That was not all, Mr. President. They made a third demand upon Aguinaldo to retire just immediately before the attack of February 4. I can not now find the reference to it, but I hope to do so later.

SKILL AND BRAVERY OF THE FILIPINOS.

I desire to read, in this connection, General MacArthur's testimony of the situation in and about Manila when he reached there in June, 1898. This was nearly two months before Manila was taken. General MacArthur was asked this question:

Senator PATTERSON. So that you found when you got there the American fleet in the bay?

General MACARTHUR. Yes.

Senator PATTERSON. On the water front in Manila; and the Filipino army, whatever its size, in trenches and intrenched themselves on the land side, besieging the Spanish forces within the city?

General MACARTHUR. That is correct.

Senator PATTERSON. That was the situation?

General MACARTHUR. That was the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. There were American troops there before you got there, were there not?

General MACARTHUR. There were American troops there, yes. General Anderson and General Greene had preceded me with a command that amounted to about 6,000 men.

Senator PATTERSON. When had they arrived there?

General MACARTHUR. Some two or three weeks earlier, I think; some time in July.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were you posted?

General MACARTHUR. Part in Cavite and part in the neighborhood of Parañaque.

Senator PATTERSON. They are all south of the Pasig River?

General MACARTHUR. All south of the Pasig River; yes.

Senator PATTERSON. And they occupied comparatively a very small front facing the Spaniards?

General MACARTHUR. The Americans, you mean?

Senator PATTERSON. Yes; the Americans.

General MACARTHUR. A very small front; yes.

Senator PATTERSON. When you got there did the American front opposing the Spaniards extend more than from a quarter to half a mile from the water front?

General MACARTHUR. A little more than that.

Senator PATTERSON. Between that and three-quarters of a mile?

General MACARTHUR. It was less than a mile, and I should say less than three-quarters of a mile.

Senator PATTERSON. What was the length of the Filipino line?

General MACARTHUR. They extended from our right to the town of Malabon, on the bay.

Senator PATTERSON. That was what distance?

General MACARTHUR. I should say that was, in round numbers, 7 miles. That is all a matter of easy reference on the map.

Senator PATTERSON. I understand that. We have simply to approach it; we can not stop for close details; we want to get it as nearly correct as we can, however. So when you got there the latter part of July, which was about two weeks before you occupied the city, I believe——

General MACARTHUR. Almost exactly. I got in the bay on the 31st of July and marched into Manila on the 13th of August.

Senator PATTERSON (continuing). You found the American lines extending about three-quarters of a mile fronting the besieged Spaniards, and you found the Filipino lines extending for about 7 miles fronting the besieged Spaniards. That is correct, is it?

General MACARTHUR. That is correct; yes.

Senator PATTERSON. What was the state of amity and friendship at that time existing between the Americans and the Filipino forces?

General MACARTHUR. It seemed to me very good.

Senator PATTERSON. In what way were you met by the Filipinos generally?

General MACARTHUR. Cordially, as far as I was individually concerned.

Senator PATTERSON. And the American soldiers?

General MACARTHUR. Apparently with cordiality.

Senator PATTERSON. Did they not regard you and treat you as deliverers?

General MACARTHUR. They looked upon us somewhat in that light, I thought.

That was the frame of mind of the Filipinos at that time, and those were the attitudes of the respective armies.

Mr. President, upon the subject of the number of Spanish prisoners that had been captured by the Filipinos at the time the American Army reached Manila I read the following from the testimony of General MacArthur:

Senator PATTERSON. How many Spanish soldiers had the Filipinos captured up to the time you got there?

General MACARTHUR. That I can only answer as an historical fact; but offhand I would say something more than 3,000.

Senator PATTERSON. They had captured those in their war operations?

General MACARTHUR. As I understand it; yes.

Senator PATTERSON. Spanish soldiers with Spanish arms?

General MACARTHUR. Yes.

Senator PATTERSON. Did you discover or learn how the Filipinos were treating those Spanish prisoners?

General MACARTHUR. I did not see them.

Senator PATTERSON. But as an historical fact, learned on the ground after you got there, General, what was the general repute through the Army at that time of the manner in which the Filipinos were treating these 3,000 Spanish soldiers?

General MACARTHUR. The rumor that passed through the Army was to the effect that Aguinaldo was treating them rather harshly; that his supplies were inadequate anyway, and the Spanish prisoners were suffering in consequence of short rations. General Anderson can tell you all about that, because he was in contact with them.

It is pretty difficult, Mr. President, to comprehend more marked, valuable, and important services that could be rendered by any ally than those that were rendered the United States in its war with Spain by the Filipinos up to the time the attack of the 4th of February was made.

THE PRESIDENT'S DECLARATION OF WAR.

In connection with what I previously said about the attack of February 4 I will read an extract from the proclamation of President McKinley, which shows that it was no less than a declaration of war and could only be considered such by the Filipino forces. It is as follows:

In fulfillment of the rights of sovereignty thus acquired and the responsible obligations of government thus assumed the actual occupation and administration of the entire group of the Philippine Islands become immediately necessary, and the military government heretofore maintained by the United States in the city, harbor, and bay of Manila is to be extended with all possible dispatch to the whole of the ceded territory.

There is no misunderstanding that language, and that the American officers understood it to be a declaration of war it is only necessary to refer to General Hughes's testimony. I will not take time to find his exact language, but this question was propounded in substance to General Hughes, and this was his answer—if I misstate it, the majority members of the committee will correct me: "What did you understand by this proclamation of the President?" And the exact language I have just quoted was read to him. He said, "I understood it to mean what it said." Then he was asked if the Filipinos did not retire in response to its demands and permit him to obtain possession and to exercise the sovereignty of the United States over the country they occupied what he would have been compelled to do. He said, "I would have been compelled to use force."

There is the proclamation of the President; there is the understanding of that proclamation by the generals in command in the Philippines, and I ask again in what attitude would the United States have been placed and in what attitude would the President of the United States have been placed when, having made this proclamation and having commanded the American officers to sweep away all opposition and secure possession of the entire archipelago, the treaty should not have been ratified? It is perfectly plain that there was an overwhelming necessity for the ratification of the treaty. Having taken these steps wholly without right, for the treaty had not at the time been ratified by either party to it, it might be expected that the politicians who had determined to annex the Philippines at every hazard would do anything, however desperate, to succeed.

FIRING UPON THE PATROL.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator claim that the sentry had no right to fire upon the patrol which presented itself to him?

Mr. PATTERSON. No; I would not say that, but I would say there was no necessity to do so. Very clearly there was no danger to be apprehended from the patrol squad of four men going from the blockhouse at half past 8 in the evening over to the little village that the Filipinos had evacuated but the day before. Since Filipinos only had been killed and no Americans had been as much as wounded, if the desire on the part of the Americans had not been to force a fight, instead of ordering with daylight the entire American line to advance, with the terrible slaughter that followed, some effort would have been made to smooth over whatever misapprehension existed. It was as clear to the American officers then as it was afterwards that it was not the purpose of the Filipinos to attack.

I put it to the Senator from Wisconsin whether, in the face of these undisputed facts, if General Otis had desired to maintain peace and to prevent war, he would not when daylight came have sought to reconcile the very simple matter instead or ordering an advance which resulted in the death and wounding of 3,000 Filipino soldiers and of about 250 Americans. Would not some effort have been made to discover what was the real cause of the trouble of the night before?

No, Mr. President; this treaty was hanging in the balance. Two votes were yet required for its ratification. Somebody well understood American temper, the mental attitude of American Senators, and the mental susceptibility of the American people. Someone knew that if there should be an attack and it could be made to appear that the attack was made upon the American Army by the Filipino army public sentiment would force enough Senators who were opposed to the treaty to vote for its ratification.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it is the Senator's statement that it was not a Filipino outbreak, but one which was provoked and brought on by the American authorities in order to influence the ratification of the treaty. Is that the Senator's statement?

Mr. PATTERSON. The undisputed testimony is that it was not a Filipino outbreak, and I infer that the object of forcing a fight was to influence the Senate on the treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. But is that the Senator's statement?

FILIPINOS HAD EVERYTHING TO LOSE.

Mr. PATTERSON. My statement is that that is the inference I draw from the situation and from the things that transpired. The Filipinos were not ready to attack. The American officers all admit that it was not the Filipinos' purpose to attack. The Filipinos had nothing to gain by an attack. They were yet waiting and hoping, Mr. President, that the Senate of the United States would not ratify a treaty by which the sovereignty that had been Spain's would be transferred to the United States.

They were yet hoping and praying and waiting for the treaty to be rejected, so that when there was an amended treaty the provisions of the treaty concerning the Philippines would be similar to those that were in the treaty concerning Cuba. In an attack at that time the Filipinos had everything to lose and nothing to gain, and those whose interest it was to secure the ratification of the treaty had everything to gain and nothing to lose by forcing a battle at that time.

From Hongkong, on the 6th of February, this dispatch was published in the Washington papers:

The Filipino junta here has issued a statement setting forth that the fighting at Manila was designed to influence the vote in the United States Senate to-day on the peace treaty.

Aguinaldo and all the Filipino soldiers declared that the attack was commenced by the American Army. There was, in fact, nothing that could be magnified or dignified into an attack until the American forces were ordered to advance on the morning of the 5th of February.

That course, Mr. President, is in keeping with the bad faith which has been manifested upon the part of the Administration toward the Filipino patriots from the time they first set foot in the Philippine Islands in aid of Admiral Dewey until this very hour, when the war of subjugation is yet going on.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. RAWLINS. May I invite the attention of the Senator from Colorado in this connection to what General Otis says on page 96 of his report? He uses this language:

The engagement was one strictly defensive on the part of the insurgents and of vigorous attack by our forces, although during the night it was confined to an exchange of fire between the opposing lines on the north from the Pasig River to the Lico road, a distance of about 2 miles, with an occasional shot on the south, in the vicinity of Paco, and a few straggling shots on the extreme left, in the direction of Caloocan.

Mr. PATTERSON. There is no room to question that that is the truth of history.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado why he omits from his extremely interesting historical statement the fact that Aguinaldo, on the 9th of January, had issued a very elaborate order for an attack by his troops upon Manila, including an uprising in the city, and why, on the 7th day of January, he wrote to Legardo, advising him to leave the city with his family, saying that the hour of the day was not fixed, but he substantially advised him as a friend to leave the city?

Mr. PATTERSON. As to whether or not the particular order mentioned by the Senator from Wisconsin was issued is questioned. Certainly there was no such attack made or attempted.

Mr. SPOONER. Not a bit.

Mr. PATTERSON. I beg your pardon.

Mr. SPOONER. Except by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. The statement is now made, and is a part of the unquestioned history, that the proclamation to which he refers was withdrawn and the one that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] referred to was issued in its place almost immediately after the first was issued.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not referring to any proclamation which was withdrawn. I am referring to an order in Aguinaldo's handwriting, issued on the 9th of January, for an attack upon Manila the 9th of January—a 2,000-word order—including an uprising in Manila. Does the Senator say that it was withdrawn?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not believe any such order was issued at that time. That is what I say. May I ask why, if such an order was issued in January, 1899, we have no account of any action being taken under it?

THE FORGING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is like all the rest of these people. They believe everything that tells against the honor of the United States and the Army of the United States and nothing that tells for it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Do they?

Mr. SPOONER. I think so.

Mr. PATTERSON. Ah, let us see, Mr. President. Upon a par with the proclamation the Senator from Wisconsin refers to is a document printed by order of the Senate, coming from the War Department, which purports to set forth a photographic copy of an order issued by General Luna for an uprising in Manila and the slaughter of all foreigners within its limits. General MacArthur is referred to in the communication of the Secretary of War as having been connected with the bringing to light of that alleged Luna proclamation.

When General MacArthur was upon the stand before the committee I took the very documents that constitute the communication of the Secretary of War and read them to him one by one. I asked what he knew about it, and from the communications from other officers whose names had been mentioned what they could know about it. At the end I asked him: "General MacArthur, would you hang a yellow dog upon testimony of that kind?" And he replied: "That would depend upon the value of the dog."

No man can read that document sent to the Senate, published as authentic, and read the accompanying documents and analyze them without being convinced that it is a base forgery, sent to this country, communicated to the Senate, and used as a public document for the purpose of slandering the Filipino people and creating hatred in the hearts of Americans against them.

Mr SPOONER. I care nothing about these details. But is it not true that there was testimony before the committee that Aguinaldo examined the original and pronounced it the writing of General Luna?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Answer.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin not to be alarmed. I will answer him quite as fully as he desires. Somebody wrote a letter to the effect that he showed this letter to Aguinaldo, and Aguinaldo said he thought it was Luna's handwriting. But it will be borne in mind, Mr. President, that according to the authentic recital by General Funston of his capture of Aguinaldo he wrote a letter to Aguinaldo, purporting to be signed by one of Aguinaldo's best known and most trusted officers, and according to Funston's own testimony that was a base forgery concocted and carried out under his direction, and that Aguinaldo was completely deceived by it.

Mr. SPOONER. It often happens in time of war that men acting really in the capacity of spies forge passes in order to get within the enemy's lines. But does it follow, because the papers referred to as having been used by General Funston were forged, which is admitted, I understand, that this letter or order referred to was forged?

Mr. PATTERSON. Except just this far: There were documents before the Philippine Committee, sent from the War Department, which disclosed that forgery as a fine art among the Spaniards in the Philippines, was constantly invoked by them. If the Senator would read the document to which I refer—and he can obtain it by sending a page for it——

Mr. SPOONER. I have read it.

Mr. PATTERSON. And read the testimony in connection with it——

Mr. SPOONER. I have.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think he would answer, as General MacArthur did, that before he would hang a yellow dog upon such testimony he would want to know the value of the dog.

Mr. SPOONER. I have wandered through it all. Forgery may have been a fine art among the Spaniards, but the Senator is always insisting that it was a fine art among the Americans; that is, that General Funston——

Mr. PATTERSON. General Funston says that himself.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. He did not do the forging.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. PATTERSON. But General Funston got a Spaniard to do it for him.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator charge here that the order to which I have referred, of date January 9, alleged to have been issued by Aguinaldo, for an attack upon our Army and upon Manila, is a forgery?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I think. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. And my opinion is from reading the testimony and from hearing the testimony that no such order was issued. But let me call the Senator's attention——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator kindly refer me to the pages of the testimony—he is a member of the committee—where anybody challenges the issuance of this order by Aguinaldo?

Mr. PATTERSON. No one presented the order, so far as I have knowledge. It was never in discussion.

Mr. SPOONER. Therefore there is nothing in the evidence challenging its authenticity.

Mr. PATTERSON. But there is a vast amount of testimony that would go to show that such a thing is almost impossible.

Mr. SPOONER. Well.

Mr. PATTERSON. And then, again, as the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] well expressed it, the proclamation of December 21, which was made public in the Philippine Islands on or about the 4th of January, was in the nature of a declaration of war, and General Aguinaldo joined issue with it, stating in his own proclamation that it would be necessary for the Philippine patriots to defend their homes from their new and would-be oppressor.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I am asking for information only, and if it bothers the Senator I will not ask the question at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. Go ahead.

LETTER OF AGUINALDO TO LEGARDO.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there any evidence before the committee which leads anybody to challenge the authenticity of that letter alleged to have been written by Aguinaldo in person on the 7th of January to Legardo in Manila, advising him and his family to leave there, saying that the hour of the day was not fixed, but to leave there?

Mr. PATTERSON. I would not be at all astonished if a letter of that kind was written. And why should it not have been written?

Mr. SPOONER. Why should it have been?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will tell you, if you will give me an opportunity, and I know you will. The proclamation or declaration of war had been issued by the President. At that time it had become public.

Mr. SPOONER. It had not.

Mr. PATTERSON. On the 7th of January? Then the Senator from Wisconsin is not at all familiar with the history of those days in connection with the Philippine controversy. It was made public on the 4th of January, and almost immediately following General Aguinaldo notified the Filipino people that war was inevitable; that the United States had taken the place of Spain; that the United States was about to make war upon them for the purpose of exercising sovereignty and taking possession of their islands. He might well anticipate that the first trouble would come in and about Manila, where the lines of both armies were drawn and where any conflict, whenever it did come, was almost certain to rage.

There is no trouble about those matters, nor are the incidents on or about the 4th day of February longer in controversy. We do know that all the American generals stated under oath that the Filipinos did not expect to attack and were not ready to attack, that their officers were at Malolos, and the affair was brought to a crisis in the manner I have described.

THE MEASURES BEFORE THE SENATE.

It is my desire to discuss the two bills now before the Senate, and I desire to discuss them with some deliberation. Attention has not yet been given to their provisions quite so fully as their importance deserves. As was well said by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], for most of the provisions there is no existing necessity.

THE MAJORITY BILL.

The first section simply legalizes the acts of the President under the Commission. The second section provides for the jurisdiction of judges and the like. The third section approves certain orders of the President touching the matter of duties. The fourth declares that the inhabitants of the islands and their children shall be citizens of the Philippine Islands. The fifth provides for a census of the islands after there shall be a proclamation of peace by the President. The sixth provides for a report as to who are fit for the franchise. The seventh section provides that the Commission may establish additional municipal governments. The eighth that the President may, when the authority of the United States encounters armed resistance, regulate commercial intercourse. By section 9 the Commission is authorized to continue improving harbors, etc.

No one will deny that the things provided for in the first nine sections of the bill can either be dispensed with for a number of years to come without inconvenience or may be accomplished by the Philippine Commission under the authority it now possesses.

The next provisions of the bill relate to the public lands, and it is to these that I desire to explicitly call the attention of the Senate. Section 10 places all the property and rights which may have been acquired by the United States in the Philippine Islands under the treaty under the control of the Commission, to be administered by the Commission except as in the measure provided, and those exceptions relate to franchises, public lands, and bonds.

DISPOSITION OF LANDS.

Section 11 permits the government of the islands, subject to the provisions of the act, to make rules and regulations for the sale or other disposition of the public lands other than timber or mineral lands. Section 11 gives authority to the Commission to make all rules and regulations for the sale and leasing of all grazing lands, of all agricultural lands, of all the timber—not timber lands, but all timber—reserving from that general power authority to sell mineral lands except as provided in the bill, and the friars' lands except also as the bill provides.

Without going into many details, I call attention to the provision which authorizes the Commission to dispose of the public lands in tracts of 5,000 acres. The claim is made that there are provisions in the bill which prevent corporations from securing more than 5,000 acres. I maintain that the provisions in the bill will permit one individual of a corporation to secure title to hundreds of thousands of acres, and there is nothing in the bill that can prevent it. Authority is given to the Commission to grant to corporations public lands in quantities of 5,000 acres. A corporation may consist of but three members. One of the members may be the moneyed man, the others mere nonentities.

It will require three to create a corporation. Those three can organize themselves into as many corporations as they see fit. Three men may call a corporation they organize by one name and file articles of incorporation. They may organize another corporation under another name and file other articles of incorporation. They may keep up this process without limit, organizing as many corporations as they wish. By adopting such a course each body corporate is a separate and independent corporation. The man with money may be the principal man in all of them; and since 5,000 acres may be bought by each corporation, this one moneyed man may, for all practical purpose, become the owner of hundreds of thousands of acres. One man, the principal stockholder in 20 such corporations, will practically become the owner of 100,000 acres of land under the provisions of the bill, and you have only to multiply the number of corporations to determine the number of acres that one, two, or three men may become the owners of under this proposed law.

How is it proposed to check this? If the honorable chairman of the committee will indicate to the Senate how this may be prevented, or will show to the Senate that my claims are not well founded, then the Senate will have something upon which to rest when it comes face to face with this proposition.

ONLY THE STATE CAN QUESTION TITLE.

There is another matter, Mr. President. Under the law of nearly every State, corporations are prohibited from holding lands except such as may be necessary for the business of such corporations; and yet I venture the assertion that there can not be found five cases in the court reports in which a corporation has been attacked for holding more lands than it was entitled to hold under its charter.

I do not know of more than one case in which a corporation has been thus successfully attacked, and the reason is this: Only the sovereign itself can wage a suit against a corporation for holding lands in violation of its charter. A private individual will not be heard in a court, no matter in what form he appears, for the purpose of having a court declare that the holding of lands by a corporation is illegal. That has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in National Bank v. Matthews, in 98 U. S.; also in 14 Peters, in the case of Runyon v. Coster, and in almost an innumerable number of cases by the different State courts.

This is the rule upon that question:

> Where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to take a title to real estate, a conveyance to it is not void, but only voidable, and the sovereign alone can object. It is valid until assailed in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose.
>
> The impending danger of a judgment of ouster and dissolution was, we think, the check, and none other, contemplated by Congress.
>
> That has always been the punishment prescribed for the wanton violation of a charter, and it may be made to follow whenever the proper public authority shall see fit to invoke its application. A private person can not directly or indirectly usurp this function of government.

I also cite the following cases to the same proposition: National Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S., 628-9; Leasure v. Hellegas, 7 Serg. and R., 313; Runyon v. Coster, 14 Peters, 122; The Banks v. Poitian, 3 Rand, Va., 136.

So, though it were not true that three or four individuals may organize themselves into a hundred and more different corporations, and each corporation may take 5,000 acres of land, and some one man in the entire number may get nearly all the benefits, nevertheless, unless the Government itself should move against the corporation for violating its charter in the amount of land it takes title to, the corporations would be permitted to continue in the enjoyment of all that they were able to secure.

Mr. President, that has been the history in the United States and elsewhere of corporations taking unto themselves land in violation of the terms and provisions of their charters.

In my State corporations are prohibited from dealing in real estate, and yet we have numerous corporations whose express purpose is to deal in real estate, and they buy and sell and convey title to real estate and no question is ever made by the State, and no private individual will be heard to complain. So it would be by the United States Government. The Government could not be induced to move, at least it would not be likely to move, against any corporation simply because the corporation was holding lands in violation of the terms of its charter. There is no case reported, except it may be that of the Government against the Church of Latter Day Saints in Utah, where a corporation has been interfered with under the pretext that it held lands in violation of its charter.

THE BILL ENCOURAGES EXPLOITATION.

So we see what may be done, notwithstanding the provisions in section 77; and I will go to that section and read it from the printed bill, for it is upon that section the majority of the committee profess to rely:

That no corporation shall be authorized to conduct the business of buying and selling real estate or be permitted to hold or own real estate except such as may be reasonably necessary to enable it to carry out the purposes for which it is created, and every corporation authorized to engage in agriculture shall by its charter be restricted to the ownership and control of not to exceed 5,000 acres of land; and this provision shall be held to prevent any corporation engaged in agriculture from being in anywise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture.

But that does not prevent the stockholders of one corporation being the stockholders in another corporation, and each corporation holding 5,000 acres of land, and one single set of stockholders getting the benefit of all the lands these corporations own. This would not be the case of one corporation becoming interested in the lands of another corporation, but the stockholders of a number of separate and distinct corporations owning stock in all of them. This latter situation the bill does not profess to reach.

I have no doubt but that in some way the majority members of the Committee on the Philippines have been imposed upon. I can not believe that the majority would knowingly present to the Senate a measure which they claim will prevent consolidation in the hands of a few individuals of more than 5,000 acres of land in the Philippines when there is, in fact, no preventive whatever.

I ask the majority members of the committee why it is that while a private individual can, under this bill, take no more than 40 acres of land, three individuals may organize themselves into a corporation and take 122 times 40 acres of land? Why will the Senate of the United States place a premium of that magnitude upon doing business through the agency of a corporation? Why do they thus invite capitalists to organize corporations and hold out to them the privilege of purchasing 5,000 acres for doing so, while a private individual can buy no more than 40 acres?

There must be a reason for this. There must be unknown agencies and hidden powers urging forward legislation of this kind. When the character of the legislation is known, it seems to me that every claim that has been made by the minority members of the Senate, that this measure is to make easy the exploitation of the Philippines for the purpose of turning loose upon them adventurers from the States to gobble up all their lands to the exclusion of the native inhabitants of the islands, has been clearly established.

THE ISLAND'S FRANCHISES TO BE GRABBED.

We take one step more, Mr. President, and what do we find? That all the franchises of the islands may be granted through laws enacted by the Philippine Commission. Then, again, the Philippine Islands may be covered over with 4½ or 5 per cent gold interest-bearing bonds. The city of Manila is authorized to issue $4,000,000 of bonds for public works. Under the provisions of this bill any municipality to which the Commission will give permission may issue bonds up to a certain amount of the value of their property for the construction of public works.

Mr. President, if a measure of this kind is enacted, within five years all the lands of these people worth having will be taken from them; the municipalities of the island will be loaded down with gold interest-bearing debts; the city of Manila will have upon its shoulders four million more of an indebtedness evidenced by gold interest-bearing bonds; and thus, without the people of the Philippine Islands having a voice, without a right to be heard, they will have their lands stolen—practically stolen; they will have their franchises disposed of, and their municipalities covered with these bonds, and all held and owned by American capitalists.

THESE PROPOSED LAWS MORE CRUEL THAN TORTURES.

Mr. President, the cruelties about which testimony has been given, of which the newspapers of the country have been filled for months, would be mild in comparison with such barbarism as this. Here are eight or nine millions of people occupying the islands in which they were born, not heathen people or savages, but Christian people, and according to the testimony of those best acquainted with them—of American generals and the Philippine Commission, who have visited the United States—an agreeable and a liberty-loving people. These people regard the lands in their islands as their heritage, yet they are to be robbed of them by this process of "benevolent assimilation," their franchises are to be granted to foreigners, and their municipalities are to be loaded down with bonded indebtedness without one of them being consulted upon the subject.

I repeat, this measure is a monstrous one; monstrous in its conception, cruel in its provisions, one which should bring the blush to the cheek of any fair-minded, honest American.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that a bill such as this can be adopted in the American Senate, much less do I believe that it can be adopted by both branches of Congress and receive the approbation of the President.

THE PLAN OF SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.

What is the clog that is put upon this wholesale spoliation of a people of their lands and franchises, and this effort to cover them with gold interest-bearing indebtedness? It is that measures for doing these things after their enactment by the Philippine Commission shall be submitted to Congress at its ensuing session, and if Congress fails to annul or amend them during that session, if they receive the approval of the President they become laws.

It was an ingenious device, Mr. President. I do not know who is the author of it. But think about it for a moment. Legislation is enacted by the Philippine Commission disposing of the lands, the timber, and the franchises and providing for the sale of bonds, and it is submitted to Congress. That legislation happens to be in harmony with the views of a majority of either the Senate or the House, or it happens to be in harmony with the views of the committee to which the legislation will be referred. All that is necessary to enact it into laws is that by hook or by crook either House of Congress shall be prevented from repealing them during a single session.

We know from the experience of the proposed constitutional amendment providing for the election of Senators by the people how long a provision may be kept in a committee without being reported. We know by many experiences how measures may be kept in committee by an adverse majority and neither the Senate nor the House be permitted to express their views upon them. The proposed plan is no safeguard, Mr. President. It is more a mockery than a safeguard.

It may be said, Mr. President, that the Commission will know better than Congress. Let us say that such is the case; then let the Commission be made advisory to Congress. Let the Commission send to Congress its suggestions in the form of laws touching the lands and franchises and the indebtedness of the islands; and then, with the information the Commission will send to Congress, Congress will be in position to determine whether it should approve the laws or not. In any event no such rules should ever become laws until Congress itself approves them.

The impediments that are said to be here are simply mockeries. The whole bill, Mr. President, is either filled with such provisions or is not needed. The coinage provisions are not needed. You are practically giving to the Filipinos the same monetary system that they have to-day, except that you stamp upon their silver coins the insignia of perhaps the sovereignty of the United States, or something that will indicate the relation of the islands to them; but after all there is no substantial change in the financial system of the islands as proposed by this bill.

THE MINING PROVISIONS.

So far as the mineral provisions of the bill are concerned there is no need for them. We do not learn of miners upon the outskirts of the counties waiting for permission to prospect for mines. We know that where there is gold and silver the miners of the United States have never yet been estopped from discovering and working and owning them. We know that in California and other localities near the Pacific coast, long before there was a mining law upon the statute books, the miners went there and adopted their own rules and regulations, and became mine owners under the title conferred by possession, and they waited patiently, and they did not wait in vain for regular title from the Government, yet they waited a good many years before Congress confirmed their titles.

TIMBER PROVISIONS.

You talk about the timber. The present Commission has the right to make reasonable rules and regulations for the cutting and removal of timber. So whether we have in mind the mineral lands, or the timber lands, or the grazing lands, or any other kind of lands, there is either no hurry for action or the power to act is already vested in the Commission.

Mr. President, if, as is asserted here by some members of the majority, the Filipinos are to ultimately receive their independence, they will receive it, if this bill goes into effect, with their islands simply a sucked orange. Their lands will be gone, their franchises will be gone, their municipalities will be covered with debt—all this without the inhabitants of the islands having had any voice in the laws.

ABSENTEE LANDLORDISM.

Mr. President, one other matter may well be taken into consideration by the Senate in considering this bill. It is what the relations will be between the landowners and the mass of the population if it goes into effect.

All authorities agree that white people can not live in the islands. General Hughes gave us a very graphic proof of that. He said that after the Spanish prisoners were turned over to him, although they lived in quarters with good sanitary regulations, there was extraordinary mortality among them. He became alarmed at the extent of the mortality, and he inquired of the Spanish officers whether there was any unusual cause for the extraordinary death rate. The Spanish officers said there was not; that the sole reason was that the soldiers had been kept in the Philippine Islands longer than the usual time. They had been there over two years, and it was the rule that those who remained in the islands under ordinary conditions for more than two years became so enfeebled by the climate that they could not resist attacks of ordinary sickness or disease.

The uniform testimony is that the character of the climate is such that white people not only can not labor there, but they can not live there for any considerable length of time.

What must be the result? The lands and franchises will be purchased by American exploiters. But they can not live there. They will place their business in the hands of overseers, while they will remain away. Most of the population, the labor of the islands, will become a restless, besotted, and slavish race of peasants, their lands gone, and their masters seven or eight or nine thousand miles away, while the wealth of the islands will be carried across seas to enable the absent landlords to live in luxury and idleness.

What must be the outcome of such a system upon the mass of the Filipino population? Mr. President, you will have a condition in those islands that will put to blush the deplorable conditions of the Irish peasantry in the days of their very worst state—a rich absentee-landlord class, and a poor, enslaved, hopeless mass, consisting of the millions of the islands' population. And this, Mr. President, is "benevolent assimilation!"

There can be no assimilation with these people. There can be no assimilation that will ever bring the Anglo-Saxon and the Filipino upon the same plane of equality. The Filipino is the inferior race. The Anglo-Saxon or the American is the superior race. To speak seriously of assimilation between the races is to slander our ancestry and commit a crime against our posterity.

THE MINORITY MEASURE.

Mr. President, I desire to say something about the bill offered by the minority. It voices, I believe, the sentiments of the Democrats of the Senate and of a few of the Republicans. They are in favor of giving the Filipinos their independence at such reasonable time and under such reasonable restrictions as will secure a stable government and permanent peace and prosperity in the islands. The minority bill provides in section 3:

That ninety days after the President of the United States shall have proclaimed that all armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago.

Under that provision there can be no claim that we are granting independence to a people in arms. The initiative of the government will only be after the President of the United States has proclaimed that armed resistance to the United States had ceased. The bill then provides that—

The United States Philippine Commission shall make and promulgate rules and regulations for the holding of an election in the provinces of said archipelago for members of a convention, which convention when organized shall proceed to the adoption of a constitution for the government of said archipelago.

It further provides that all who can speak and write either the English or the Spanish language, or any of the native languages, and have resided therein for one year, shall be qualified voters, and that those who possess such qualifications shall be qualified for membership of the constitutional convention.

It then provides that the members of the convention, when elected, shall, at a time to be fixed in the election proclamation of the Philippine Commission, meet in the city of Manila to frame a constitution and to organize a government; and it provides that the said convention shall fix by ordinance irrevocably certain things which can only be changed with the consent of the United States. One of them is:

That there shall belong to the United States and continue to be the property thereof such lands and waters as the President of the United States shall designate to the said convention for naval, military, and coaling stations and terminal facilities for submarine cables, the same to continue under the control and sovereignty of the United States.

MANILA BAY AND CITY IN EXCHANGE FOR INDEPENDENCE.

The Senator from Ohio asked, "Suppose the United States wishes to retain the bay and harbor of Manila, who can for a moment suppose that the Filipinos would surrender them?" If the United States shall ask for the bay and the harbor, or, at least, the harbor and the city of Manila, who will say that the Filipino government would not, in exchange for independence and liberty to all the rest of the islands, give to the United States what it asks?

There are other bays, Subig Bay, for instance, that are of great capacity and very desirable. But let us try the experiment, Mr. President. I do not believe that the generous people of the United States would demand Manila and the harbor—the gems of those beautiful islands—but if they were demanded I have no question but that they would be surrendered, reluctantly though they might be, also with such coaling stations and terminal facilities as we might desire. These would be gladly given by the Filipinos in return for their liberty and independence.

The second ordinance irrevocable is:

To carry into effect the treaty obligations of the United States with the Kingdom of Spain, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights and property acquired under the authority of the United States.

There are two objections urged against this minority bill. One is that we can not intrust to the Filipinos the duty of observing our treaty obligations with Spain insofar as they relate to the Philippine Islands. Mr. President, when the treaty of peace was signed Spain gave to us the islands and their sovereignty. It reserved no right to interfere with any disposition we might wish to make of them. All we need to do is to see that the proposed Filipino government carries out in the islands what the United States promised to do. As was pointed out by the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], the treaty was not ratified by the Spanish Cortes until the 11th day of April, and it was ratified in the full knowledge of practically the unanimous declaration of the Senate of the United States, an integral part of the treaty making power, that some time, how soon not being stated, the Filipinos were to be granted their independence. That objection, Mr. President, is an afterthought. The power of the United States to provide for carrying into effect its treaty stipulations is absolutely unlimited.

It is the United States that has the burden cast upon it, and the United States may adopt its own plan to observe its treaty obligations. It may look after them itself directly, or see to it that some other government established in the Philippine Islands shall do so. It is precisely what was provided for with reference to Cuba. The same treaty obligations were placed upon the United States in that treaty as to Cuba that were imposed upon it for the Philippine Islands.

THE FILIPINOS ARE A PEOPLE.

Then, again, the claim is made that the Filipinos are not a People; that they consist of numerous tribes, and I believe, on the authority of the Schurman Commission, it is claimed that there are some 80 tribes.

Sixto Lopez published a little pamphlet—and one reason we wanted Sixto Lopez before the Philippine Committee was because he knows so much about Philippine conditions and their different languages—and he declared in this little pamphlet that by different methods of spelling the names of tribes two or three tribes had been magnified into a dozen or more. Then again several tribes were each known by several different names, and each name had been made to constitute a distinct tribe. He illustrated by "America," and "the United States," and "Yankee," and "American." While they all meant the same thing, ignorant historians would make all such names do duty as indicating separate tribes in the Philippines.

After speaking of about one-thirtieth of the population in the islands of Mindanao and the Sulus, he declared that the rest of the population of the Philippine Islands was a homogeneous population; that they all came from the same Malay stem; that while there were different dialects, yet they were so nearly akin that one who spoke one dialect would soon learn to speak another; that there was little or no difficulty of communication between them all. He further spoke of a fact that everybody seems to lose sight of, that when Aguinaldo set on foot his last insurrection against the Spanish power and against American aggressions his allies were in all of the provinces and all of the islands, and their populations were imbued with one great patriotic motive. They sent their generals and their captains and their men to rally under the same banner and fight for the same cause.

It is further shown by indisputable testimony that, commencing with a period shortly after the sinking of the Spanish fleet and continuing for nearly nine months, there was no power in the Philippine Islands except that of the Filipino priests and the officials in command of the insurrection, and that there was peace and quietude and order throughout the island until the Americans commenced the war which has been raging ever since.

THEY ARE A CHRISTIAN PEOPLE.

Mr. President, the people of the Philippine Islands are a Christian people. It may be said that theirs is a primitive Christianity, but they were taught of the Saviour, of His sufferings, and His teachings. They believe in the virtues that marked the Saviour's life, and while there may be a form and ceremonial, that is simple of its kind, it is Christianity, and such Christianity as you find in many of the rural districts, at points away from large cities, in the provinces of France and of Great Britain, simple in its character, but straight, pure, and direct in its teachings; and I say there never was a Christian people that was not fit for self-government. There are in such people the underlying sentiment and desires that fit them for independence.

They have confidence in leaders; they observe authority; they display regard for law, for order. When you find these traits ingrained in any people, however simple may be their lives, when you find them safely grounded in the domestic virtues, when they love their children, and they cherish the virtue of their wives and daughters, when they stand ready to sacrifice life and property for an ideal in government similar to our own, then such people may at least be trusted until they demonstrate that they are not fit for self-government.

Whenever you find such a people all presumptions are in their favor, and it should not be declared that they are unfit for self-government until a fair trial has demonstrated that they are not fit for self-government.

We have the testimony of Admiral Dewey that they are better qualified for self-government than are the Cubans, and he knows both people well. I am willing to take the opinion of Admiral Dewey upon any subject he has investigated when he himself feels that he is competent to express a sound opinion.

So I say, Mr. President, the lands should not be taken from those people; they should not be robbed of their franchises; they should not be buried in debt; and something should be left to them until they are given the opportunity to set up a government of their own, something that nearly every Senator says they will be permitted some time to do.

SHOULD PREVENT SUCH LEGISLATION.

Mr. President, if it were left to me alone, with the convictions I have upon the subject, I would stand here and exhaust every power, constitutional, legal, and parliamentary, before I would permit an enormity such as this to be imposed on 10,000,000 people 8,000 miles away. Legislation of this kind for a foreign people is different from legislation for our own people. We represent the people of the United States; the will of the majority is supposed to govern, and when in both branches of Congress a measure for the United States has a majority, it may be said that that measure is the will of a majority of the people of the United States, and such a measure should be voted upon when fair argument upon it is concluded.

But, Mr. President, we are not now legislating for the American people. We are legislating for eight or ten million people eight or ten thousand miles away, who have no voice either at this side of the Capitol or at the other. We are legislating away their homes and lands and giving away their franchises, while their voice has not been heard. It is monstrous, Mr. President. In the face of an enormity of this kind I stand almost appalled, and I do not believe it is possible that both branches of Congress and the President of the United States will sanction this proposed enormity. Somewhere and somehow in the providence of God this contemplated outrage will be defeated.

I shall not dwell longer upon the measures. I want to say something upon the investigations before the Philippine Committee and then I am through. I do not love to dwell on atrocities for which men wearing the uniform are arraigned. I agree with my fellow Senators that the Army of the United States is not the wrongdoer. It is not the Army; it is the cause. I have no question in the world but that, under the circumstances, the Army of the United States has borne itself as bravely and humanely as would the army of any other country sent on such a mission. No English army would have done any better, neither would any French or Russian army; and yet, Mr. President, we find a record made by soldiers of the Army harrows up the feelings of Americans.

THE CHARACTER OF THE WAR.

This is not a war of an army against an army; it is a war of an army against a people; it is not like the Franco-Prussian war or our war against Spain, or the late civil war.

The Franco-Prussian war was between the French army and the German army, and when the French army was defeated the treaty was made and the war ended. The German army withdrew and the people of each country were left to themselves, except that two of the French provinces which had formerly belonged to Germany, those of Alsace and Loraine, were by the treaty reannexed to and became a part of Germany, the inhabitants of those provinces being given all the rights and privileges that are granted to every other German subject.

THE WAR WITH SPAIN.

As to the war between our own country and Spain, when we met their ships upon the sea and sunk them, when our armies clashed at Santiago and we defeated them, when the Spanish flag was hauled down, the war was over. It had been a fight between the armies; it had not been a fight between peoples, nor a fight by our army against the people of Spain. When that war ended the Spanish soldiers were sent back to their homes at American expense.

OUR CIVIL WAR.

The civil war, while it was an internecine war, was not a war of conquest; but at all times it was a war for the maintenance of the Union, and though it was a long and bitter struggle, when at last at Appomattox General Lee surrendered his sword to General Grant, General Lee and the Southern army and the Southern people knew that there was no subjugation to follow, for the seceded States would be restored to their orbits as American States, with all the rights of the other States, each and all of them covered by the protecting ægis of the Constitution. So, Mr. President, there was no guerrilla war; there was no invasion of towns and cities; the torch of the incendiary was not applied; there was no torturing; both sides laid down their arms, and the soldiers of both armies returned to the vocations of peace. It had been a war between armies, and not a war of the North against the people of the South, nor a war of one people against another.

THE NATURE OF THE PHILIPPINE WAR.

But our war in the Philippines is a war by an army against a people. When the Filipino army was defeated and scattered that did not and could not end the war, because the mission of our Army was to subjugate the people and not alone to destroy the armed forces of the Philippine government. So the Philippine people were pursued to their homes, to their convents, and to their churches, into their fields, and into their mountains, and those who did not recognize our sovereignty and take the oath of allegiance and, as commanded by the orders of Bell and other American officers, go to the front and by active work against their families, their friends, their neighbors, and their townspeople show that they were thoroughly loyal to the United States were treated as enemies.

We know now, Mr. President, what war of that kind means. It means pursuit and slaughter in the unpacified provinces, and it means jails in the pacified provinces under the provisions of the so-called sedition laws. I was reading in a newspaper the other day that one of the judges of the court of first instance was hastening to the place where his court was to be held because there were 500 people to be tried there for violations of the infamous sedition laws. And so we have the sheriff and the jailer moving through the pacified provinces arresting every man who dares to lisp his aspiration for the independence of his native land, and we have armed forces moving through the unpacified provinces with fire and sword making the people "want peace and want it badly."

Mr. President, a people battered into peace, a people shot and burned into peace, are not loyal subjects, and never will be loyal citizens. They may profess peace, but a fire of hate is forever smoldering. They may profess love, but it is false love. A people who have acquired from the United States in its better days an ideal of government, an ideal that embraces liberty and independence, never will, except while subdued by fear, submit as conquered subjects to the United States.

When we read of the insurrection of 1896, of the writings and teachings of Rizal, of his martyrdom for the liberty for his people; when we read of the Filipino constitution, a part of which was drafted before the insurrection of 1896 had been entirely subdued, we know that the Filipinos have a high ideal of government, and that they did all that was in their power to do to reach that ideal. And we who inspired it, whose Constitution suggested it, who cheered every effort by all people for liberty throughout the world, are the nation that is pursuing them with savage warfare to make them relinquish it.

SPAIN CONQUERED US.

It is well said that though we defeated Spain, Spain in the end conquered us, since we followed in the footsteps of Spain. Spain overran Mexico in the early days, conquering a people by slaying them almost indiscriminately. Then she overran Peru and other of the present States of South America and conquered them with the same methods. We take one of the Spanish colonies, having bought it from Spain, with its seven or eight millions of Christian people, and, following the example of Spain, we overcome them with fire and sword. It is the truth, Mr. President, that Spain, though defeated, has gained the victory over us. We adopt her sedition laws; we establish our courts upon the basis she established hers. There is no trial by jury. The judge to pass upon all controversies affecting property and life and liberty is subject to removal by the appointing power.

THE TESTIMONY ABOUT CRUELTIES.

Mr. President, much has been said about the testimony before the committee. I will not go into the details of it. I may ask to insert some of it in my remarks. But I wish to call attention to official warnings of the horrible conditions that the testimony establishes. It is quite clear from official orders that in 1899 and 1900 the same class of outrages of which we now read was being practiced. I turn to a communication from the War Department, which contains a great number of orders, of which I will read but a few.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF BARBARITIES.

Here is one dated Manila, P. I., January 28, 1899, signed by Thomas H. Barry, assistant adjutant-general.

It states:

By taking advantage of the ignorance and trust of numerous native tradesmen of Manila, many enlisted men of this command have seriously injured the reputation of the citizens of the United States for honesty. These unscrupulous men, instead of insuring the rights and property of a defenseless people under their protection, have resorted to a despicable species of robbery more dangerous than looting, because less open. This should be corrected. Company commanders will be instructed to see to it that just bills due native tradesmen by men of their commands are paid, collecting at the pay table, if necessary, the sums owed.

All honor to the American officer who wrote and issued that order—Thomas H. Barry, assistant adjutant-general. Oh, no, Mr. President, presenting these details is not an attack upon the American Army. As compared with the whole, I believe that the soldiers engaged in these outrages are the few, but we find that after all they are very widespread, for a relatively few can do a vast amount of wrong.

Here is another order dated February 7, 1899. You discover they commenced very early in the war:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PACIFIC AND EIGHTH ARMY CORPS,
Manila, P. I., February 7, 1899.

The burning of the houses or other property of the natives or other inhabitants of this island is prohibited.

There must have been a necessity for this order. Soldiers must have been engaged in burning houses of the natives. So the same officer—Thomas H. Barry, assistant adjutant-general—declares that it must be prohibited.

Here is another order, signed by E. B. Cassatt, major, Twenty-seventh Infantry Volunteers, acting adjutant-general. It is dated at El Deposito, Luzon, P. I., August 9, 1899:

It having been reported to the brigade commander that a number of cases of looting, robbery, and other misconduct on the part of United States troops have recently taken place, attention is again invited to the existing orders in regard to such acts.

I say honor to E. B. Cassatt, major of the Twenty-seventh Volunteers.

Then here is another order, dated October 12, 1899, signed by W. R. Smedberg, jr., first lieutenant, Fourth Cavalry, aid-de-camp:

Complaints of looting have already been received. It is belived that company commanders do not exercise sufficient control over their men, or such disgraceful acts could not occur.

Honor again, I say, to Lieutenant Smedberg for his attempt to curtail this propensity.

Here is another—Nueva Caceres, P. I., April 28, 1900—signed by Peter Murray, captain, Eighteenth Infantry, acting assistant adjutant-general:

The troops of this district will exercise the greatest care and judgment in firing upon natives—

Peculiar language, is it not?

The troops of this district will exercise the greatest care and judgment in firing upon natives, in order that they may not fire upon women and children.

They must exercise care in firing upon natives. They may fire upon natives, but they must do it in such a way that they will not kill women and children. Even for that much humanity I say honor to Captain Murray.

Then again, Manila, P. I., June 5, 1900:

Rumors having reached these headquarters to the effect that unjustifiably harsh measures have been employed in some instances to extort information from captured ladrones, officers of this command are reminded that General Orders, No. 100, War Department, series 1863, provide ample and lawful methods for the treatment of prisoners, spies, and other persons not entitled to the rights of recognized belligerents, and all departures from the provisions of said orders are strictly prohibited.

I imagine that the unjustifiable and harsh measure condemned in this order is the water torture. It is the nearest approach I find in any of the utterances by American officers in condemnation of this horror.

Let me read this:

TACLOBAN, LEYTE, P. I., June 26, 1900.

1. Reliable information having been received by the district commander that native women and children have lately been killed or wounded by indiscriminate shooting on the part of troops of this command, the district commander takes occasion to notify all officers under his command that we are at war with armed insurgents and their supporters only, and that indiscriminate firing upon natives seen in the country surrounding towns will not be tolerated.

Here is an official declaration of indiscriminate firing by some of the American soldiers upon the natives of the Philippine Islands in which women and children were killed. The killing of women and children commenced early in the struggle. Some noble officers did their best to prevent it, but the tragedies grew and grew until, as the testimony shows, they became prevalent in a number of the provinces.

Then again on July 14, 1900, First Lieutenant Knabenshue, of the Fifteenth Infantry, was compelled to issue the following warning:

Owing to a large number of complaints, reported to these headquarters, of ill treatment of natives on the part of scouting parties in this district, commanding officers are hereby directed to caution their officers and men against harsh and illegitimate treatment of natives at all times.

Here, Mr. President, are official indications of what was going on in the Philippine Islands in the first year of the war and early in its second year. General Hughes tells the Philippine Committee that after the first year of the war the conduct of the war grew "stiffer," and became "stiffer" and "stiffer" each succeeding year. His reason was that the Filipino people were not civilized, wherefore the Army resorted to conduct denounced by the rules of civilized warfare. The war has continued to grow "stiffer," until we find an American officer of the highest rank ordering all natives over the age of 10 years to be slaughtered and their country to be made a howling wilderness.

ONLY NINE OFFICERS COURT-MARTIALED.

Mr. President, let me call attention to a remarkable condition. In all the courts-martial of American soldiers—officers and privates—for cruelties, for violations of the rules of honorable warfare, and for maltreatment of native Filipinos there have been but nine officers brought to court-martial, and but two of those were punished except by reprimand.

Of all the colonels, of all the majors, of all the captains, of all the lieutenants who have transgressed during the three years and more of this Philippine war, but nine of them have been arraigned for their misdeeds. That does not include Major Waller nor General Smith; but until those two courts-martial only nine American officers of any rank had ever been compelled to answer to a court-martial. Is it to be wondered at that so many of the privates in the Army have fallen from the standard of the real American soldier?

Mr. President, the officers make the army. After all, the army is a machine. It obeys orders. To paraphrase—

Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to obey and die.

The officers make the army, and when you find lieutenants and captains leading men upon forays to burn towns of 10,000 people and towns with populations of six and eight thousand and towns without number known as barrios—the villages of the people—applying the torch and driving their inhabitants out into the mountains and the wilderness, and there is no court-martial, you can expect nothing else than demoralized ranks. It is as inevitable as that day shall follow night.

GENERAL BELL'S ORDER.

This, Mr. President, is the real meaning of the testimony that brings shame and sorrow to those who love the Army and take pride in its victories.

I will, before I close, refer to a few of the things we find in General Bell's celebrated order. It ought not to be passed over. It is called Telegraphic Circular No. 3, issued from Batangas on the 9th of December, 1901. Much of it I will pass over, but I come to one or two paragraphs I should not forbear to read:

The only acceptable and convincing evidence of the real sentiments of either individuals or town councils should be such acts publicly performed as must inevitably commit them irrevocably to the side of Americans by arousing the animosity and opposition of the insurgent element.

If you are to consider a Filipino friendly it can only be by such affirmative acts upon his part as will arouse the enmity of all his fellow-countrymen.

Such acts are reliable evidence, but mere words are worthless. No person should be given credit for loyalty simply because he takes the oath of allegiance or secretly conveys to Americans worthless information and idle rumors which result in nothing. Those who publicly guide our troops to the camps of the enemy, who publicly identify insurgents, who accompany troops in operations against the enemy, who denounce and assist in arresting the secret enemies of the Government, who publicly obtain and bring reliable and valuable information to commanding officers, those in fact who publicly array themselves against the insurgents and for Americans, should be trusted and given credit for loyalty, but no others.

What greater enormity was ever inserted in an order of a general of a civilized army?

NONCOMBATANTS CAN NOT BE TOLERATED.

Here is a people with an all-pervading desire for independence and liberty. Some have submitted by being battered into submission. But the submission on their part is not sufficient. They may take the oath of allegiance. They may profess by words, and they may be content to lead quiet lives. They may wish to return to their homes and work upon their little farms and allow the war to go on regardless of their assistance. But that is not enough. They must publicly array themselves against their fellow Filipinos who are still engaged in the struggle for liberty. They must do it in such a way as to incite the anger and hatred of their own countrymen. They must guide the invading American Army to the camps of their own countrymen to betray them, and unless they do all of this they are to be treated as enemies. What more dastardly order was ever promulgated by a soldier, civilized or barbarian?

No person should be given credit for loyalty solely on account of his having done nothing for or against us so far as known. Neutrality should not be tolerated.

What does that mean? The man who seeks to live peacefully upon his farm should not be tolerated. The man who desires to live with his family should not be tolerated. The man who desires to ignore the war should not be tolerated. That is neutrality. That must not be tolerated. Then what is to occur? If the Army shall not let him alone, what is the Army to do? Is it not an invitation as strong as an official order could make it to treat all the noncombatants as public enemies? Here we get a glimmering of the cause of the tremendous disparity in the mortality in two armies. More than twenty Filipinos killed for every one American, and from ten to twenty Filipinos killed to one that is reported wounded.

NATIVE PRIESTS WORSE THAN ARMED INSURGENTS.

Presidentes and chiefs of police against whom sufficient evidence can be found to convict them before a court of violating their oaths by acting as agents for insurgents, or by aiding, assisting, or protecting them in any way, should be arrested and confined.

Then again:

Another dangerous class of enemies are wealthy sympathizers and contributors, who, though holding no official positions, use all their influence in support of the insurrection, and while enjoying American protection for themselves, their families, and property secretly aid, protect, and contribute to insurgents.

Now listen:

Chief and most important among this class of disloyal persons are native priests.

Not the Spanish priests, not the friars, but chief among disloyal persons are the native priests. Now let us see what is to be done with them:

It may be considered as practically certain that every native priest in the provinces of Batangas and La Laguna is a secret enemy of the Government and in active sympathy with insurgents.

Every priest, without exception, must be so considered.

These are absolutely our most dangerous enemies—

These native priests, without exception, without limit of numbers—

These are absolutely our most dangerous enemies, more dangerous even than armed insurgents.

How do they treat armed insurgents? Shoot them down on sight without mercy; but a native priest, without regard to the individual or his sentiments, is to be held by our soldiers to be more dangerous even than an armed insurgent.

They should be given no exemption whatever on account of their calling.

Think of it! Is it any wonder that, following an order such as this, we find recounted persecutions of members of this sacred calling that remind us of the persecution of the Christians by the pagans of ancient Rome?

Here is a letter from the Columbus (S. C.) Banner, sent to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] by a friend, whose letter I have. The printed letter was written by Wade Kitchens from the Philippine Islands, giving an account of what he saw of the dealings with native priests. When we remember that priests are denounced by General Bell as more dangerous than armed insurgents, we can well understand the license given the army under Bell to persecute them to the death. Wade Kitchens writes:

MANILA, P. I., December 20, 1901.

DEAR MOTHER: It seems as though I write my letters in bunches. This makes three in one week. I sent two handkerchiefs to Luler and the baby in one of the letters. I hope you received them.

This leaves me all right, and I trust will find you the same. I am having some novel experiences at present. All things are in a stir. Everything is in an unsettled condition. All people in the country are pouring into the towns garrisoned by American soldiers. It is an order from the head of the Philippine division of the Army. Imagine everyone around Waldo for several miles pouring into the town carrying everything they possess. That is the way they are doing here now, and you can not imagine the stuff that is being brought in. The roads are solidly lined with men, women, and children. The women, with big loads on their heads, come dragging in. Some are very poor and have no means of transportation. They have to get all their property out of the country by the 25th of December. Then the soldiers are going to burn and kill everything in sight.

You see, at present there are two governments in this province, the insurrecto, General Malvar, has his tax collectors and officers in every town, but they act secretly. The Filipinos have to pay tribute to them or else Malvar will have them put to death. There was a Filipino boloed to death on the streets here a few days ago because he refused to pay tribute. So you see these people are bluffed; they have to pay two governments.

You see, he is quite impartial in his statements of what he saw.

Yesterday I saw a company of soldiers from an adjoining town with the priest and chief men of the town as prisoners. They gave this dignified old priest the water cure. Did I tell you what the water cure is? I will tell you again, anyway. They take a prisoner, let him be priest or what not, and they tie him down and pour water into him until he can hold no more. Then a soldier jumps up and down on his stomach and packs the water, so to speak, and more water is poured into him and (poco tiempo) in a short time he is swelled to a tremendous proportion compared to his size. He will soon tell all he knows, and oftentimes more than he does know. I could not keep from feeling a little bad to see a dignified, solemn old priest with black robes used in such a manner, but this has been done with priests in two cases to my knowledge. It does a soldier good to do such things as that. This water cure is used when a fellow will not talk or tell what he knows.

There was a very rich old Filipino woman here, and she is about as large as Charles Nickols, something unusual for a Filipino. Nevertheless, she is very large. She has been giving all kinds of aid to the insurrectos, but it was a hard proposition to catch her. She runs a drug store and saloon as fine as you can see in the States. Well, she made a proposition to a soldier who was always wanting something to drink, but had no money, that if he would get her two guns and ammunition she would furnish him in what he could drink. The soldier tells an officer, the officer gets the soldier to take the ammunition and guns and sell them to her, and then they would have her trapped. She bought them, and last night started a Filipino hombre (man) out to the mountains with them for the insurrectos. He was nabbed in short order and was given the water cure to make him tell where he was going to. He says he is carrying them to another town to a padre (priest), who will give them to the insurrectos. The officer gets the padre and gives him the water cure to tell what he knows. This morning that priest presented a horrible appearance, with his face all bruised up and his fine silk robes covered with mud and torn. We are over here in the name of humanity and civilization, but I have another name for it. We are treating and oppressing them worse than the Spaniards ever did.

I have here other accounts of horrible tortures practiced upon other priests, but I will content myself with reading one more. These two will suffice to outline the cruel picture. Only the imagination can fill it in:

WINTHROP, May 13.

A summons to Washington to give testimony in the "water-cure" hearing is expected to arrive at Fort Banks any day, and it would be no surprise if there should be two demands for the presence of soldiers now serving here.

There are two men who were with the Twenty-sixth Infantry in the Philippines, and one of them has been told to hold himself in readiness to go to Washington at any time. If he testifies as he expected to, his testimony will be the first given in the hearing by a man now in the service of the United States. All who have made their statements heretofore have left the Army.

The names of the ex-Twenty-sixth men are Bernard Garrity and James Prendergast, and it is the latter who expects to receive word to foregather at the capital.

Both were mustered out of the Twenty-sixth June 1, 1901, but soon after reenlisted. Prendergast was a sergeant in Company D, while Garrity was in Company G.

The chief affair concerning which Prendergast can give testimony is the alleged murder of Father Augustine, a Philippine sympathizer, by a number of Americans at Panay. He has also seen numerous cases of water-cure administration.

"I was sergeant of the guard the night Father Augustine was killed," he said to a reporter of this paper. "The priest had been kept in a room by himself until the day of that night. They said they had been giving him the water cure all day, but couldn't kill him that way.

"Soon after I came on duty Capt. C. M. Brownell appeared with a squad and took the priest to an empty house in the city, saying they were going to give him some more water cure.

"After a while they came back, saying he had died. It was common talk all day that they were trying to kill him with the water, but he wouldn't die.

"But it was known to those who saw the man killed that the water didn't put him out. They saw he could stand that all right and threw a powder down his throat which poisoned him.

"The officers were in this. There was something in private between the priest and the officers for which they wanted him out of the way—between the generals and captains, I mean. The priest had a lot of receipts for money and different papers, which they got, and they didn't want him to tell who took them.

"That the water cure was commonly administered was known to every one, I suppose. I think it saved the lives of thousands of Americans.

"It was used both to extort confessions of where arms and ammunitions were hid and to teach the Filipinos what they might expect if they didn't behave.

"It would be administered to one native in front of a lot of others, to frighten them into subjection.

"I do not think the water cure killed anybody unless the person was predisposed to something like heart disease. It would swell their stomachs up and make them sick for a few days, but it was really only a good washing out for the most of them.

"The way this story of the killing of the priest, which I may have to testify to, came out was through ill feeling between then Capt. C. M. Brownell, of Company D, and Corpl. Albert Bertrand, of the same company.

"The corporal was made a company clerk and was afterwards reduced, at the instance of Captain Brownell, he claimed.

"He knew about the Father Augustine business and revealed it to Senator LODGE and some others when he got to the United States."

STARTLING DISPROPORTIONS.

As evidence of the character of Philippine warfare that is carried on under the command of some American officers, I call attention to these startling figures from the report of General Hughes, page 239, found in General MacArthur's report. They show that for the period stated there were 40 Americans killed and 72 wounded, and during the same time there were 801 Filipinos killed and 38 wounded. The significance of these figures is not so much that there were twenty times more Filipinos killed than Americans, but that of the Americans there was but 1 killed to 3 wounded—and the usual proportion in civilized warfare of killed to wounded is from 1 to 3 or 1 to 5 or 6—while of the Filipinos there were 801 killed and 38 wounded, or more than 20 Filipinos killed to 1 wounded. This is the official report.

When General MacArthur was questioned about it, after giving these startling official figures, he was asked by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to state some reason for the disparity. Senator PROCTOR wanted to know if the Filipinos carried off their wounded. General MacArthur thought that might be the case.

But, Mr. President, the absurdity of that is clear, in view of the fact that the battle of February 4 and 5 was practically the only battle in which the Filipinos ever made a stand. All the reports of attacks by American soldiers upon the Filipinos agree to this effect, that the American soldiers always rush the enemy. If they are assailed from ambush the American soldiers rush the enemy, and the enemy invariably run away. How is it possible under such circumstances for the Filipinos to carry off their wounded?

Then again, Mr. President, we have another report from General MacArthur of killed and wounded in the two armies. Between November 1, 1899, and September 1, 1900, there were 268 Americans killed and 750 Americans wounded. There were during the same period 3,227 Filipinos killed and 694 wounded. Of Filipinos there were 12 killed where 1 American was killed. The ratio of the American killed to wounded was 1 to 3, about the average ratio; but the ratio of Filipinos killed to wounded was 4½ to 1. Four and one-half times more Filipinos were killed than there were Filipinos wounded, according to the official reports of our own highest officers.

Take the mortality of the first battle, as testified to by Hughes, MacArthur, and Otis. There were but about 250 Americans killed and wounded and upward of 3,000 Filipinos killed and wounded. Over 750 Filipinos were buried upon the field of battle. There were but from 14 to 20 American soldiers killed—the rest of the number given were wounded—and General Hughes states that was the only battle in which the Filipinos attempted to make a stand.

I hardly know how to express myself, but, Mr. President, these startling figures call for reflection. Are not these terrible results the natural outgrowth of the kind of war urged by General Bell, and war that, according to General Hughes, grew stiffer upon the part of the American Army from year to year?

There was reference made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to an interview with Brigadier-General Bell. As I understood him, he stated that he made special inquiry to determine the correctness of this interview, and he was satisfied that it was correct. It is dated Washington, May 1, and was sent to the New York Times.

I will read part of it:

WASHINGTON, May 1.

"One-sixth of the natives of Luzon have either been killed or have died of the dengue fever in the last two years," was the remarkable statement of Brigadier-General Bell, who arrived in Washington to-day direct from the Philippines, where he was in command of four departments of Southern Luzon.

"The loss of life by killing alone has been very great," continued the General, "but I think that not one man has been slain except where his death served the legitimate purposes of war. It has been necessary to adopt what in other countries would probably be thought harsh measures, for the Filipino is tricky and crafty, and has to be fought in his own way.

* * * * * * *

"The insurgents also caused us much trouble by tampering with our telegraph, and for a while we were obliged to treat everyone outside of our lines as an enemy."

And that is what General Bell advised all his soldiers and officers to do:

If a man was caught within 150 yards of a telegraph pole he was shot. On one occasion six Filipinos were found dead holding to a wire which they had wrapped around a tree. No one knew who shot them, but their fate was sufficient to keep any of their comrades from tampering with the lines again.

FROM THE MANILA FREEDOM.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a comparatively late issue of the Manila Freedom, a newspaper printed in Manila. It reached the United States but a day or two ago. Suffice it to say that unless it was loyal it could not be printed in Manila, because that is the land of the alien and sedition laws initiated by Spain and adopted by the Philippine Commission. From this paper, which is edited by Edward F. O'Brien, under the date of Tuesday, April 22, 1902, I read the following editorial upon the subject of torture:

THE USE OF TORTURE.

Public feeling at home regarding the rumors of tortures inflicted on Filipinos by American officers and soldiers is described by press dispatches to be at the boiling point. General Smith, Major Glenn, and a score of other officers are to be tried by court-martial in case grounds are found, and the matter is to be cleaned up. This is the inevitable result of warfare. Mankind is human, and in the heat of a desperate contest are liable to go to extremes. The provocation is at times enormous, and the individuals can usually fully justify their acts to their own consciences. They are, however, liable to forget that the time is surely coming when they will be compelled to justify their acts to their compatriots at home, who are not viewing the matter from the passionate view point engendered by warfare, but from the view point of the fellow at home, who has not seen his comrades murdered and tortured and who, therefore, can not justify retaliation.

As a matter of fact there has been extensive employment in these islands of the "water cure" and of various other measures for the extortion of confession. There is not the slightest use of denying the fact. There are a thousand witnesses ready to testify to it in case it becomes compulsory or necessary. In a great majority of cases no permanent harm has been done by the employment of these measures, but, on the contrary, information has been gained which has been of the greatest service in bringing about peace. The enemy has been treacherous in the extreme, and sometimes the safety and very lives of the garrisons have depended upon knowing the truth. As a measure of self-protection the truth has been extorted, even by the employment of the most extreme measures.

The evil of the employment of these measures had been in the irresponsibility of many who have applied them; many baby lieutenants, who should have been back under the corrective influence of their parents, have had the lives of many people in their hands, and if one happened to be vindictive or naturally cruel, the evil which resulted has been great. The innocent have suffered in many instances. The most revolting cases are, sad to say, more than rumors.

At the end of all wars there comes a time of recrimination. It came at the end of the Spanish-American war, it came at the end of the rebellion, and it has come at the end of every war known to creation. The excesses committed in the heat of the strife have been expiated in the after-cooling of public sentiment. This is one of the penalties of the military profession. A few officers will undoubtedly be cashiered, more will be reprimanded, the matter will be the sensation of the day, and then it will be forgotten. The Army will writhe under the lash, but the time for healing will not be far off.

It is deplorable that the water cure and many worse tortures have been employed by the American forces in the Philippine insurrection, but the fact remains that they have been employed. There is only one thing to do. Stand up like men and show the provocation and the necessity for retaliatory measures of the sort. There is no use for generals in the States to deny that the reports are true. There is no use to attempt to gloss over the facts. They have been buried at the bottom, but in course of time they have risen near to the top. They will eventually proclaim the truth to the world, and it is better to meet the issue like men than evade it and finally have the truth arise and confront us.

In admitting the fact that these measures have been employed, the fact must not be lost sight of that they were never officially permitted, and that there is no one really responsible except the individuals who employed them. The fact must be also realized that, while there were many officers who used these measures and openly bragged of them, there was an overwhelming majority of the officers of the United States Army who never for a moment countenanced this sort of thing, and who conducted warfare in their districts like gentlemen, like Americans, and like Christians.

So say I, Mr. President. There is no doubt in the world but that the majority of the American officers and privates conducted the war after the fashion, and only after the fashion of civilized nations and like gentlemen. There were enough of the other kind, under lax discipline, under the tutelage of such men as Bell and Smith and Waller, who carried desolation in their wake, leaving nothing but a trail of fire and blood wherever they went.

ONE-THIRD OF THE POPULATION OF ONE PROVINCE DEAD.

Mr. President, we also have the official report of the acting governor of Batangas, I think it was. More than one-third of the people of that province, he declares, have died since the war commenced, died from battle and wounds and starvation and disease.

Think of it! As the logical outcome of the kind of war that has been carried on 100,000 Filipino people of one province are now in their graves out of a population of but 300,000.

MAJOR GARDENER'S REPORT.

Then we have the story of Major Gardener. I look for Major Gardener to be made an example of. I have little question but that mysteriously the word has gone forth from headquarters that the truth must not be made known. Those who have been before us have given pretty clear evidence that there is a reign of terror over officers and privates as regards the methods of warfare which prevents those in the service from telling what they know.

SENATOR HALE'S INTERVIEW.

How long, Mr. President, are these things to continue? That this was to be a war of subjugation was foretold. In going over the files of newspapers I came across an Associated Press telegram from Washington, dated February 7, 1899, sending an interview with the broad-minded, humane, and generous Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. He at that time predicted what this war was to be. I read it because it may recall to the minds of many Senators the things that were said and thought in those days when the news of the first conflict was flashed beneath the ocean to this country. It reads:

WASHINGTON, February 6.

Senator HALE gave to-day to the Associated Press his impressions concerning the effec tof the battle of Manila on the treaty. He said:

"I am not surprised at the occurrence. If the treaty had been made as it ought to have been made, putting the Philippines on the same basis as Cuba, no trouble would have arisen, or if the managers of the treaty had consented to an amendment on this line there would have been no trouble of this kind. Or, still further, if they had agreed to the passage of a joint resolution declaring that Congress did not expect permanent occupation, trouble would have been avoided. But the truth is that underneath the expansion newspapers and back of the movements of the leaders of the expansion cause is the determination to be content with nothing but permanent annexation."

The foresight of a prophet, the knowledge of a sure reader of human nature and conduct. He continues:

This means a protracted war of subjugation against the people of the Philippine Islands. The ratification of the treaty means no peace, but immediate war. We must send more troops and more ships to Manila and must undertake the immense job of conquering the people who are trying to establish a government of their own.

THE WAR FOR SUBJUGATION SHOULD CEASE.

Mr. President, if these things are to cease, if the American mind is to be restored to its normal state of love for country and liberty and independence not alone for ourselves, but for all struggling peoples; if the high standard of national duty shall be raised again, this curse upon our country must be stopped. The method is plain and simple. Give to the Filipino people what more than one hundred and twenty-five years ago we demanded for ourselves. Give to the Filipino people that for which they gathered together, at the request of Dewey, under the banner of Aguinaldo, as an ally of the United States, in the expectation of the freedom for which they yearned. They did more than their share in the struggle that followed to drive the Spaniards from their islands.

Grant them the simple right to elect their own officers, to enact their own laws, to struggle under their own flag, and to work out their own destinies.

If that shall be done, Mr. President, there will be no further discord between the Filipino millions and ourselves. There will be nothing but rejoicing in every American village and hamlet and at every American fireside. The glad shoutings of admiration for American greatness and magnanimity that went up when the American flag was hauled down from Cuba and the new republican government was inaugurated will be repeated in every republic of the world and by every human being who loves and sighs for liberty.

NEUTRALITY AND INVIOLABILITY.

Mr. President, before closing I will refer briefly to the section in the minority bill by which the President is invited to enter into an agreement with Great Britain, France, Russia, and such other powers as he may think fit, for the purpose of securing to the Philippine Islands neutrality and absolute inviolability of their soil. I intended to read from the history of Switzerland to show that it is enjoying its present independence largely as the result of just such an agreement between the great powers of Europe in 1815 at the close of the great wars against the French nation. But I will now simply refer to it.

When, after the wars against France, they were settling the boundaries of nations, the ministers of the five great powers entered into an agreement in which they declared that Switzerland should be neutral and its soil remain inviolate forever. As a result of that agreement Switzerland has grown and prospered, and no adventurous nation has laid its hand upon it. Later, in 1839, nearly the same nations entered into an agreement by which the inviolability and neutrality of Belgium were established, and from that time that little country has stood with head erect, free from fearing interference from any of the greater powers.

We prefer to declare for such an agreement rather than for a United States protectorate. It has been well said that giving the Filipinos independence and yet holding ourselves responsible for their course toward other nations would be liable to drag our country into war and future troubles. So we concluded, if they shall receive their independence, to enter into an agreement between this country and other nations, by which the Philippine Islands shall be declared neutral territory and their soil made inviolate forever.

It is idle to say that such an agreement might not be readily secured. I have no question—when we consider our country's present prestige among the nations and their desire to win our favor, when such an agreement would make perpetual the open door such as exists in the Philippines to-day and must continue if we hold them—but that such an arrangement may be made. Then, with that accomplished, who can doubt that the Filipinos, freed from foreign interference, faced with the example of Cuba's success, and with the strong incentives existing for forbearance and heroic struggles, who can doubt but the Filipinos will establish an independent government quite commensurate for their purposes and quite equal to their qualifications, and that is all the government that should be expected from any people.

If we are to hold the Filipino people until they are our equals in intelligence, in self-control, and respect for authority, then the time for their independence will never come, for, as we advance, our standard will advance, and the same objection will exist 500 years from now that exists to-day.

So, Mr. President, the minority of the Philippine Committee come before the Senate asking the Senate's support for the measure which it presents. It is based upon the American principle of self-government; it is reasonable in all of its provisions; it saves the Philippine Islands from foreign interference; it gives to the people of the islands an opportunity to experiment in the art of governing themselves without danger to any other nation or any other people.

No one can doubt, Mr. President, but if the minority bill should become a law, that within less than a year, aye, within less than ninety days, an opportunity would exist for the President of the United States to declare that absolute peace reigns in the islands.

In my mind's eye, Mr. President, I can see Governor Taft or Admiral Dewey or General Miles, with the president of the new republic by his side, hauling down the American flag at Manila, and hoisting the flag of the new republic in its stead. And then, as was the case with Cuba, the President of France and the presidents of all other republics will send congratulations, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] will, as he did the other day, read the Associated Press account of that inspiring scene, and have it made a part of the records of this body, to the glory of the American people forever. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

APPENDIX 1.

The extracts of cruelties in the Philippine Islands quoted in the petition of New York clergymen to the ministers of the country.

[Appendix No. 11.]

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF MAJ. FRANK B. M'KENNA, INSPECTOR-GENERAL, UNITED STATES VOLUNTEERS, ON CHARGES AGAINST MACABEBE SOLDIERS IN MONTALBAN.

MANILA, P. I., March 5, 1901.

* * * A great many more witnesses were anxious to be heard, but I ascertained that their testimony was generally of the same character as the above, and consisted of assaults, extortions, rape, and attempted rape, but in no cases except those mentioned could the assailants be identified, but all stated positively they were Macabebe soldiers.

Among other witnesses, seven young women from Montalban appeared before me at San Mateo, and said they were afraid to return to their homes in Montalban; that upon the arrival of the Macabebe soldiers propositions were made to them which they declined; unless they consented, they were told, they would be killed and the houses of their families burned. They were afraid to complain and in fright fled to San Mateo. * * *

Capt. F. H. Cameron, Philippine cavalry, commanding officer at Montalban, believes that the greater part of the complaints on the part of the people are fabricated, by reason of their intense hatred for his soldiers and because on the night of February 25 a number of the friends and relatives of the principal people were found among the alleged insurgent recruits discovered. There may be something in this, but I hardly think it would cause over 300 families to leave town, as the presidente of San Mateo declared to me was the case. Moreover, the witnesses that I examined impressed me for the most part with their earnestness, and on some were still visible the bruises of alleged assault. At least 200 people desired to make complaints, and I examined over 50, until I found that the evidence was merely cumulative. There can be no doubt, whatever the cause, that the utmost dislike and hatred is felt on the part of the people toward the present Macabebe garrison at Montalban. It probably had its origin in the fierce tribal rancor that exists between Tagalo and Macabebe, but has unquestionably been largely increased by the conduct of the soldiers themselves, und unless the sternest discipline is imposed upon these native troops by the American officers their usefulness as a pacifying agent for the United States in the vicinity of Montalban or San Mateo is gone.

* * * * * * * * *

In conclusion, I find, if the almost unanimous testimony of the natives is to be considered, that the Macabebe garrison at Montalban has committed numerous outrages against them; that these acts of violence commenced almost with the arrival of the Macabebes and occurred at intervals until the night of February 25, when on that night they must have indulged themselves in a saturnalia, almost, of rapine and violence under the guise of looking for insurgents; that the responsibility for the acts on the night of February 25 belongs to First Lieut. Dennis P. Quinlin; that the subsequent responsibility for not making searching investigation and bringing to punishment the guilty is due to Captain Cameron, Philippine Cavalry.

The sternest discipline should henceforth be imposed upon the Macabebe soldiers to prevent repetition of the acts that have been related.

[Senate proceedings, p. 1761.]

Capt. Duncan Henderson, Forty-second Infantry, United States Volunteers, commanding San Mateo, being duly sworn, states that he knows from his own knowledge nothing of the reported acts of aggression of the Macabebes, but that it is his firm belief that the people are afraid of them on account of their many acts of robbery and violence. He has known the people about here for some time, and believes their statements in this respect. In the last week he reports that the presidente of San Mateo told him that between 200 and 300 families had left Montalban and are now residing in San Mateo, Mariquina, or Manila. He states that if some investigation had not been made into the constant reports that he heard of acts of violence toward the people in the post of the Macabebes he deemed it his duty to report the matter to the district commander.

[Proceedings Senate committee, p. 1753, accompanying above reports.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT NORTHERN LUZON,
Manila, March 14, 1901.

* * * I do not agree with the district commander in the opinion that these crimes are the result of the bitter feeling between Macabebes and Tagalos. All native troops, when they can escape the immediate control of their officers, are liable to commit murders, and many will rob and ravish whenever they will have the opportunity.

The squadron of Philippine Cavalry was sent to Montalban, San Mateo, and vicinity to replace the Twenty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, when withdrawn, to be sent home for muster out. No other troops were available for duty there. The necessity of affairs here oblige us to employ native troops, and these Malay savages will always be liable to commit crime alike disgraceful to our service and an outrage upon humanity. All engaged in the crimes related in these reports will be punished to the full extent of military law, after due trial and conviction.

In this connection I desire to call attention to the necessity for the greatest care and caution in the organization of native troops. We can rely in some measure upon the loyalty of the Macabebes. There are, so far as I know, no other tribes that would not be liable to turn against us whenever they imagined that there was any prospect of successful treachery or treason.

LOYD WHEATON,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

[Proceedings Senate committee, p. 1750—Transmitting above reports.]

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE PHILIPPINES,
Manila, P. I., March 16, 1901.

SIR: The accompanying record is submitted as indicating the difficulties in disciplining native troops and suggesting that the organization thereof, as provided by recent law, should be conducted under very conservative restrictions and very careful administrative control. The employment of a large number of natives has been absolutely necessary in order to relieve the volunteers and return them to the United States in time. The Macabebes, as far as loyalty to the United States is concerned, are absolutely reliable. I therefore authorized the employment of 1,500 as an emergency measure of temporary nature to tide over the transitory period, well knowing at the time that we were taking considerable risk as to their getting out of hand and committing excesses.

In spite of every precaution the deplorable incidents occurred which are narrated in accompanying papers, and all that is left for us to do in the premises is to apply punitive remedies, which will be done without mercy to the guilty parties. * * *

Very respectfully,

ARTHUR MACARTHUR,
Major-General, U. S. A., Commanding.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

[Proceeding Senate committee, pp. 1727-1730.]

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD J. DAVIS.

Q. When did you first arrive at Igbaras?

A. I had charge of that detachment at Igbaras. I do not remember the date I went over there. I was in Igbaras myself about seven months, and I had charge of the detachment there, a detachment of 15 men.

* * * * * * *

Q. About how large a town was Igbaras?

A. I should say it had about 10,000 inhabitants.

Q. Were there any regulars there at your station?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did any arrive on or about the 27th of November?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?

A. Well, I should judge that there were 75 or more.

* * * * * * *

Q. You may state whether or not the president or mayor of Igbaras was taken into custody that day.

A. He was.

Q. And where was he brought?

A. He was brought to the convent. I went for him myself.

Q. By whose order was he arrested?

A. Orders from Captain Glenn.

* * * * * * *

Q. After he arrived there, about what time in the morning was it?

A. It was about 7 o'clock, I should judge.

Q. After he was taken there what was done with him?

A. He was taken out into a big hall in the convent there, his clothes were all taken off, his hands were tied behind him, and he was asked for information in regard to runners being sent up into the mountains; asked if the scouts had arrived there. He would not give this information, so they took him to this water tank. It was a tank holding about a hundred gallons of water. They held him under the faucet, and he was made to take this water into his mouth at the command of Captain Glenn.

* * * * * * *

By Senator RAWLINS:

Q. How was his mouth kept open?

A. It was kept open with a stick; but I can not describe just how the stick was, because they had their hands over his mouth most of the time.

Q. And after he was filled up with water what else was done with him?

A. After they filled him up with water he swelled way up, and then these two soldiers would roll the water out of him. They had an interpreter over him, and they asked him if he would tell what information they were after. He told some, and then after they released him and he had walked away and they were going out in the mountains somewhere, and they got down stairs, they wanted further information out of him in regard to these runners going out into the mountains, and he would not give it. So they took him down right there, and they took a syringe and squirted water up his nostrils. He would not give the information then, and they put salt in the water. Then he was willing to tell.

Q. Was he thrown down the last time?

A. Yes, sir; his clothes were not taken off, but he was thrown down on the outside of the convent.

* * * * * * *

Q. Sergeant Davis, you had been there how many months prior to this time? How long had you been at this town?

A. I should judge about seven months.

Q. Had you had any trouble there?

A. No, sir; we had no trouble there at all.

Q. Had any attack been made on your troops?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any American soldiers killed or wounded?

A. No, sir.

Q. Had any of the inhabitants, as far as you know, given any offense?

A. No, sir.

* * * * * * *

Q. You say there were about 10,000 people in this town of Igbaras?

A. Yes, sir; the town was burned——

Q. How soon was it burned?

A. After the column went up into the mountains, and about half an hour after they returned the town was burned.

Q. Do you know by whose order it was burned?

A. By order of Captain Glenn.

Q. Were any of the houses left unburned?

A. Yes, sir; there were, I should judge, 15 houses left in the town.

Q. What became of the occupants of those houses that were burned?

A. They were driven out into the lots.

Q. Were they men, women, and children?

A. Yes, sir.

By Senator RAWLINS:

Q. Were there a good many women and children?

A. Yes, sir; there were.

[Proceedings Senate committee, pp. 1706-1774, 1778, 1780, 1781-1784.]

TESTIMONY OF GROVER FLINT IN RELATION TO THE "WATER CURE."

* * * * * * *

The WITNESS. I witnessed quite a number of cases, because I was acting as a sort of an aid to the the officer in command of our two companies, Major Geary. The Macabebes who were detailed with us were not under a commissioned officer at this time. They were with us, and they were under a sergeant.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he a Macabebe?

The WITNESS. He was a white man. He was an American.

Senator BURROWS. Was he in the United States service?

The WITNESS. Yes; he was a regular soldier, but detailed. I do not remember his name, sir. And I saw this being done, and I told Major Geary. I went over and said to Major Geary that no commissioned officer seemed to be in charge there or seemed to be observing it, and that I would stay there for a while if he wished me to. He said: "All right, if you want to." So in that way I happened to see this performed on about, I would say, something over twenty men. This was on the second morning. * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Did the men subjected to this torture die?

The WITNESS. I never saw a man die. But I saw a man who I thought was going to die once, and I had indirect evidence that a man had died in another case; but nothing that I could testify to. * * * I saw men thrown down and heard their groans and that sort of thing.

Q. Please tell the committee what you actually saw.

A. That is, you want me to describe one individual case of a man being put through the water cure? * * * A man is thrown down on his back and three or four men sit or stand on his arms and legs and hold him down, and either a gun barrel or a rifle barrel or a carbine barrel or a stick as big as a belaying pin * * * is simply thrust into his jaws and his jaws are thrust back, and, if possible, a wooden log or stone is put under his head—under his neck, so he can be held firmly. * * * He is simply held down, and then water is poured onto his face, down his throat and nose from a jar, and that is kept up until the man gives some sign of giving in or becomes unconscious, and when he becomes unconscious he is simply rolled aside and he is allowed to come to. That is as near a description as I think I can give. All the cases were alike I saw on that occasion.

By Senator CULBERSON:

Q. Is the water allowed to remain in the man, or is it in any way expelled from him by any method?

A. Well, I know that in a great many cases, in almost every case, the men have been a little roughly handled; they were rolled aside rudely, so that water was expelled. A man suffers tremendously; there is no doubt about it. His suffering must be that of a man who is drowning, but who can not drown. * * *

By Senator BEVERIDGE:

* * * * * * *

Q. Nor did you give any orders to our soldiers who participated to stop their participations?

A. No. All I did was in one or two cases where men who were obviously not insurrectos were being put through this I gave orders to let them go; but simply my whole witnessing it was rather in the nature of seeing that it did not go to any gross extreme. * * *

By Senator BURROWS:

Q. In this case, where you say the water cure was administered to some 20 persons, I want to ask you what offense these people had committed.

A. They were supposed to be insurrectos. I did not at the time know enough of the language to understand the conversation between them and the Macabebes who were putting them through this ordeal. All I know is that they would take a man and throw him down and work on him for a while, and then he would run off and get a gun or a bolo. * * *

By Senator PATTERSON:

Q. About how many were subjected to this torture the first night?

A. According to my best judgment, I should think about 30 were put through it the first evening, because it kept on for a long time until daybreak. I should say 20 the next morning, under my personal observation.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see it done on any other occasion?

A. Yes; once up north of San Miguel.

Senator CULBERSON. On how many people was it done there?

The WITNESS. I think about 15 men were put through on that occasion.

Senator BEVERIDGE. Did they get the guns there?

The WITNESS. No; they did not get any guns at all.

* * * * * * *

By Senator BURROWS:

Q. Was any inquiry made before the torture was inflicted as to whether or not they had arms?

A. I do not know. No; they seemed to be put through as a matter of routine. * * * Finally the man would give some sign that he had yielded, and then he would be allowed to get up and two of them would run off with him to his house or little bamboo thicket, and they would then come back with a gun or bolo or some ammunition.

Q. He would be able to get up and run with these two men, would he, directly after this treatment?

A. He would unless he was put through a very hard siege. * * * What I mean to say is that some men would yield almost instantly, and would not be put through as brutal methods as I have described, while other men would have more courage or, perhaps, would be more ignorant, and they would be put through to the stage where they were unconscious or almost drowned.

By Senator MCCOMAS:

Q. Did that happen to a few or many of these men?

A. A rather small proportion, because by far the greater part, I should say probably two-thirds, of the people I saw did not get this severest treatment. In those cases it did not get to the point of great brutality. They simply would get up and run off and get their guns; and other men fought it out and would not yield until they had been subjected to severe treatment, and there was one man who absolutely refused.

Senator DIETRICH. You think it was the men who were the most ignorant who resisted the hardest, and those who seemed more intelligent yielded quickly and did not receive such harsh treatment?

The WITNESS. No; I think the men who were more courageous or perhaps did not have any guns suffered the most. By ignorant I mean that they did not really know anything to tell us.

Senator CARMACK. You say you saw one man who never did yield?

* * * * * * *

The WITNESS. One man was pointed out to me as being an alleged insurgent lieutenant, and he was pointed out as being absolutely unyielding.

Senator MCCOMAS. You did not see that?

The WITNESS. I saw his condition. They had worked pretty hard on him. He was pointed out simply as being a most gallant man.

Senator BEVERIDGE. When this man was pointed out, what condition was he in?

The WITNESS. He was almost fainting. I did not see him worked upon, but I simply saw him being led around, and I think Major Geary sent word not to have anything to do with that man any more. I mean to let him pass, not to bother him any more, to let him go.

* * * * * * *

Q. You say that in the cases of old men their teeth were knocked out?
A. Yes; I saw that in one or two cases.
Q. On account of the gag?
A. Yes; it was thrust in pretty roughly in that instance.
Q. When they got this gun barrel or stick in a man's mouth, how did they hold that there?
A. Two men would get on either side of him.
Q. And hold it in?
A. Simply hold it down, and half a dozen men would sit over a man.

* * * * * * *

Senator BEVERIDGE. * * * I ask you why, in these instances, you did not stop it, since you did stop it in instances where you thought it improper?
A. The only reason I thought it was improper was because I thought it seemed to me that the men who were being subjected to this treatment were not men who could give any assistance or advice or had any guns; they were men who appeared to me to be obviously noncombatants.
Q. Those men were let off?
A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

The WITNESS. The whole attitude of Major Geary's command, from top to bottom, was absolutely passive in this matter. We were not interfering at all. These Macabebe scouts went there and watered these men. * * * We sat around and watched it, and in some cases our men volunteered to help it along.

* * * * * * *

By Senator CULBERSON:

Q. In that connection I will ask you to state if you saw any Filipino towns burned by American soldiers?
A. Yes; I have seen hamlets, small towns of 50 or 60 houses burned.
Q. How many houses?
A. Fifty or sixty houses—what they call barrios.
Q. Were the people who lived in these houses engaged in peaceful pursuits?
A. Apparently, yes.
Q. And they were burned by the American troops?
A. They were.
Q. Did you know of the burning of your own knowledge?
A. Absolutely.
Q. You saw it?
A. I saw it.
Q. By American soldiers?
A. Yes; I saw it.

Senator PATTERSON. What became of the men, women, and children that were occupying those hamlets?

The WITNESS. I think the idea was at that time that the burning of these villages would drive the people to the woods or to the towns; a policy of concentration, I think.

By Senator CULBERSON:

Q. Do you know who they borrowed that method from?
A. Yes, sir; I saw it done in Cuba.

* * * * * * *

Q. Under whose authority?
A. Under General Weyler, I believe.
Senator BEVERIDGE. Were you in Cuba?
The WITNESS. Yes; I was there in 1893.

[From proceedings Senate committee, p. 884.]

REPORT OF MAJ. CORNELIUS GARDENER, PROVINCIAL GOVERNOR OF TAYABAS.

DECEMBER 16, 1901.

Since I have been governor I have traveled all over this province with no other escort than natives. * * * As civil governor I feel it my duty to say that it is my firm conviction that the United States troops should at the earliest opportunity be concentrated in one or two garrisons, if it is thought desirable that the good sentiment and loyalty which formerly existed to the United States Government among the people of this province should be conserved and encouraged.

Being in close touch with the people, having visited all the pueblos one or more times, having lived with them in their homes, I know that such a sentiment once existed. Of late, by reason of the conduct of the troops, such as the extensive burning of barrios in trying to lay waste the country so that the insurgents can not occupy it, the torturing of natives by so-called "water cure" and other methods in order to obtain information, the harsh treatment of natives generally, and the failure of inexperienced, lately appointed lieutenants commanding posts to distinguish between those who are friendly and those unfriendly and treating every native as if he were, whether or no, an insurrecto at heart, this favorable sentiment above referred to is being fast destroyed and a deep hatred toward us engendered. If these things need be done they had best be done by native troops, so that the people of the United States will not be credited therewith. * * *

The course now being pursued in this province and in the provinces of Batangas, Laguna, and Samar is, in my opinion, sowing the seeds for a perpetual revolution, or at least preparing the people of these provinces to rise up in revolution against us hereafter whenever a good opportunity offers. Under present conditions the political situation in this province is slowly retrograding, and the American sentiment is decreasing and we are daily making permanent enemies.

In the course above referred to, troops make no distinction often between the property of those natives who are insurgents or insurgent sympathizers and the property of those who heretofore have risked their lives by being loyal to the United States and giving us information against their countrymen in arms. Often every house in a barrio is burned.

APPENDIX 2.

Quotations from General Otis's testimony read by Senator Carmack in the course of Mr. Patterson's speech, and referred to therein.

REASONS FOR DEVIATING FROM PRESIDENT'S INSTRUCTIONS.

Senator CARMACK. The point I was coming at was this: That you thought it better to eliminate all such expressions referring to sovereignty and right of occupation, and so forth, from that report?
General OTIS. Yes.
Senator CARMACK. And in your report you said, "After considering the President's proclamation." Of course, technically, it was not a proclamation?
General OTIS. No, it was not; that word is not properly used, if I used it.
Senator CARMACK. I understand. And you said you felt you would be justified in so amending the paper, and so on?
General OTIS. Yes.
Senator CARMACK. And leaving out those expressions?
General OTIS. Yes.
Senator CARMACK. I want to ask you if it was your object in doing that to eliminate any words significant of future political domination, as you say here in your report? Was that your idea in suppressing the word "sovereignty," for instance?
General OTIS. I suppressed the word "sovereignty" on account of the peculiar meaning that the Filipinos attached to it.

FILIPINO UNDERSTANDING OF "SOVEREIGNTY" AND "PRESTIGE."

Senator ALLISON. They did not understand it as you understood it?
General OTIS. Aguinaldo immediately said: "You are coming now right under a domination equal to that of Spain and you will be in the same condition." "Sovereignty" was a word that was used and "prestige" was a great word they used. They had peculiar significance for them.
Senator CARMACK. You think, then, they attach some peculiar and sinister meaning to the word "sovereignty?"
General OTIS. They endeavor to attach the meaning which the word conveyed to them while under the domination of Spain.

INSTRUCTIONS OF THE PRESIDENT AND PROCLAMATION OF GENERAL OTIS COMPARED.

Senator CARMACK. I notice here, in comparing the instructions of the President with your proclamation, that you not only struck out the word "sovereignty," but all language that bore an equivalent meaning or that seemed to suggest sovereignty. You not only struck out the word "sovereignty," but all language that seemed to be suggestive of sovereignty or of control and domination by the United States. For instance, in the President's—— General OTIS. I want the two compared, if I could get hold of the President's instructions.
Senator CARMACK. I thought you said you had them.
General OTIS. No; I have my proclamation, but not the President's instructions.
Senator ALLISON. The clerk is trying to find them.

INSTANCES OF ELIMINATION OF LANGUAGE OF PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

Senator CARMACK. According to this report I have here before me, there occurs in the President's proclamation this language:
"With the signature of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain by their respective plenipotentiaries at Paris on the 10th instant, and as a result of the victories of the American arms, the future control, disposition, and government of the Philippine Islands are ceded to the United States."
All that language you struck out?
General OTIS. All that language, yes. That is a sort of a preamble to the President's instructions. After finishing with the preamble, then he directs us to issue a proclamation stating to the people so and so. That proclamation was issued.
Senator CARMACK. You inserted in place of that:
"That in the war against Spain the United States forces came here to destroy the power of that nation and to give the blessings of peace and individual freedom to the Philippine people."
Further on in the proclamation you strike out the following language:
"All others will be brought within the lawful rule we have assumed."
Before that there is recited in the President's instructions:
"All persons who, either by active aid or by honest submission, cooperate with the Government of the United States to give effect to these beneficent purposes will receive the reward of its support and protection."
That appears in your proclamation also, and after that you strike out:
"All others will be brought within the lawful rule we have assumed, with firmness, if need be, but without severity in so far as may be possible."
You strike out that language from the President's instructions.
You also strike out the following from the President's instructions:
"Within the domain of military authority, which necessarily is and must remain supreme in the ceded territory until the legislation of the United States shall otherwise provide."
General OTIS. Is that in the preamble, or is that in the proclamation?

INSTANCES OF CHANGES IN LANGUAGE OF PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION BY GENERAL OTIS.

Senator CARMACK. It can hardly be called the preamble. You say instead of that—
"The President of the United States has assumed that the municipal laws of the country in respect to private rights and property and the repression of crime are to be considered as continuing in force in so far as they be applicable to a free people."
You insert these words:
"In so far as they may be applicable to a free people."
Then again, after reciting, in the language of the President, that the municipal laws of the territory in respect to private rights and property and the repression of crime are to be considered as continuing in force and be administered by the ordinary tribunals so far as practicable, and that the operation of civil and municipal government is to be performed, and so on, you then strike out the words referring to these officers, "as may accept the supremacy of the United States by taking the oath of allegiance."
You substitute therefor the language:
"Are to be performed by such officers as wish to accept the assistance of the United States"—
Striking out the words "supremacy of the United States" and the reference to the oath of allegiance.
Senator ALLISON. Why would it not be a good idea to have the General explain about this as you go along?
Senator CARMACK. I want you to have it all together; I want to put in the whole thing and then ask him about it.
Then, again, reading from the instructions of the President:
"All ports and places in the Philippine Islands in the actual possession of the land and naval forces of the United States will be opened to the commerce of all friendly nations."
You strike out the words "actual possession of the land and naval forces of the United States," and you simply say:
"The ports of the Philippine Islands shall be open to the commerce of all foreign nations."
Further on, reading from the President's instructions:
"In the fulfillment of the high mission, supporting the temperate administration of affairs, for the greatest good of the governed, etc."
The language of your proclamation is:
"In the fulfillment of this high mission, while upholding the temporary administration of affairs for the greatest good of the governed."
And then you add——
General OTIS. The President concludes his instructions in the following language, and I quote from the President's instructions——
Senator CARMACK. And then you insert:
"It is also my belief that it is the intention of the United States Government to draw from the Filipino people so much of the military force of the islands as is possible and consistent with a free and well-constituted government of the country, etc."

Concluding your proclamation with this language:

"I am also convinced that it is the intention of the United States Government to seek the establishment of a most liberal government for the islands, in which the people themselves shall have as full representation as the maintenance of law and order will permit, and which shall be susceptible of development, on lines of increased representation and the bestowal of increased powers, into a government as free and independent as is enjoyed by the most favored provinces of the world."

You change the President's language also by inserting other language in several places. For instance, you say:

"The United States forces came here to destroy the power of that nation and to give the blessings of peace and individual freedom to the Philippine people."

That is inserted in your proclamation. The words "freedom to the Philippine people" are inserted.

And again, in speaking of the continuance of the local or municipal laws, you add the words "in so far as they may be applicable to a free people."

General OTIS. That was most necessary in order to free prisons.

Senator CARMACK. You not only omit the word "sovereignty," but you omitted, did you not, all words that seemed to be significant of future political domination and inserted words suggestive at least of a contrary purpose?

General OTIS. No. You find this language here:

"I am also convinced that it is the intention of the United States Government to seek the establishment of the most liberal government for the islands, in which the people themselves shall have as full representation as the maintenance of law and order will permit, and which shall be susceptible of development, etc."

FILIPINOS' HORROR OF THE WORD SOVEREIGNTY.

Senator CARMACK. I understand that; but you say that the Filipinos have been taught to regard the word "sovereignty" with a peculiar horror.

General OTIS. Yes.

Senator CARMACK. What about the words "control," "disposition," and "government," which are also struck out of the President's instructions?

General OTIS. Will you permit me to make a few remarks right here?

Senator CARMACK. Certainly.

Further on the following occurred:

General OTIS. I was fighting very hard for peace, and I struck out words which I thought Mabini might use to excite the people.

Senator CARMACK. That meant that any words that could convey to the people the idea that they were to be under the political control and domination of the United States would excite the people, and you did not want that idea to get to them? Is that your meaning?

General OTIS. Yes; that is, I did not wish to make use of words by which Mabini might excite the people just at that time. This proclamation was issued long before the ratification of the treaty, if you will notice.

APPENDIX 3.

AN EPITOME OF HISTORICAL EVENTS, WITH OFFICIAL AND OTHER CORRESPONDENCE CONNECTED WITH THE ACQUISITION OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

[Prepared by Erving Winslow, secretary of the New England Anti-Imperialistic League.]

HISTORY OF THE PHILIPPINE POLICY.

PREFATORY NOTE.—Prof. Theodore S. Woolsey, in an article on "Our relations with China," printed April 28, 1900, recalled that—

"The importance of retaining the Philippines, when the treaty of peace with Spain was being negotiated, and later when its ratification was in question, was urged not only on account of their own fertility and resources, but also and particularly because their fortunate situation would aid this country in extending its trade with China."

No one can understand the genesis of the Philippine acquisition by the United States who does not recall to mind the Chinese situation in the fall of 1897 and the winter of 1897-98. For, as Professor Woolsey has intimated, China furnished the chief motive for the McKinley Administration's Philippine policy.

In his annual message to Congress, December 5, 1898, President McKinley said:

"The United States has not been an indifferent spectator of the extraordinary events transpiring in the Chinese Empire, whereby portions of its maritime provinces are passing under the control of various European powers."

Those events are worth recalling. On October 18, 1897, the news was telegraphed over the world that the Russian fleet had entered Port Arthur with the intention of wintering there. In November, 1897, some German missionaries were murdered by Chinese in the province of Shantung, with the result that the German Government took forcible possession at once of Kiao Chou Bay, and then secured, by coercion of the Chinese Government, a ninety-nine years' lease of the same, and practically established a protectorate over Shantung Province. The United States Government was officially informed by Minister Denby, in a dispatch dated March 29, 1898, that a convention had been signed between Russia and China by which Port Arthur and Talienwan were ceded to Russia under a lease; and earlier still, on March 9, 1898, the Government was informed by Minister Denby of the terms of the settlement between Germany and China regarding Kiao Chou Bay.

A dispatch from Mr. Denby, dated April 5, 1898, stated that China had ceded Weihaiwei to Great Britain, and on April 20, 1898, Mr. Denby informed the Washington Government concerning the French occupation of Kwangchou Bay. All this information reached Washington in official form before the outbreak of the Spanish war (see diplomatic correspondence concerning China in House Doc. No. 1, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session), but the main facts were in the newspapers and before the public, in their most important bearings upon the status of China, as early as the autumn of 1897 and the winter of 1897-98. The threatened partition of China was a conspicuous topic of discussion during those months among publicists, statesmen, and diplomats. The commercial interests of the United States in China were repeatedly pointed out. The New York Tribune, on January 1, 1898, said editorially:

"The United States, too, has great interest in China and hopes to have greater when the annexation of Hawaii and the laying of the telegraphic cable shall have helped this country into the dominant rank in Pacific commerce to which it is naturally entitled."

There was even talk of going to war to prevent China's dismemberment by protectionist powers. Senator TELLER, of Colorado, in an interview January 3, 1898, said:

"It is our duty to prevent the dismemberment of China. We should join with Great Britain in a notice to Russia and Germany that dismemberment will not be permitted."

Thus the general oriental question was in the minds of the ruling statesmen of America in the winter preceding the Spanish war. The Administration, as President McKinley said later on to Congress, was not an "indifferent spectator" of the important events that took place on the coast of Asia. Meanwhile our relations with Spain concerning Cuba concentrated public attention, and these relations were growing more acute. In the same month, November, 1897, that German war ships entered Kiao Chou Bay the Government at Washington had been pointedly reminded of the interesting relation that existed between the Chinese question and the Cuban question through Spain's sovereignty in the Philippine Islands, an archipelago lying off the Chinese coast.

On November 3, 1897, Consul-General Wildman, at Hongkong, called the attention of the Department of State to the offer of an alliance that had been made by Agoncillo, agent of the Filipino insurgent junta, the alliance to be between the Philippine republic and the United States in the event of a war between the United States and Spain. (See p. 333, Senate Document No. 62, part 1, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.) This offer was declined by the United States Government in a dispatch by Mr. Cridler to Consul-General Wildman, dated December 15, 1897. The correspondence is important as showing that some five months, at least, before the outbreak of war with Spain our Government realized the delicate situation in the Philippines, and was also considering Philippine affairs at a time when the Chinese question was stirring the public mind of Europe, America, and Japan. It may also be asserted that the Washington Administration was at that early date also considering the possibilities of a military campaign in the Philippines, for in McClure's Magazine of October, 1899, Governor Roosevelt, who was Assistant Secretary of the Navy prior to the Spanish war, wrote as follows:

"It has been said that it was a mere accident that Dewey happened to be in command of the Asiatic Squadron when the war with Spain broke out. This is not the fact. He was sent to command it in the fall of 1897, because, "to use the very language employed at the time, it was deemed wise to have there a man 'who could go into Manila if necessary.'"

Having sketched the background in the Far East as it appeared to the Administration in the autumn of 1897 and the winter of 1897-98, we may now review the successive steps in the actual development of the policy of conquest and territorial acquisition in the Philippines.

1.

Explosion of the Maine in Habana Harbor February 15, 1898.

2.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, Secretary Long being absent from duty, on February 25, 1898, sent a dispatch to Commodore Dewey, of the Asiatic Squadron, in which he said:

"Order the squadron, except Monocacy, to Hongkong. Keep full of coal. In the event of declaration of war with Spain your duty will be to see that the Spanish squadron does not leave the Asiatic coast, and then offensive operations in the Philippine Islands."

[NOTE.—So far as is known this dispatch to Commodore Dewey, sent two months before the declaration of war, was the first sent by the United States Government with regard to a conquest of the Philippine Islands. Its historical importance is evident, since it proves that an offensive campaign in the archipelago was early planned to follow the destruction of the Spanish fleet.]

3.

Commodore Dewey, March 31, 1898, cabled from Hongkong to Washington:

"About 15,000 soldiers of all arms in all the islands, of which the majority are in the vicinity of Manila. The islands are now in a state of insurrection and my informants state that even Spanish soldiers, which constitute only a small part of the whole, are disaffected. Both ships and ports are in need of ammunition. I believe I am not overconfident in stating that with the squadron now at my command the vessels could be taken and the defenses of Manila reduced in one day. There is every reason to believe that with Manila taken, or even blockaded, the rest of the islands would fall either to the insurgents or ourselves, as they are only held through the support of the navy and are dependent upon Manila for supplies. Information has just reached me that there are 5,000 armed rebels in camp near Manila who are ready to assist us."

[NOTE.—This dispatch shows that Commodore Dewey, several weeks before war began, was placing bright assurances before the Government at Washington of a conquest of the archipelago that should take place after a naval battle. This dispatch is in harmony with the February instructions of the Government to the Commodore; it also foreshadows cooperation with the Filipino insurgents against Spain. It is worth nothing, too, that the Government, after the receipt of this dispatch, sent no word to Dewey cautioning him to limit his operations to establishing control of the sea. Meanwhile let us observe the course of the diplomatic correspondence between the Washington Government and its minister at Madrid, Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, bearing, at the same time, Dewey's dispatch of March 31 in mind. On that same day, March 31, Minister Woodford cabled to the President:

"Spanish pride will not permit the ministry to propose and offer an armistice (to the Cuban insurgents) which they really desire. * * * The ministry have gone as far as they dare to-day."

On April 3 Minister Woodford wrote to Washington:

"The Spanish minister for foreign affairs assures me that Spain will go as far and as fast as she can. The Austrian ambassador * * * says that he will guarantee that Spain will do this."

The diplomatic correspondence (House Document No. 1, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session) shows that the Spanish Government was moving as rapidly as possible to meet American demands regarding Cuba, and were delaying in the matter of the armistice in order not to outrun the movement of Spanish public opinion. Only a few days, however, were required for Spain to meet the Washington Government regarding the armistice which Secretary Day had suggested, and this was to be done in a way shrewdly calculated to gain the support of a Catholic people like the Spaniards. On April 5 Minister Woodford cabled to the President:

"Should the Queen proclaim the following before 12 o'clock noon of Wednesday, April 6, will you sustain the Queen, and can you prevent hostile action by Congress?

"'At the request of the Holy Father in this Passion Week, and in the name of Christ, I proclaim immediate and unconditional suspension of hostilities in the island of Cuba.

"'This suspension is to become immediately effective so soon as accepted by the insurgents in that island, and is to continue for the space of six months, to the 5th day of October, 1898.

"'I do this to give time for passions to cease, and in the sincere hope and belief that during this suspension permanent and honorable peace may be obtained between the insular government and those of my subjects who are now in rebellion against the authority of Spain. I pray the blessing of heaven upon this truce of God, which I now declare in His name and with the sanction of the Holy Father of all Christendom.'

"Please read this in the light of all my previous telegrams and letters. I believe that this means peace, which the sober judgment of our people will approve long before November, and which must be approved at the bar of history."

The reply to Minister Woodford, sent that same night, was remarkably cool and unresponsive, being as follows:

"The President highly appreciates the Queen's desire for peace. He can not assume to influence the action of the American Congress beyond the discharge of his constitutional duty in transmitting the whole matter to them with such recommendations as he deems necessary and expedient. * * * If armistice is offered by the Government of Spain, the President will communicate that fact to Congress. The President's message will go to Congress to-morrow. It will recount the conditions in Cuba. * * * He will not advise the recognition of the independence of the insurgents, but will recommend measures looking to the cessation of hostilities."

The important point in this connection is that this virtual breaking off of negotiations with Madrid for a peaceable solution of the Cuban problem (as was clearly implied in the announcement to General Woodford that the President's war message would go to Congress the next day, despite Spain's effort to meet American demands regarding an armistice) followed Dewey's dispatch of March 31, painting brightly the prospects of an easy conquest of the Philippines within five days. The inference is that Dewey's dispatch regarding the easy Philippine conquest had direct effect upon Washington diplomacy and made strongly for war.]

4.

Meeting at Singapore between United States Consul-General Pratt and Emilio Aguinaldo, April 24, 1898. On the same day Mr. Pratt cabled to Dewey at Hongkong:

"Aguinaldo, insurgent leader, here. Will come to Hongkong arrange with Commodore general cooperation insurgents Manila, if desired. Telegraph."

On the same day Dewey answered:

"Tell Aguinaldo to come soon as possible."

[NOTE.—In a cable to Secretary Day, dated April 27, 1898, Consul-General Pratt said:

"General Aguinaldo gone my instance Hongkong arrange with Dewey cooperation insurgents Manila."

On April 28, the next day, Mr. Pratt wrote to Secretary Day:

"I think that in arranging for his [Aguinaldo's] direct cooperation with the commander of our forces I have prevented possible conflict of action and facilitated the work of occupying and administering the Philippines."

Now, although Aguinaldo was in Hongkong as late as May 17, the Washington Government, already informed by Mr. Pratt of the new relations between Commodore Dewey and Aguinaldo, made no effort to prevent the Filipino leader from being transported to Luzon on an American ship and under American auspices.]

5.

Cable from Secretary Long to Commodore Dewey, April 24, 1898:

"War has commenced between the United States and Spain. Proceed at once to Philippine Islands. Commence operations at once, particularly against the Spanish fleet. You must capture vessels or destroy. Use utmost endeavors."

[NOTE.—This dispatch is notable in one respect. It implies that the "operations" to be begun are more comprehensive than the capture or destruction of the Spanish fleet. Thus it is in entire harmony with the instructions sent to Dewey February 25 and with Dewey's conception of the conquest of the archipelago, after having fought the sea fight.]

6.

War with Spain officially declared April 26, 1898.

7.

Battle of Manila Bay, May 1, 1898, in which Spanish sea power in the Orient is annihilated.

8.

General Miles, on May 3, 1898, immediately upon receiving the news of Dewey's naval victory, writes to the Secretary of War recommending that some 5,000 troops, under command of Gen. T. M. Anderson, "be sent to occupy the Philippine Islands." On May 4, 1898, the President approves General Miles's recommendation, as follows:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 4, 1898.

"The troops designated by General Miles, if approved by the Secretary of War, should be assembled at San Francisco, Cal., for such service as may be ordered hereafter.

"WILLIAM MCKINLEY."

9.

On May 16, 1898, after seeing Commodore Dewey's dispatch of May 13, General Miles makes a second recommendation, increasing the size of the army to be sent to the Philippines, "in order to make the United States forces as strong and effective as possible, with a view to its maintaining our possession and our flag on the Philippine Islands."

10.

On May 17, 1898, Gen. Wesley Merritt, who had been appointed commander of the military force to be sent to the Philippines, writes to the War Department, protesting that the force to be given him is—

"Unsuited to the ends to be accomplished and insufficient in efficiency * * * when the work to be done consists of conquering a territory 7,000 miles from our base, defended by a regularly trained and acclimated army of from 10,000 to 25,000 men and inhabited by 14,000,000 people, the majority of whom will regard us with intense hatred born of race and religion."

11.

The President communicates his instructions to General Merritt on May 19, beginning as follows:

"The destruction of the Spanish fleet at Manila, * * * the paroling of the garrisons, and acquisition of the control of the bay have rendered it necessary * * * to send an army of occupation to the Philippines for the twofold purpose of completing the reduction of the Spanish power in that quarter and of giving order and security to the islands while in the possession of the United States."

[NOTE.—The foregoing letters and memoranda by Generals Miles and Merritt and the President are significant of this, namely, that when the news of Dewey's expected naval victory was received in Washington there was no hesitation whatever displayed, either by the General Commanding the Army or by the President himself, in proceeding at once to the next step—the military occupation of the Philippines—which had been first distinctly foreshadowed in the February instructions to Dewey. It is evident also that General Merritt's earliest idea of his own work was that of a conquest. The President's own instructions to Merritt show that at that date, May 19, he did not regard Dewey's naval victory as effecting a conquest of the islands, for he describes Merritt's task as "completing the reduction of the Spanish power," which is a recognition of the fact that the Army was necessary to destroy the Spanish power in the archipelago after the Navy had done its work.

Gen. R. A. Alger, Secretary of War during the Spanish-American war, says in his recently published book, on page 328:

"Although the determination to send an army of occupation to the Philippines was reached before Dewey's victory occurred, and orders for assembling volunteers at San Francisco with this object in view had been given as early as May 4, the news of the success of Manila Bay greatly hastened the preparations for this army."

This statement proves conclusively that the design of sending an army of conquest to the Philippines existed in the Administration prior to Dewey's victory in Manila Bay, and it demolishes utterly the contention which apologists for the Administration have made that there was no thought of acquiring, conquering, or occupying the islands until the naval battle unexpectedly placed Manila in our power.]

12.

Aguinaldo lands at Cavite from the U. S. S. McCulloch May 19, 1898.

13.

Aguinaldo issues proclamation to Filipinos, May 24, 1898, prohibiting conduct by them contrary to the laws of war.

14.

Secretary Long cables to Dewey "not to have political alliances with the insurgents or any faction in the islands that would incur liability to maintain their cause in the future," May 26, 1898.

[NOTE.—This dispatch is consistent with the original determination of the United States Government to effect a conquest of the Philippines or some portion of them.]

15.

Insurgents isolate Luzon from other islands as early as June 2, and on June 5 they form a circle around Manila, "thus effectually cutting us off from every means of relief." (Testimony of Spanish General Jaudenes.)

16.

Aguinaldo issues proclamation organizing a military government, June 18, 1898.

17.

Aguinaldo issues proclamation establishing an independent revolutionary government June 23, 1898, and on same day issues a message to foreign powers, including United States, announcing establishment of that government.

18.

First American troops, under General Anderson, land at Cavite June 30, 1898.

19.

General Anderson July 4, 1898, writes to Aguinaldo asking that "your people cooperate with us in military operations against the Spanish forces."

20.

Filipino republic proclaimed July 9, 1898.

[NOTE.—During this period the United States Government, while being fully informed, made no protest against the course of Aguinaldo in establishing and proclaiming to the world an independent republic.]

21.

Captain Coghlan, commanding the Raleigh and Concord, on July 7, 1898, takes Grande Island, in Subig Bay, and turns the Spanish garrison over to Aguinaldo to be kept as prisoners of war. By this act Admiral Dewey treated Aguinaldo as a civilized combatant, and also treated him as an ally, since the act in question took place after Aguinaldo's proclamation of the establishment of an independent native government.

22.

Gen. Wesley Merritt, American commander in chief of the Philippine expedition, arrives in Cavite July 25, 1898.

[NOTE.—General Merritt refrained from the day of his arrival from direct relations with Aguinaldo, whose force had encircled the city and hemmed in the Spanish garrison. See General Merritt's official report, dated August 31, 1898, in which he says:

"As my instructions from the President fully contemplated the occupation of the islands by American land forces and stated that the powers of the military occupants are absolute and supreme and immediately operate upon the political condition of the inhabitants, I did not consider it wise to hold any direct communication with the insurgent leader until I should be in possession of the city of Manila."]

23.

Upon the request of the American generals Aguinaldo withdraws his forces from the sea beach and the "Calla Real" on July 29, so that American troops under Greene could move against the city.

24.

Aguinaldo, August 6, issues an appeal to the foreign powers for the recognition of the belligerency and the independence of the Philippine revolutionary government.

25.

General Merritt and Rear-Admiral Dewey, on August 9, make a formal demand on Spanish general for the surrender of Manila, in which they point out to him that the city is "surrounded in all parts" "by a constantly harassing force."

[NOTE.—The phrase "surrounded in all parts" contained a reference to the insurgents, who held the Spaniards closely invested, except where, on request, they had yielded their positions at one or two points to the American troops. This shows that the American commanders used the fact of the insurgents' military position to influence the Spanish general to surrender.]

26.

Peace protocol between Spain and the United States signed at Washington August 12, 1898.

27.

After a mock assault upon the defenses of Manila by the American troops, which was prearranged with the Spaniards, the city of Manila was surrendered to General Merritt August 13. The insurgent troops were not permitted by General Merritt to enter the city.

[NOTE.—The peace protocol provided that "the United States will occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila pending the conclusion of the treaty of peace which shall determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines."]

There is nothing in that stipulation inconsistent with the assumption that a conquest of the Philippines, or some part of them had been designed by the Administration a considerable time before the war with Spain broke out. When Spain's appeal for terms of peace reached the President, July 26, General Merritt had reached Luzon only the day before, and it was obvious that he could do no more than take the city of Manila within the next few weeks. For the Administration to have declined to offer peace terms to Spain at that time would have been condemned by all the civilized world no less than by our own people.

Although General Merritt had not taken Manila when the peace protocol negotiations were in progress, the Administration achieved its ulterior purposes by indirection, namely, by the terminology of article 3 of the peace protocol, as quoted above. It secured the city of Manila by negotiations even before Merritt captured it, and it also secured an advantage in the protocol—the relegation of the whole question of "the control, disposition, and government" of the Philippines to the treaty commissioners at Paris—which advantage Merritt was not able to gain by the terms of the capitulation under which Manila was surrendered by General Jaudenes. As will be seen later on, the President, when the permanent treaty of peace was under negotiation at Paris, set up a claim to the whole Philippine Archipelago, by right of conquest, and personally urged it with extraordinary persistency in private and public, although his treaty commissioners declined to accept his views, since they were not supported by international law.

It is a curious, and perhaps significant, fact that as early as July, 1898, the Government of the United States thought it worth while to send a geologist and mineralogist to study the geology and mineral resources of the archipelago. See introduction by George F. Becker to the Report on the Geology of the Philippine Islands, published by the United States Geological Survey, Department of Interior, 1901, in which he says, on page 8:

"In July, 1898, I was ordered to report to the military governor of the Philippines for duty as geologist, and I accompanied Gen. E. S. Otis to Manila. I remained in the Philippines fourteen months."

It may be asked, of what use was a geologist in waging war? He had no military value. Yet when he was sent out to the Philippines the American Army had not even occupied the city of Manila. Obviously the geologist and mineralogist was sent out at that very early day to study the natural wealth of the islands, as his final report shows, and the step was entirely in harmony with the policy of territorial acquisition. Had there been no design of taking territory in the Philippines as a result of the war, then it is difficult to understand the reason for sending out a Government geologist.

28.

Gen. E. S. Otis succeeds General Merritt in command, August 29, 1898.

29.

Insurgents, in response to General Otis's demands, evacuate the suburbs of Manila, September 15, 1898.

[NOTE.—There was controversy between General Otis and Aguinaldo as to the extent of the zone around Manila which the native forces should evacuate. (See General Otis's annual report of August 31, 1899, pp. 19–22.) General Otis finally admitted that Aguinaldo's claim that Pandacan was beyond the "suburbs" of Manila had been recognized by General Merritt. It followed that, under the Washington protocol, the American forces had no right to occupy the district of Pandacan. Aguinaldo, however, being threatened with the forcible removal of his men by the American Army, withdrew from the district of Pandacan on October 25, and General Otis's forces occupied it. The armed collision on the night of Febuary 4 took place in that same district of Pandacan.]

30.

Filipino Congress meets at Malolos, September 15, 1898.

31.

President McKinley, on September 16, 1898, instructs the American peace commissioners that "the United States can not accept less than the cession in full right and sovereignty of the island of Luzon" in the coming peace settlement at Paris.

32.

Peace commissioners of the United States and Spain meet at Paris, October 1, 1898.

33.

The President, on October 26, instructs his peace commissioners at Paris to demand the cession by Spain to the United States of the whole Philippine Archipelago.

34.

The President, on October 28, directs his commissioners not to yield the position that the Philippines "can be justly claimed by conquest."

35.

The President is informed, in a cablegram from Mr. Day, November 3, that "the majority of the commission are clearly of the opinion that our demand for the Philippine Islands can not be based on conquest."

36.

The President, on November 3, answers Mr. Day, declaring that "the destruction of the Spanish fleet on May 1 was the conquest of Manila, the capital of the Philippines," and assuming that the commissioners had not yielded the claim to the whole archipelago "by right of conquest."

37.

Commissioners at Paris, on November 4, again inform the President that the conquest claim is not valid or sound.

38.

The President, on November 5, accepts the peace commissioners' judgment in this matter.

39.

The Spanish commissioners, on November 28, 1898, accept American terms and agree to cede the Philippine Archipelago in consideration of the payment of $20,000,000 by the United States.

[NOTE.—This transaction was afterwards described by Judge Day, chairman of the American Commission, as a "purchase." (See his letter to D. K. Watson, of Columbus, Ohio, in October, 1899.)]

40.

Treaty of peace signed in Paris December 10, 1898.

41.

Agoncillo, agent of the Filipino government in Paris, publishes a protest against the treaty December 12, because it fails to recognize the independence of the Filipino nation.

42.

The President, in his message to Congress, December 5, 1898, again advances the claim that the Philippine Archipelago had been conquered. Describing the operations, he writes:

"The last scene of the war was enacted at Manila, its starting place. On August 13, after a brief assault upon the works by the land forces, * * * the capital surrendered unconditionally. * * * By this the conquest of the Philippine Islands * * * was formally sealed."

43.

The President, on December 21, 1898, issues an order to General Otis directing him to extend, "with all possible dispatch," to the whole archipelago "the military government heretofore maintained by the United States in the city, harbor, and bay of Manila." He begins this order as follows:

"The destruction of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila by the United States naval squadron commanded by Rear-Admiral Dewey, followed by the reduction of the city and the surrender of the Spanish forces, practically effected the conquest of the Philippine Islands and the suspension of Spanish sovereignty therein."

[NOTE.—The President's reassertion of the right to the Philippines by conquest in his annual message of December 5, and his order to Otis of December 21, took place within a few weeks after his treaty commissioners at Paris had notified him that the conquest claim was not valid, and after he himself had yielded to their view, so far as framing the treaty was concerned. Now, if this extraordinary performance by the President be interpreted in the light of all that has gone before, dating from the instructions to Dewey in February, 1898, what is the reasonable conclusion the student of history must come to? Surely, he must first conclude that the President had the idea of a conquest of the Philippines deeply embedded in his mind, that the idea had been planted there some time before the war with Spain began, and that he persisted in holding to it even after the theory of conquest as a claim to territory had been abandoned by his treaty commissioners.]

The final conclusion must be that the Administration had entertained the design of a parmanent conquest of the Philippines or a part thereof as early as the late winter of 1897–98, when the situation in China and the situation in Cuba combined to direct the thoughts of statesmen to the possibilities of a war between the United States and Spain. This conclusion is strengthened, moreover, by the haste and prematureness of the order to General Otis to extend his territory over the whole archipelago. When this order was issued, December 21, 1898, the Paris treaty had not been ratified and none of the territory outside of Manila and its suburbs was yet in any sense subject to American jurisdiction. The order of December 21, therefore, was unlawful and a clear usurpation of power by the Executive in order to occupy with his military forces, at the earliest possible moment, territory which he claimed on a false basis. It is clear that the Chief Executive's mind was saturated with the idea of conquest.

44.

The President on December 23, 1898, orders that United States troops be sent to occupy the city of Iloilo in the island of Panay.

45.

The Spanish General Rios, on December 24, 1898, surrenders Iloilo to the armed forces of the Malolos government, which thereupon takes possession of the place and maintains law and order.

46.

American force, under command of Gen. M. P. Miller, reaches Iloilo Harbor on December 28, 1898. General Miller demands the surrender of the city.

47.

The "federal government of the Visayas" refuses, December 30, to surrender Iloilo to General Miller. Iloilo merchants petition General Miller not to attack.

48.

General Otis, on December 29, sends to General Miller, by a British cruiser, a copy of the President's proclamation of December 21, ordering the immediate extension of American authority over the entire archipelago. In a note to General Miller, accompanying the President's proclamation, General Otis writes:

"You can remain in the harbor with your forces. If you meet with decided or strong opposition, await there further instructions and, if necessary, I can direct a portion of your force to other ports in the southern islands, where you will not meet much, if any, opposition."

[NOTE.—This proves that General Otis already contemplated executing the President's order of December 21 at once by diverting some of General Miller's troops to the more southern islands.]

49.

General Miller, on January 1, 1899, sends a verbatim and true copy of the President's proclamation or order of December 21 to the native authorities in Iloilo, and, at the same time, asks that they withdraw the native army and allow his troops to enter the city. In a letter to the native authorities General Miller tells them:

"As indicated in the President's cablegram, under existing conditions, the people of Panay Island owe obedience to the political authority of the United States."

He also directs their attention specifically to that portion of the President's proclamation ordering the extension "with all possible dispatch" of the United States military rule over the whole archipelago.

50.

The native authorities of Iloilo, on January 9, 1899, acknowledged the receipt of the verbatim copy of the President's proclamation, but refused to surrender the city.

[NOTE.—The special historical significance of the Iloilo expedition is that it actually and physically began the war between the United States and Filipinos and marks the United States Government, under the personal direction of President McKinley, as the aggressor in that war. When General Miller appeared with a strong military and naval force in Iloilo Harbor and demanded the surrender of the city by the native authorities, who acknowledged allegiance to the Malolos government, he committed an act of war upon that government. When he sent to the Iloilo authorities the President's order directing the immediate extension of American military rule over the whole archipelago he gave notice to the native Filipino government of what was unequivocally an act of war by the President of the United States. We only need to apply these facts to other conditions to understand their true import. If the Emperor of Germany should order his generals to extend German authority over France "with all possible dispatch," the French would be justified in regarding the order as a declaration of war.

There has been considerable controversy as to whether President Kruger, of the South African Republic, was justified in issuing his ultimatum to the British Government. No human being would contend that Mr. Kruger would not have been justified in regarding as the first act of an invasion, and, therefore, as an act of war, an order by the British Government directing its general in South Africa to extend at once British authority over the Transvaal. In the Philippines, in addition to such an order, there was a formal demand by an American general, commanding a military and naval force, for the surrender of a city occupied by the native government. These acts by the President of the United States and an American general were committed at a time when the United States had no shadow of legal jurisdiction over any part of the Philippines outside of Manila Bay, the city of Manila, and its suburbs, as was afterwards admitted by the President, McKinley himself, in a speech at Pittsburg, Pa., August 28, 1899, when he said:

"Until the treaty was ratified we had no authority beyond Manila—city, bay, and harbor."

Now, the treaty did not pass the United States Senate until February 6, 1899, a full month after General Miller's demand for the surrender of Iloilo, and the ratifications were not exchanged between Spain and the United States, the act which alone gave any legal force to the treaty, until April 11, 1899. So far as the Filipino people and their government de facto were concerned, the proclamation of December 21, 1898, and General Miller's demand for the surrender of Iloilo were acts of aggression—acts of war—notwithstanding that the Malolos government had not been officially recognized by any of the powers and had no acknowledged international standing. The fact that actual bloodshed did not begin until February 4, 1899, in no wise invalidates the fact that an aggressive war was begun by the United States Government a full month at least before that date.]

51.

General Otis, on January 4, 1899, issues the President's proclamation of December 21, in a new form, revised by himself, so as to omit the passages most offensive to the feelings of the Filipino people.

[NOTE.—This step on General Otis's part was unavailing, first, because even in the amended form the proclamation indicated the immediate assumption by the United States of full authority over the whole archipelago; second, because the literal version had already been published broadcast by General Miller in Iloilo, whence it was communicated to the headquarters of the native government at Malolos, the telegraph lines of the archipelago being at that time under the control of the natives.]

52.

Aguinaldo, on January 5, 1899, issues a counter proclamation and protest.

[NOTE.—Aguinaldo, in issuing this proclamation, was cognizant of the acts of war that had already been committed by the United States Government, for he said:

"My government can not remain indifferent in view of such a violent and aggressive seizure of a portion of its territory."]

53.

General Otis, on January 9, 1899, appoints a commission of Army officers—General Hughes, Colonel Smith, and Lieutenant-Colonel Crowder—to meet a commission of three appointed by Aguinaldo, in conformity with Aguinaldo's request "to confer with regard to the situation of affairs."

[NOTE.—Nothing came of this joint commission's meeting. General Otis, in his official report of August 31, 1899, said:

"They (Filipino commissioners) beg for some tangible concession from the United States Government; one which they could present to the people and which might serve to allay the excitement. Nothing could be accomplished without the sacrifice of some of the attributes of sovereignty (by the United States), and certainly that could not be done by any existing authority."

General Otis added:

"Finally the conference became the object of insurgent suspicion."

That was true. On January 17, 1899, the Independencia, the organ of the Malolos government, printed an editorial in which the following appeared:

"The Filipinos are disillusioned, and believe that the appointment of this commission is for nothing more than to gain time and allow the arrival of more forces (from the United States)."]

54.

Fighting between the American and Filipino armies begins around Manila February 4, 1899, continuing February 5. Filipinos defeated and driven back after suffering very severe losses. General Otis reported:

"Their loss was estimated at 3,000, and, considering the number who died upon the field of battle, might be deemed conservative."

[NOTE.—General Aguinaldo was in Malolos, 18 miles away, when the battle of Manila took place, and it is conceded on all sides that no attack on the American lines that night had been ordered by Aguinaldo or any of his generals. General Otis, in his official report, said:

"It is not believed that the chief insurgent leaders wished to open hostilities at this time, as they were not completely prepared to assume the initiative."

The armed collision on the night of February 4 was clearly unpremeditated. A Filipino, trespassing on territory then held by the American army, was shot and killed by an American sentry, Private Grayson, of the Nebraska Volunteers. From this "first shot" further fighting developed between the outposts of the two confronting armies until after about one hour and a half the engagement became general along the whole line. There was no deliberate "attack" by either army. The situation had become so strained, however, since the acts of war committed by the President of the United States in his proclamation of December 21, and by General Miller in demanding the surrender of Iloilo, that a general battle was easily precipitated when the collision at the Nebraska outpost occurred. It is altogether probable that the generals on both sides had prepared plans of attack for some future date, since, under the circumstances prevailing, the preparation of such plans was simply a part of the professional business of a general in command. Especially natural would it have been for Aguinaldo to have prepared plans of attack on Manila, since acts of war had already been committed against his government by the Government of the United States.

On the other hand, General Otis must have attacked the Filipino army around Manila whenever he had set out to establish American authority over Luzon. All points concerning "what might have been" aside, the essential facts as they took place are as follows: The United States Government committed acts of war in the President's proclamation of December 21 and the expedition to Iloilo, which the Filipino government, according to all civilized usage, would have been completely justified in treating as the initiation and the declaration of war, yet the Filipino government refrained from any warlike act in reprisal calculated to precipitate actual fighting: and actual fighting having accidentally broken out, the Filipino authorities, as is conceded by the American general, had wished at least to postpone it until a later and more opportune time. It is clear, therefore, that the Filipinos did not initiate the war. It is clear, also, that the primary responsibility for that war is deeply rooted in the policy of conquest which has been traced back through the acts of the Administration of President McKinley to a period prior to the war with Spain. The President was now face to face with the logical result of his policy, which was a prolonged and sanguinary war for the actual conquest of the people of the Philippine Archipelago.]

55.

Treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, under which Spain ceded her rights in the Philippine Archipelago, passes the United States Senate February 6, 1899.

[NOTE.—This treaty would not have passed the Senate had not news of the battle of Manila reached Washington before the vote was taken. The change of two votes would have defeated the treaty, and there were two opposition Senators—JONES of Nevada and MCLAURIN of South Carolina—who declared in the Senate that they voted aye because of the outbreak of hostilities. It was represented at that time in this country that the Filipino army had "attacked" the American lines.]

56.

Battle of Caloocan February 10, Filipinos to the number of about 4,000 being defeated, with heavy losses.

57.

General Miller bombards Iloilo February 11 and takes the city.

58.

The Schurman commission reaches Manila March 4.

59.

First northern campaign for the conquest of Luzon, under General MacArthur's immediate command, begins March 24.

60.

Malolos, Filipino government's first capital, occupied by General MacArthur March 31.

61.

The Schurman commission issues a proclamation to the Filipino people April 4. Recites the American claim to full sovereignty over the archipelago and the American purposes.

62.

General Lawton captures Santa Cruz of La Laguna Province April 10.

63.

General Lawton captures San Isidro, 65 miles north of Manila, May 17.

[NOTE.—General Lawton abandoned both Santa Cruz and San Isidro soon after occupying them.]

64.

Filipinos attack MacArthur's line at San Fernando, whither he had advanced from Malolos, but are repulsed, with heavy loss, May 24.

[NOTE.—While MacArthur held his advanced position at San Fernando, Lawton was ordered to retreat, and thus Lawton's turning movement proved unsuccessful.]

65.

Lawton, June 2, starts on an expedition to the east and takes the towns of Morong and Antipolo.

[NOTE.—Not much of this territory was held long as the result of this expedition.]

66.

Lawton, June 7, ordered to move south from Manila with about 4,000 men. He takes Calamba and Los Baños, on Laguna Bay, and occupies the territory south as far as Imus.

67.

Filipinos attack MacArthur again, June 15, at San Fernando, and are again defeated.

[NOTE.—The rainy season had now begun, and there was no further campaigning of consequence by the American Army until the autumn.]

68.

Treaty with the Sultan of Jolo, commonly known as the Sultan of the Sulu Islands, negotiated by General Bates and signed on August 20, 1899.

[NOTE.—This treaty recognized slavery in the Sulu Islands and stipulated that the Sultan and his chief subordinates should be paid monthly pensions or salaries by the United States.]

69.

Second northern campaign by American forces begins in October, 1899. MacArthur marches up the railroad October 22.

[NOTE.—The general plan of this campaign was as follows: MacArthur to move north to Dagupan, Lawton to go east to San Jose, Young to proceed from San Jose to the northwest, and Wheaton, coming down from the northern seacoast at San Fabian, to effect a junction with Young. Thus the Filipino army, with its leaders, was to be hemmed in and the war ended. The campaign, while well conceived, did not succeed in ending the war because, owing to rains and transportation difficulties, the enveloping movements could not be accomplished in time to prevent the Filipinos in arms from escaping east and still farther north into the mountains.]

70.

MacArthur's troops captured Tarlac, Filipino capital, November 12, 1899.

71.

Filipino leaders hold a council of war November 13, at Bayambang, and decide to disband the organized army, which was "incapable of further resistance in the field," and resort to guerrilla warfare.

72.

General MacArthur enters Bayambang, last capital of the Filipino government, November 19.

[NOTE.—The Filipino government was now entirely disrupted except in so far as Aguinaldo, who remained in the field for over a year thereafter, directed the guerrilla warfare.]

73.

General Lawton killed December 18, 1899, south of Manila, on the first day of an expedition to strike Filipino forces in the southern provinces of Luzon.

74.

Engagement at Cavite Viejo January 7, 1900. Native force annihilated.

75.

General Otis is succeeded as military governor and commander of the American Army by General MacArthur May 5, 1900.

76.

Expedition under Major March starts from Manila to run down Aguinaldo May 6, 1900.

[NOTE.—This expedition was unsuccessful.]

77.

The Taft Commission arrives in Manila June 3, 1900.

78.

General MacArthur issues a proclamation of amnesty June 21, 1900, to all who renounce the Filipino aspiration for nationality and accept American sovereignty.

[NOTE.—Throughout the summer and autumn of 1900 guerrilla warfare continued. After the reelection of President McKinley in November, 1900, there was a marked revival of the guerrilla warfare, and a complete failure of the prediction of the Taft Commission that war would end sixty days after McKinley's reelection.]

79.

The Federal party, organized under inspiration of the Taft Commission and composed of natives disposed to be reconciled to American authority, issues a manifesto to the Filipino people December 25, 1900.

80.

General Delgado, Filipino leader in Panay, surrenders January 11, 1901.

81.

The Spooner amendment, so called, conferring upon the President substantially absolute power to govern the Philippines and other islands, passes the United States Congress in February, 1901, and becomes a law by March 3, 1901.

82.

Capture of Aguinaldo through methods not sanctioned by the laws of war, March 23, 1901, by General Funston.

83.

Aguinaldo takes the oath of allegiance to the United States April 2, and on April 19 there is issued an address signed by him advising his compatriots in the struggle for Filipino nationality and independence to accept American rule.

84.

General MacArthur is succeeded by General Chaffee as military governor and commander of the American Army on July 4, 1901, and Judge Taft on the same date assumes the office of civil governor of the archipelago under the authority of the Secretary of War.

[NOTE.—General MacArthur, in his last annual report, dated July 4, 1901, pronounced the military conquest of the Philippine Archipelago substantially complete. He said in a kind of retrospect:

"The presence of America in these islands is simply one of the results, in logical sequence, of great material prosperity."

That is to say, their acquisition was due to commercial and not to humanitarian or accidental or providential causes. The acquisition of the islands was a deliberate conquest, having its conception in the commercial phases of the Chinese situation of 1897-98. And that it was purely a military conquest, which trampled upon the aspirations and sentiments of the bulk of the Filipino people, even as the extinction of Poland and the destruction of the South African Republics violated the dearest traditions of nationality held by the inhabitants of those unhappy countries—that point is clearly conceded in another passage of the same MacArthur report; for, after reviewing the military situation in the Philippines on July 4, 1901, General MacArthur said:

"It is respectfully submitted that the very gratifying conditions herein briefly recapitulated have not been brought about entirely by the hand of Providence, neither must the attitude of the people who have declared for peace, or even that of the leaders of the Federal party, be attributed entirely to unreserved pro-Americanism. It would, therefore, be unsafe to assume these conservative forces as constant factors, the friendly operation of which can be relied upon, irrespective of external influences. * * * The holding force in the islands must be a well-organized Army and Navy. Anything in the immediate future calculated to reduce the efficiency of these instruments will not only be a menace to the present, but put in jeopardy the entire future of American possibilities in the archipelago."]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall be glad if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] or the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] will give me any information about the number of speeches which remain to be made in opposition. There is only one Senator on this side who desires to speak in the general debate—the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], as I said yesterday.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not know how many Senators will speak on the other side.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wisconsin is the only one who is going to speak at length on our side.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the general debate on this bill ought not to occupy, at the outside, more than three days. The minority of the committee, and, I think, the minority Senators generally, would be glad if the general debate could be closed in two days.

The leader of the debate on this side, the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], I think does not want me to make this statement, but we all feel here that he has conducted the debate, so far as our side of the Chamber is concerned with great ability, and has given a great deal of time and thought to it. He desires to go away on Wednesday next to see his boy graduated, and I think the feeling on this side is that, in order that he may be able to do so, we should like to have the vote on Tuesday.

So far as the minority of the committee have been able to ascertain, after diligent inquiry, there are but three Senators on our side who desire to debate the bill at length, the two Senators from Georgia and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK]. If there is to be a session of the Senate on Saturday, so far as I know, after the most diligent inquiry, the general debate ought to close on Saturday, if we have a session on Saturday. I can not say that the three Senators on our side who desire to speak—I know of no more, and but one on the other side—will take more than two days, and I presume the Senator from Massachusetts can not say any more than can I whether those Senators will take more than two days. I am, however, quite sure that they will not take more than three days. One of the Senators, the Senator from Wisconsin, told me he certainly would not speak more than a day.

Mr. SPOONER. That is true. I said I would not under any circumstances speak more than a day, and I hope to take very much less time. In fact, I should rather not speak at all. I shall be just as brief as I can.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to suggest that we only have three days remaining of this week, as we are not to have a session on Friday, I understand.

Mr. HALE. Why not?

Mr. WARREN. Friday will be Decoration Day.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know why we should sit on that day; but there seems to be an understanding that we shall not, as it will be Decoration Day.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, of course I shall be very glad to be corrected by any Senator on this side of the Chamber if I have made a misstatement, but I think there are only the three Senators whom I have mentioned who desire to speak at length on the bill. That being so, it seems to me that in three days of this week the general debate can be closed.

Mr. TELLER. I want to suggest that there are some amendments to be proposed to this bill, and I have several myself.

Mr. SPOONER. But this arrangement refers to the general debate.

Mr. TELLER. If we have but two days next week we shall not have time to debate the amendments. Some time ago I called the attention of the committee to what I think are serious defects in the bill, even from their standpoint. If the committee are not intending to make some changes in the amount of land that is to be held in the Philippines, there will be some considerable debate on that question, and it might just as well be had under the general debate as afterwards. We might take up that question to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. In connection with what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has just been saying, I will say, referring to what he said in debate the other day about the amount of land, that it is the intention of the committee to consider that question, and, I think, to make the change the Senator suggested.

Mr. TELLER. Well, Mr. President, I reserve the right to return to that subject, and I mean to return to it without any reference to any agreement, for I will not consent that the bill shall be passed in that shape without a pretty general discussion of that feature of it. If the committee are not prepared to say by to-morrow, at least, what they are willing to do, I think we ought to wait until they do indicate their intention before we make any agreement as to when we are going to vote; and then I shall want to discuss the matter.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I was not asking to fix a time for a vote. My intention was to suggest that we should have one day under the half-hour rule and one day under the fifteen-minute rule, voting on the second day, so that we shall have time to take up these amendments and discuss all of them. The amendment to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] refers, I agree with him about entirely. I think that provision in the bill ought to be changed, and I think such an amendment will be made; but there are many amendments, and there ought to be time to discuss them. My desire was, as I have stated, to have two days—one under the half-hour rule and one under the fifteen-minute rule—for the purpose of discussing the amendments to the bill. What I am anxious to arrive at is an agreement as to the termination of the general debate. I think that if there is a general agreement of two days, such as I have described, that will be enough.

Mr. DUBOIS. I of course was simply trying to state the condition on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. I understand.

Mr. DUBOIS. I was not intending to enter into any agreement as to when we should vote.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that entirely.

Mr. DUBOIS. I simply wanted to inform the Senator from Massachusetts how we were situated on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. I was not asking for any agreement myself.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would state what he has in contemplation about giving up one or two days of this week—because that is a very serious consideration—in view of getting through with the bill by next Wednesday. I suppose, after having gone so long, after having spent so much time on this bill, and there being such a desire to dispose of it, certainly by Tuesday of next week, the Senate could do nothing better than to spend its time upon this bill through the whole of this week.

There is no precedent for adjourning over Decoration Day. Sometimes, when we have had plenty of time, we have adjourned over Decoration Day and other days; but at other times, when the Senate has been crowded, the Senate has determined that the best interests of legislation would be subserved by continuing in session during any of these days. I do not just now remember whether we have ever remained in session on the Fourth of July.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; we sat once on the Fourth of July since I have been in Congress.

Mr. BACON. And we have sometimes sat on Sunday.

Mr. HALE. Yes; we have sometimes sat on Sunday. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will see that this measure is kept before the Senate constantly each day until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. I certainly intend to pursue the course suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I have said in conversation with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] that if we could get an agreement to vote at an early day next week and Senators did not desire to continue the general debate perhaps we could adjourn over Decoration Day, but of course we can not do that if there are a number of Senators who are desirous of speaking at length on the bill.

I have myself suggested no day on which to terminate the debate, as the Senator from Idaho knows. I did hear this afternoon of the matter to which he refers in connection with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. Of course, I should be glad to accommodate him, and I am free to say I have a personal reason also which would lead me to desire the same thing, but I do not desire to press my personal wishes, and I know the Senator from Utah would not desire to press his either. At the same time, the debate has run for a long time, and I hope when the general debate is concluded that we may make an agreement as to the time for voting. The reason I am anxious for an agreement is because that it is but fair to Senators that they should have notice when the vote on this important bill is to be taken, and we ought to give some notice of the time.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt that we can vote by next Tuesday; but I think to do that we should have all of this week.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. And there should be no adjournment over either Friday or Saturday?

Mr. HALE and Mr. LODGE. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. Then I feel very certain we can vote by next Tuesday. I shall be very anxious to accommodate the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], who I know wants to go away; and it seems to me by that time we ought to be able to vote without any agreement in advance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to say a word before the matter just under consideration passes from the Senate.

We have patiently listened for five weeks to the discussion of the Philippine bill, and it seems we are to wait at least another week. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, I simply want to enter my mild protest against a session of the Senate on Memorial Day. It is a day that a very large number of people in this country feel is not one for labor; the States observe it as a rule, and I think there is an inappropriateness about the Senate sitting on that day, inasmuch as it will mean at best that we shall remain in Washington only one day longer before the final adjournment of Congress. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I am informed that the other House has already agreed to adjourn over Friday and Saturday next.

Mr. HALE. They are not pushed as we are.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I want to supplement what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has said in relation to the observance of Decoration Day. By law it is a national holiday. If there is any one event that this nation ought to recognize it is that, and I think it will be an unfortunate example to set to the American people that the Congress of the United States will utterly disregard that day and go on with its ordinary business.

Mr. GALLINGER. And when there is no need for it.

Mr. BURROWS. If, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has suggested, we are crowded, that is the fault of the Senate; but we are not crowded. There is ample time to conclude whatever business it is necessary to conclude during the session, and certainly we are not so crowded as to give an example to the whole country of absolute indifference to that day, which is set apart by national enactment as a day sacred to the memory of the men who saved this country.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there are not three men in the Senate who will participate in any exercises on Decoration Day. The whole country will participate in the observance of that day, as it ought to do and as it is glad to do; but in emergencies, which have been considered imperative, while the whole country has been engaged in Sunday exercises, attending divine worship, repeatedly the Senate has sat here in this room and attended to public business—the business of the people, the business that we are sent here to do; and if the emergency now is not sufficient to justify a Sunday meeting, it certainly is sufficient to justify us in going on as we have been going on, and giving to the country the best of our work here in this Chamber. I have no fear, if we do that, that fault will be found with us. The soldiers of the country, to whom Memorial Day is dedicated, will assemble, as they have for years, with ranks thinned from year to year and growing rapidly less, but they will none the less, Mr. President, take pleasure in the exercises of that day because we, in the exercise of our duty, are attending to the public business.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that, to my mind, it is no argument why Decoration Day should not be observed by the American Congress because the American Congress has repeatedly desecrated the Sabbath, and generally when it was wholly unnecessary. The desecration of the Sabbath by the Congress of the United States is not generally approved by the American people. But I wish to say that in regard to this day——

Mr. BAILEY. Will it interrupt the Senator from Michigan if I ask him if he does not use too strong a word when he says we desecrate the Sabbath by attending to our public duties? It strikes me that it is rather a strong expression.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator can modify it then.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like the Senator from Michigan to do that, because such sessions never occur more than once every two years.

Mr. BURROWS. I think there is no reason for the Senate or the Congress of the United States to be in session on the Sabbath. In the early part of our sessions we generally drift along and along, and toward the last we hold sessions day and night to rush measures through. A little foresight would avoid all that.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, I will ask him if he has ever known either House of Congress to sit on the Sabbath when it was reasonably certain we could dispose of the public business without doing so?

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it must be a necessary work.

Mr. BURROWS. But there is no occasion for this. This is, as I said before, a national holiday, and I think the Congress of the United States ought to set an example of observing it. On that day the President of the United States is to deliver an address at Arlington which will attract the attention of all the soldiers here and of the country, and for the Congress of the United States to be in session while that ceremony is being performed, it seems to me, is not in good taste. That is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not intend in what I said to imply that I was pressing for a session on Memorial Day. I had hoped that we could arrange this matter so as to adjourn over Memorial Day and possibly over Saturday, and yet get a vote on the bill early in the ensuing week; but if we are to have so much more general debate I think we ought to sit as constantly as possible. I remember the Senate sat here one session on the Fourth of July when the public business was very pressing.

Mr. President, I do not regard attendance upon public duties and the performance of public duties by men charged with them as a desecration either of the Fourth of July or of Memorial Day. I hold those days quite as sacred as anyone. I do not believe the soldiers of the country or American citizens generally would regard it as a desecration if the Congress of the United States on the Fourth of July, or on Memorial Day, or any other great national holiday, should perform the public duties which they were chosen to perform. The duties the soldiers performed were public duties to the country; and if our duty calls us to sit upon a national holiday, I protest against its being said that some of us are engaged in desecrating such a day. I have no desire to press for a session on Memorial Day. But the fact is, as I have stated, that I once sat here on the Fourth of July. I believe there have been sessions of both Houses held on Memorial Day and on the Fourth of July, and I think it is rather harsh to those who feel it incumbent upon them to perform their public duties on those great days to say that they are desecrating them.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not make the slightest allusion to or statement that by being in session on Decoration Day we are desecrating that day. That remark was made in relation to sessions of Congress on the Sabbath and to that alone.

Now, so far as this matter is concerned, it is perfectly apparent that this debate can close Tuesday or Wednesday of next week, and there is no occasion whatever for sitting on that day, in my judgment, and we might as well adjourn from Thursday until Saturday and observe that day as an example to the American people. There are members of the Senate and the House who were in the Army and who would be glad to have that day observed and would be glad to participate in the ceremonies. But if the majority say that that day shall not be observed, of course we will have to bow to the will of the majority. However, I think it would be a mistake.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, why may we not agree upon a day when a vote shall be taken on the Philippine bill?

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. There has been an elaborate debate upon it. I would not be willing at all that the vote upon it should be delayed by any remarks that I might otherwise desire to make. I think Decoration Day ought to be observed. The old soldiers will meet, of course; but I want to say to my friends that as they meet year after year they are fewer and fewer in number.

Mr. HALE. That has already been referred to.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that, but I refer to it again without making any apology. It would be a very sweet thing to them to have some official recognition of the day. I know they would be very glad indeed if, when they meet, thinking of the men who are gone—and most of them are gone—they should see present some members of the Senate. I think they would be glad to see there my friend the Senator from Maine, and I know he would be glad to be there.

Mr. HALE. I should certainly, if I were at home, be present at the exercises of the chapter of the Grand Army of the Republic, because there would be no public duty that would interfere with it. I would allow no public duty to interfere.

I do not wish to go over the ground I have been over once. If Senators feel that it is not their duty to stay here in this condition, when the time comes they will vote the other way. I shall certainly not vote that way.

Mr. SPOONER. I seldom differ with my friend the Senator from Maine, but I do not regard it as a local matter. It is a national matter. The men who fought for the preservation of the Union, from my standpoint—I do not say the war between the States; I say for the preservation of the Union—fought for the North and they fought for the South, for it was one of the wars in which those men who in a sense were vanquished were in the long reach of time the victors. So I believe that as the days go on we can not as a nation pay too much respect to the old soldiers who, as Memorial Day rolls around, grow less and less in number. I think our friends on the other side feel that just as we do. There is no partisanship about it.

Under the leadership of General Grant the Grand Army of the Republic was foremost in obliterating the bitterness of the war and reconciling the old and bitter differences between the sections.

The other day we attended the reburial of General Rosecrans, and present were members who fought under him, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] did, and men who fought against him, and the one no more than the other paid honest tribute to his memory. I have a sort of notion, although I may be wrong about it, that as the days go on it is more and more the duty of the Republic to pay some attention to Memorial Day.

Now, so far as the vote on the Philippine bill is concerned in its relation to this subject, I hope we may agree upon a day. It has been said that I have been selected to close the debate upon the majority side of it. I have been no party to that, and I am quite willing if we may have an early vote upon it not to speak on it at all, although I have some views about it.

Mr. CARMACK. We will agree to that.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senators will agree to that, I will agree.

Mr. GALLINGER (to Mr. SPOONER). If they stop, too.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the chairman of the committee say about that?

Mr. LODGE. What was it?

Mr. SPOONER. I know that is a compliment, and I appreciate it. I am quite willing to vote now. What do Senators say about that?

Mr. KEAN. Let us vote now.

Mr. TELLER. We do not care to vote now.

Mr. BAILEY. Suppose the Senator from Wisconsin submits this request. If he does not desire to do so and will yield, I will submit it: That we take the vote on the Philippine bill next Tuesday and the vote on the Nicaragua Canal bill that Tuesday a week.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well.

Mr. BAILEY. I think we can reach an agreement.

Mr. SPOONER. They are not Siamese twins. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. No; but if the time of the Senate is so important we can save it by a double agreement.

Mr. SPOONER. We can save it without a double agreement.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not so sure you can. If we are to have the same kind of a debate on the Nicaraguan Canal bill that we have had on the Philippine bill, we will be here until the dog days, and the country will take just about as much interest in the debate upon the canal bill as it does in the debate on the Philippine bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator is quite right about that, as he is quite right about a great many other things.

Mr. HALE. Let me make a suggestion, if the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. As we are now engaged——

Mr. SPOONER. In securing harmony.

Mr. HALE. In making suggestions that will tend to harmony, which would give us a chance to observe Memorial Day and attend to other matters——

Mr. SPOONER. Business.

Mr. HALE. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas I suggest that upon next Tuesday we vote upon this bill, that upon Tuesday following on the Nicaraguan bill, that upon Tuesday following on the Cuban bill, and on the Tuesday following that we adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. I will agree to that.

Mr. HALE. That is fair.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the proposition be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. What is it?

Mr. HALE. That takes all of these questions out of the way.

Mr. SPOONER. Meanwhile we will adjourn over Decoration Day?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. I will agree to adjourn over Saturday also if we make this agreement.

Mr. DUBOIS. Under that arrangement would the Senator from Wisconsin speak?

Mr. SPOONER. No, not if anybody else wants to speak, and I surely do not want to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], aided by the suggestion——

Mr. SPOONER. Aided by the Senate——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of other Senators——

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no. The Senator from Texas, aided by the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator from Wisconsin keep its paternity.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no. I did not make the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Asks unanimous consent that the Senate vote on Tuesday next, no hour being stated.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the father of this proposition to name the hour.

Several SENATORS. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Three o'clock?

Mr. BACON. Do not fix any hour.

Mr. LODGE. Do not name any hour.

Mr. BAILEY. Tuesday——

Mr. SPOONER. Before we adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. Tuesday is definite enough, because we will take the vote before we adjourn on that day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will endeavor to state the request, which is that the Senate agree unanimously that it will on Tuesday next vote upon the so-called Philippine bill; that a week from that day, the Tuesday following, it will vote upon the Nicaraguan canal bill——

Mr. SPOONER. The isthmian canal bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The isthmian canal bill; that on Tuesday of the week following it will vote upon what is known as the Cuban reciprocity bill, and that on Tuesday of the week succeeding it will adjourn. Is there objection?

Mr. WELLINGTON. It requires the consent of the House for a final adjournment. We had better see them about it first.

Mr. HALE. That will be attended to.

Mr. LODGE. Of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated the request as it was made. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Of course it is not seriously proposed that we adopt in that way a resolution for adjournment, because it must be by the concurrent action of the two Houses. But it is practically certain that if the other three agreements were made we could then adjourn without any trouble. In order to relieve it of that difficulty and embarrassment, and in order to make it a plain proposition, I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw the adjournment suggestion——

Mr. HALE. I am entirely willing to do that.

Mr. BAILEY. And just let the other three stand.

Mr. HALE. If it is agreed to, we will adjourn that week, I have no doubt.

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly we can.

Mr. TELLER. As there is no Cuban bill before the Senate, I do not suppose it would be proper to agree to that proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. There will be.

Mr. HALE and Mr. ALLISON. The House bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. The Cuban bill is before us just as much as the Nicaraguan Canal bill. No; I believe the latter bill has been reported.

Mr. TELLER. It has been reported.

Mr. BAILEY. It has been reported.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose anybody is serious in making these suggestions.

Mr. BAILEY. I was never more serious in my life than in suggesting the original proposition, that we vote next Tuesday on the Philippine bill and on the following Tuesday on the canal bill, and I submit that request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Texas that I know that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] is exceedingly anxious to be present when a time is fixed for a vote on the Cuban reciprocity bill. He is not present this evening, and I could not myself consent——

Mr. BAILEY. I did not submit a request for a vote on the Cuban reciprocity bill. It is merely for the Philippine bill and the Nicaraguan Canal bill.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to that, sir—none in the world. I am willing to vote this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated the request as he understood it was made. If there is any modification of it, he will endeavor to state that modification.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the Senator from Colorado to object to the triple request, and then I modified it so far as to reduce it to a double request.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the Cuban arrangement, of course.

Mr. BAILEY. And I modified it, for that was not originally my suggestion. I accepted it in the hope of reaching an agreement.

Mr. HALE. Let the proposition be put. Of course it can only go through by unanimous consent. If there is objection made, then let any other proposition be made. I should like the proposition to be stated covering the three bills—a vote on the Philippine bill, on the isthmian bill, and on the Cuban bill.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that this matter go over until to-morrow morning. Several Senators would like to be heard, I think, who are not present.

Mr. SPOONER. On what?

Mr. TELLER. On the submission of a proposition to vote within a week on a measure so important as the canal bill.

Mr. SPOONER. How about limiting it to the Philippine bill?

Mr. BURROWS. Take one bill at a time.

Mr. TELLER. We are willing to vote Tuesday or Wednesday on the Philippine bill, depending upon what we do this week. I have made no objection to voting on it next Tuesday if we sit all the week. If we do not, we ought to take another day.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate is going to vote on anything I am quite ready to vote.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a vote. It is a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a question of a vote. It is on a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that, and if there is any likelihood of agreeing on a proposition to get unanimous consent I am willing to let it be submitted. If not, I propose to make a motion. I will wait and see.

Mr. DUBOIS. The minority of the committee are not ready to fix a time for a vote, because some Senators on this side are not willing. So far as the minority of the committee are concerned, I am quite sure that we can vote on Tuesday or Wednesday, and perhaps we can fix a time before that.

Mr. LODGE. I understand there is objection to all three bills—the canal bill, the Philippine bill, and the Cuban bill.

Mr. BAILEY. It seems to me that for a bill which has been discussed so often and so long in both branches of Congress and which has passed both branches by such overwhelming majorities as has the canal bill, a week's debate is ample.

Mr. SPOONER. Both branches?

Mr. BAILEY. It has, in one form or another, for a particular route, passed both branches of Congress at different times by majorities equal to 42 to 8 in this body and correspondingly as great in the other. At one time there were only three votes against it in this Chamber, though it has happened that in some inexplicable way—at least inexplicable to the great body of the people—the bill has never been able to get through both branches at the same session in reasonably near the same shape.

I believe the hope of the nation in that respect is to be realized. At any rate, I assume that gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are willing to take a vote on the bill, and I am more than willing to give them on the pending bill as early a vote as will answer the requirements of those who desire to address the Senate on this side if they will give us a time for voting on that bill in which we feel so great an interest.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask if the proposition of the Senator from Texas has been put. I have not heard it. I for one am quite ready to assent to it, and I should like to have it put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated the request as it was made.

Mr. SPOONER. Was there objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not feel at liberty to vary the statement of the request, which included the three measures.

Mr. LODGE. No; but I understood the Senator from Maine made a request to which objection was made by the Senator from Colorado. That was the request including the Cuban reciprocity measure. The Senator from Texas, who made the original request, I understand now renews it.

Mr. BAILEY. I have renewed it.

Mr. LODGE. And I have not heard that request put. I should like to have it put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Colorado to object to the request as it was stated by the Chair?

Mr. TELLER. When it included the Cuban bill, which is not before the Senate, I did object.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair will put the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SPOONER. State it, if you please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is that the vote on the pending bill shall be taken on next Tuesday, and that the vote on the canal bill shall be taken on the Tuesday following. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I am not on the committee in relation to the isthmian canal, but in view of what the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] said to me recently in relation to his interest in the matter and his desire to be heard at length upon it I do not feel that the Senate would be doing justice, in the absence of the Senator from Ohio, who is necessarily absent, in making such an arrangement. I do not feel as though the arrangement ought to be made in his absence, and I therefore object.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I will make it two weeks from next Tuesday for the vote upon the canal bill, if the Senator from Michigan is ready to consent to that.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Texas to limit his request to a vote on the Philippine bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I frankly say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I do not feel at liberty to do that. I am straining a point on this side even to make the double request.

Mr. SPOONER. Does it hurt the Senator?

Mr. BAILEY. No; but it might hurt some of my friends who desire to speak on it.

Mr. President, as I understand, the Senate will not decide with respect to the bills referred to, I ask leave out of order to introduce some bills and have them properly referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the bills will be received.

(The bills appear under the heading "Bills introduced.")

Mr. SPOONER. I hope we will be able to dispose of the Philippine bill, of the isthmian canal bill, and of the Cuban reciprocity bill, and I think we ought now to be able to agree upon a time to dispose of the Philippine bill.

It has seemed sometimes as if, without any fault of mine, I were a sort of obstruction to fixing a time for a vote upon the Philippine bill. I have had no desire to make any observations to the Senate on the Philippine bill if it would delay at all a vote upon it, but I have my notions about it, as Senators have, and I would be glad under ordinary circumstances to say something to the Senate about it, although I have more than once spoken about it, and I hope never more than once to speak about it again to the Senate.

I am frank to say, and I find no fault at all with the other side, that to me it has been rather a humiliating thing to see the Senator from Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, who is in charge of this bill, rise day after day and week after week and appeal to Senators on the other side to fix a time—one week or two weeks or three weeks ahead—for a vote upon this bill. I know there is no man on this side who would delay a vote upon it for a moment in order to speak on it. There has not been, so far as I have seen, at any time a greater or more specific proposition that we do business in the Senate, not by vote of the majority, but by consent of the minority, than has occurred as to this bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. I say, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. RAWLINS. I simply rose to say that there has been no definite proposition emanating from either side to fix a time to vote on this bill. There has been a general understanding that the debate should proceed as rapidly as possible, and that as soon as Senators on both sides had debated it we would vote upon it, and that without any purpose whatever to delay it for a single moment beyond the time that is necessary for its discussion in the estimation of Senators. We on this side have no control, and you on that side, I think, have no control of the disposition or ability of Senators to speak who may desire to discuss this measure. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not imply, as I inferred he did in what he said, that there has been any disposition to protract this debate unnecessarily.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that, but I did say and I do say that over and over again in this debate the Senator from Massachusetts who has charge of the bill has appealed to Senators on the other side to fix a day for the vote upon the bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator from Massachusetts, if I remember correctly, has never made any definite proposition. The matter has been discussed and it has been mutually agreed between Senators upon the committee that the discussion should proceed as rapidly as possible. We felt that that was a satisfactory arrangement, and I understand that to be the case now. As far as I am personally concerned, I think that is true of members of the committee on this side. There has been no disposition to delay the bill, and we have been unable to fix a time definitely on either side because of the uncertainty as to the time which would be occupied in the discussion.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, when the Philippine tariff bill was pending Senators stated explicitly to us that they intended to debate the general Philippine proposition on that bill, because they claimed it was involved in the discussion of that bill, and that they did not intend to take overtime in the discussion of the Philippine government bill. And here we have spent weeks in the discussion of the Philippine tariff bill and weeks in the discussion of the Philippine government bill. I do not mean to be understood as saying to the Senator from Utah that the time has been wasted; that it has been unduly prolonged; that there has been obstruction or filibustering. I do not say that. It is a matter of the gravest possible consequence. The bill is a complicated bill, worthy of debate.

But, Mr. President, I do say as one member of this body that there ought to be some time fixed for a vote upon this bill without regard to other bills, some of which have been reported and others of which have not been reported. It is humiliating—that is the truth about it—to transact business here forever, the responsibility of which is upon the majority in the Senate, solely by consent of the minority.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon an inquiry?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I could recognize the force of what the Senator is saying but for the fact that from the assurances given on this side the Senator must feel confident that the vote can be reached on Tuesday or Wednesday; and I do not see why there should be any very great complaint about it.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator feels confident that the vote can be reached on Tuesday or Wednesday on the Philippine bill?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. If——

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. SPOONER. If——

Mr. BACON. No "if" on my part, and I do not think there has been any "if" in the assurance given on both sides.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, on this bill, coupled with a vote at a certain time on the canal bill.

Mr. BACON. No; on this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the proposition, as I understand it.

Mr. BAILEY. The statement that a vote probably can be taken on Tuesday or Wednesday was made before I made the double request, but in response to a specific request for a particular day from the other side, I said I would submit a request for the two propositions.

Now, permit me, while on my feet, to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that it was not a suggestion of mine to include with that request a vote on a measure that has not been reported. That came from the other side. I simply assented to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator is right about that. Mr. President, we ought to fix a time for a vote on the Philippine bill. It has been elaborately debated.

Mr. TELLER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I stated and I state again that if the committee will dispose of some questions that have no concern with this bill, and that we want to debate and will debate if they remain as they are, you can easily get a vote on Tuesday, in my opinion.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator mean that we can get a vote on by Tuesday?

Mr. TELLER. I refer to the question of land holdings by corporations and other things in the bill. We want to know what the bill is before we agree to fix a day, and we will know, too.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not a question for the committee. The committee has reported this bill, and it is a question for the Senate. I think there ought to be two days of thirty minutes' debate on the bill and the provisions of the bill. I think there ought to be a time fixed for the termination of the general debate and a time fixed for a vote on the bill itself, giving abundant opportunity for debate upon the provisions of the bill in detail.

But the notion, Mr. President, that forever and forever, at the will of the minority and not the majority, we are to go on with this bill, not simply in reference to the Philippine bill, but in relation to other measures, is to me (I do not know how it may be to other Senators) extremely humiliating.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PETTUS. I ask the Senator to allow me a suggestion.

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. PETTUS. It is settled now by an objection that we can not agree at this time, and I want to make a motion, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. SPOONER. I will hear what the motion is.

Mr. PETTUS. It is to adjourn.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I appeal to Senators on the other side to fix a time.

Mr. TELLER. There is not any use of wasting time here.

Mr. SPOONER. You will not fix a time?

Mr. TELLER. The intimation the Senator has just made that we have been delaying this bill purposely——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that. I expressly excluded it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator said we had done it to such an extent that it was absolutely humiliating.

Mr. TELLER. He said it was humiliating that the minority continued this debate.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not what I said. The Senator from Georgia who is usually accurate ought not to have said what he did.

Mr. BACON. If I misstated the statement the Senator made I shall be very happy to be corrected. I certainly so understood him.

Mr. SPOONER. I said it was humiliating, and it is, for a Senator who represents the majority in this body, which is responsible for legislation, to rise again, and again, and again, and ask the minority vainly to fix some time, not to-day or next week or week after next, but some time for a vote upon this bill. That is what I said.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I said distinctly that this bill had not been delayed by any obstruction.

Mr. TELLER. Then, if I may be allowed——

Mr. SPOONER. I said that the debate had been thus far a fair debate; but we ought to be able, in view of the fact that we should be approaching the end of the session, to fix some time, without reference to other bills, when we might have a vote upon this bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to interrupt the Senator, if he will allow me.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is one way that the majority can always bring a vote.

Mr. SPOONER. How?

Mr. TELLER. It has been done here repeatedly in the last twenty-five years, to my certain knowledge. It is simply to say, "We are going now to consider this bill until its final conclusion."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that means night sessions, and I have never known yet, although I have been here only eleven years, a proposition to have night sessions except toward the end of a short session which was not objected to on the other side as tyrannical; and I agree with the other side on that proposition.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him again——

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is asking for unanimous consent. I said frankly to him and to his side that I had no doubt we could vote on Tuesday, but there were some things that would make it certain we should vote on Tuesday; that is, if we knew whether the committee were going to recommend some changes of the bill that I think the committee will probably recommend.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to ask my friend from Colorado if he thinks that a vote on Tuesday ought to be dependent on the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I think whether we vote on the bill on Tuesday or not may depend upon whether there is some change made in the bill which we could make to-morrow if it was considered proper by the committee to make it. We can not make it unless the committee and the other side of the Chamber agree to it. No matter whether it is good or bad, unless it has the approval of the committee it is not going to pass any amendment. We know that; and until we do know whether that is going to be done it is not worth while for us to waste our time here to-night. We shall not come to any agreement. That is not said in the way of a threat or anything. I state to the Senator from Wisconsin a simple fact.

Mr. BURROWS. Then let us adjourn.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts who has charge of this bill will ask for a vote on a day certain, say on Thursday, and that the two preceding days be devoted to thirty-minutes' debate.

Mr. HOAR. Thursday of next week?

Mr. SPOONER. Thursday of next week.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. It seems to me the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say that I think Senators on the other side will do me the justice to admit that I have not been unreasonable in pressing for a vote, and I do not mean to be so now. When I made that inquiry of the Senator from Idaho at the beginning of this discussion, I did not intend to ask then for an agreement, but I hoped we could reach one later. I have desired above all things to refrain from meeting early and sitting late. I wish to avoid all that. I think we have had a genuine debate. I not only have never suggested otherwise, but I do not think there has been anything but genuine debate on this bill from the beginning.

I was in hopes at one time, when the Senator from Texas made his proposition, that the Senate would be willing to dispose of these two great measures (on which we are going to vote, and vote before this session ends) in reasonable time, and I was very sorry that the request of the Senator from Texas, which would have greatly advanced public business, in my judgment, was not accepted. But I made no request myself. I did not intend to press it now. I was in hopes that we might conclude the general debate on Thursday. I intended, and I have intended all along, as the Senator from Idaho well knows, as I have talked with him, to ask the Senate to adjourn over Decoration Day. I never had any other idea. I did not want to come back here on Saturday. But I could not consent to adjourn over Saturday also unless we could have some assurance for a vote next week. That was my own position, stated perfectly frankly.

I hope now, Mr. President, that after this discussion Senators will be willing on Thursday, perhaps—day after to-morrow—to fix a date for taking a vote. I hope by that time the general debate will be concluded, or very nearly concluded, and that we can then agree upon a time. Only one Senator remains to speak on this side. I have heard of only two, or at most three, on the other. I should think that we ought to dispose of those speeches to-morrow and Thursday, and, if need be, on Saturday, and that we shall then be able to vote on Tuesday.

Mr. BERRY. That is all right.

Mr. LODGE. I did not ask for an agreement. I had a talk with the Senator from Idaho. I do not wish to bring private conversations in here, but it is unavoidable to say that he and I talked this matter over. I told him then that I would not ask for any time at present and I did not mean to do so and I do not mean to do so now; but I merely express the hope that Senators will be willing on Thursday to fix a day next week. If we get along well to-morrow and Thursday, we may be able to adjourn over both Friday and Saturday. If we do not, then we shall have to sit on Saturday and go on with the general debate until it is concluded.

Now, Mr. President, unless some Senator desires to discuss further this matter of agreements, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold the motion for a moment, that I may give a notice?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield for that purpose.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up House bill 13676—the Military Academy appropriation bill—at some convenient time during the day on Thursday of this week.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 28, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 27, 1902.

APPOINTMENT AS MEDICAL OFFICER OF VOLUNTEERS.

Francis J. Bailey, of Oregon, contract surgeon, United States Army, to be assistant surgeon, United States Volunteers, with the rank of captain, May 26, 1902, vice Fogg, honorably discharged.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander William Swift, to be a captain in the Navy, from the 9th day of February, 1902, vice Capt. Philip H. Cooper, promoted.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Roscoe C. Bulmer, to be a lieutenant in the Navy, from the 9th day of February, 1902, vice Lieut. John H. Gibbons, promoted.

Lieut. Martin Bevington, to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, from the 5th day of March, 1902, vice Lieut. Commander Asher C. Baker, promoted.

Lieut. Robert F. Lopez, to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, from the 11th day of April, 1902, vice Lieut. Commander John L. Purcell, an additional number in grade.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Charles C. Haupt, of Minnesota, to be United States attorney for the district of Minnesota, in the place of Robert G. Evans, deceased. Mr. Evans's term would have expired May 5, 1902.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 27, 1902.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Robert S. McCormick, of Illinois, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary there, to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States to Austria-Hungary.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

Chandler Hale, of Maine, to be secretary of the embassy of the United States at Vienna, Austria.

SECOND SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

George Barclay Rives, of New Jersey, now third secretary of the embassy at Berlin, to be second secretary of the embassy of the United States at Vienna, Austria, from July 1, 1902.

MARSHAL.

Edwin R. Durham, of Missouri, to be United States marshal for the western district of Missouri.

DISTRICT JUDGE.

Alfred S. Moore, of Pennsylvania, to be judge of the district court of the district of Alaska, to be assigned to division No. 2.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Patrick H. Rourke, of North Dakota, to be United States attorney for the district of North Dakota.

POSTMASTERS.

Holly C. Clark, to be postmaster at Mount Morris, in the county of Ogle and State of Illinois.

Zachary Taylor, to be postmaster at Colfax, in the county of McLean and State of Illinois.

Thomas L. Green, to be postmaster at West Union, in the county of Fayette and State of Iowa.

James F. M. Greene, to be postmaster at Hillsboro, in the county of Montgomery and State of Illinois.

George W. Dicus, to be postmaster at Rochelle, in the county of Ogle and State of Illinois.

John P. Herrick, to be postmaster at Bolivar, in the county of Allegany and State of New York.

John H. Tower, to be postmaster at Sutton, in the county of Clay and State of Nebraska.

Samuel A. Stacy, to be postmaster at Ord, in the county of Valley and State of Nebraska.

Lewis C. O'Connor, to be postmaster at Geneseo, in the county of Livingston and State of New York.

William J. Cornell, to be postmaster at Chautauqua, in the county of Chautauqua and State of New York.

Melvin E. Horner, to be postmaster at Belmont, in the county of Allegany and State of New York.

Joseph S. Morgan, to be postmaster at Dubuque, in the county of Dubuque and State of Iowa.

William H. Whitehouse, to be postmaster at Mount Olive, in the county of Macoupin and State of Illinois.

William N. Wallace, to be postmaster at Gowanda, in the county of Cattaraugus and State of New York.

Marcus L. Wood, to be postmaster at Frankfort, in the county of Herkimer and State of New York.

Benjamin A. Nichols, to be postmaster at West Liberty, in the county of Muscatine and State of Iowa.

Harry E. King, to be postmaster at Maquoketa, in the county of Jackson and State of Iowa.

Charles E. Carman, to be postmaster at Aiken, in the county of Aiken and State of South Carolina.

Luther McGee, to be postmaster at Joplin, in the county of Jasper and State of Missouri.

George T. Salmon, to be postmaster at Lima, in the county of Livingston and State of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 27, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the legislative day of Monday was read, corrected, and approved.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the immigration bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12199, the immigration bill, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 4 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same by knowingly assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to the United States to perform labor or service of any kind by reason of any offer, solicitation, promise, or agreement, express or implied, parole or special, to or with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States, or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor in his own name, including any such alien or foreigner thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid, as debts of like amount are recovered in the courts of the United States; and separate suits may be brought for each alien or foreigner thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit at the expense of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 20, page 5, after the word "name," the following: "and for his own benefit." Strike out in line 2, page 6, after the word "suit," the following: "at the expense of" and insert the following: "when brought by."

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the existing law, as I understand, embraces the words in roman letters included in the present bill, and the words in italics are those added by the committee. The existing law includes the provision that the sums covered by this section shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States. Now, by the amendment recommended by the committee I see that a person may bring a suit in his own name. I understand by that that the purpose is that any party aggrieved by reason of being induced to come over here by false representation shall have a right to bring a suit in his own name, and I presume the committee intended that it should be for his own benefit; and in order that the intention may be carried out I offer the amendment "for his own benefit." I presume that because the words that it shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States have been omitted that therefore they mean that the amount recovered shall be for the benefit of the person who brought it.

Mr. SHATTUC. This amendment is to turn something over to the Treasury?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Oh, no; to the person who brought the suit instead of the Treasury, because you provide that he shall bring suit in his own name.

Now, the second amendment is over on page 6, line 2, of the bill, which provides for striking out "at the expense of" and inserting in lieu thereof "and brought by." Under the original bill the benefits of all these suits being for the United States the district attorney was required to prosecute it, but as the bill is changed, as I understand it is, for the benefit of the party who brings the suit, the district attorney would be required to prosecute the suit in the name and at the expense of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Are these two separate amendments connected so that they could not be separated?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. They are connected, and I want them considered together, because the adoption of one means the adoption of the other.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I accept these amendments, both of them.

The question was considered, and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That it shall be deemed a violation of section 4 of this act to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien by a promise of employment through advertisements printed and published in any foreign country; and any alien coming to this country in consequence of such an advertisement shall be treated as coming under a promise or agreement as contemplated in section 2 of this act, and the penalties imposed by section 5 of this act shall be applicable to such a case: Provided, That this section shall not apply to States or Territories, the District of Columbia, or other territory of the United States advertising the inducements they offer for immigration thereto, respectively.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is a looseness about this section which will be considerably confusing to the person who has finally the province of construing it. It says it shall be deemed a violation of section 4. This, mind you, is section 7. It is supposed in itself to be a piece of legislation self-operative with reference to the things contained in it. It starts out with reference to section 4. It does not say it shall be deemed unlawful, but it is deemed a violation of section 4 of this act to assist or encourage, etc. Now, it sets out the offense itself. It is an enumeration of the things which are inhibited within it and yet it makes it a violation of another section. It shall be deemed a violation of section 4 to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien by a promise of employment, etc.

It therefore becomes a violation of not only section 7 but also of section 4. The language is:

Through advertisements printed and published in any foreign country, and any alien coming to this country in consequence of such an advertisement shall be treated as coming under a promise or agreement as contemplated in section 2 of this act.

And the language continues:

And the penalties imposed by section 5 of this act shall be applicable to such a case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with section 7 of this bill, in which are invoked sections 2, 4, and 5. Thus we have four sections in pari materia, to be construed together; and under the ordinary rules of construction, if they are similar, if they do not conflict, the references will be useless. If they do conflict in any material way, they can not be construed together, and they must be inoperative. Now, why would it not be better for the committee to take this section and rewrite it—to make it unlawful, by the terms of this section, to do things which are supposed to be inhibited by it, and not make it unlawful by a reference to some section which is supposed to contain the very same language.

This is a consideration which it seems to me should not go unheeded, and though I offer merely a pro forma amendment, I suggest that gentlemen of the committee take back this provision and rewrite it, as I think should be done.

Mr. SHATTUC. I do not think the gentleman from California [Mr. COOMBS] need be very much concerned about this section. It has been in operation now for many years, and I do not think there can be anything very bad about it or some one connected with the Treasury Department would have found it out by this time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. SHATTUC. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the entire difficulty can be obviated, if there is a difficulty, by inserting, after the word "be," in line 15, the words "unlawful and be;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of section 4 of this act to assist or encourage, etc.

The amendment proposed by Mr. HEPBURN was read by the Clerk.

Mr. SHATTUC. Before voting upon that amendment, I want to say that as a business man I should greatly prefer to take this section as it is, it having stood the test for so many years. I, however, do not object to this amendment, because it is a simple one and seems to me fair and right.

The amendment of Mr. HEPBURN was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, on the 19th day of May, when the bill making appropriations for the naval service was under consideration, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] made some remarks, displaying some knowledge which I certainly do not possess or lay claim to—a familiarity with the rules of this House. By an error of the stenographer, those remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania upon a question of order are, on page 6021 of the RECORD, credited to me. I did not make that speech; and, while I would not be ashamed of it, I have no desire to deprive the gentleman from Pennsylvania of the immortality which I am sure will attend his name by reason of those utterances; and I desire that the RECORD may do him full justice and not deprive his remarks of their true paternity. They are wrongly credited to me, and I object to their going to posterity under a false name. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] that the formal correction of the RECORD should be made in the House, not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHEELER. "The gentleman from Kentucky" is aware of that, but he simply desired to call attention to the error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the correction has already been made.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHATTUC] what is intended by the language "or other territory of the United States" in line 24 of page 6 and line 1 of page 7—whether that language is intended to apply to our insular possessions? It seems to me, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in our insular cases, that our insular possessions ought not to be designated in our legislation as "other territory of the United States." I therefore move to strike out those works "or other territory of the United States" and substitute the words "or place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania been called to section 34, containing a construction of the words "United States?"

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; and I propose to offer an amendment at that place also, because the same difficulty arises there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I simply desired to call the gentleman's attention to that part of the bill.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the committee will accept the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 24, the words "or other territory of the United States" and substitute therefor the words "or place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As to the operation now under his amendment with reference to the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. DALZELL. That is already provided for in the first part, "that this section shall not apply to States or Territories."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Would this provision of the law as amended apply to the Territory of Hawaii, excluding undesirable immigration to that place?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think this amendment affects Hawaii at all. I think that is already covered by the previous paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania understand that the Supreme Court held that the Philippines and Porto Rico were territory of the United States, territory "appurtenant," as they designated?

Mr. DALZELL. They are not territories of the United States in the same sense that the word "territory" is used in the first part of this paragraph.

Mr. PAYNE. They are territories belonging to the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. They are territories simply belonging to the United States, but they are not territories of the United States, and the evident purpose of this is to cover all the places over which the United States has jurisdiction. The proviso sets out that the section shall not apply to "States or Territories, the District of Columbia, or other territory of the United States." Now, the insular possessions are not territory of the United States in the sense that those words are used in this paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. But they are in the broad comprehensive sense.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, they are territory belonging to the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. "Appurtenant" to the United States is the decision of the Supreme Court, whatever that may mean.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, it is the same thing.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, as to why it would not be better to strike out this entire proviso. If it be wrong to make these flaming advertisements in foreign countries in order to bring aliens over here that we do not want, why should it not be wrong to publish them in this country? There seems to be a contradiction in this paragraph.

Mr. SHATTUC. I think it has all been satisfactorily arranged for by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. KLEBERG. Oh, that refers to the technical meaning of the word "territory."

Mr. SHATTUC. Then what is the other proposition of the gentleman?

Mr. KLEBERG. My proposition is this: That the whole proviso is in conflict with the main section.

Mr. SHATTUC. We think not.

Mr. KLEBERG. That the main section prohibits the advertising of steamship companies.

Mr. SHATTUC. But this makes an exception of States and Territories who want to advertise themselves.

Mr. KLEBERG. What would prevent their having these advertisements go over there anyway?

Mr. SHATTUC. There is nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to return to section 5. I was engaged in committee business when this was taken up, and I have a suggestion which I would like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to section 5 of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. SHATTUC. But I would ask unanimous consent that we may hear the gentleman's suggestion as to section 5. We will determine the question of whether we want to return to it after hearing the statement.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, section 5 is subject to the same objections that are pointed out to section 7. It says, "that for every violation of any of the provisions of section 4 of this act, the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same by knowingly," and so on, pointing out another offense. It invokes section 4, and provides as to a violation of that section by a corporation or a person or partnership by doing something else not mentioned, it may be, in the section, or so far as it may be mentioned, a repetition only, and it seems to me that the committee really does not intend any such legislation as that, for they would simply say that it is a violation of law for a company, person, or corporation, or partnership to do a certain thing without reference to the question as to whether there is a similarity between the enumeration in section 7 and in section 4, as to whether they are consistent, or by reason of inconsistency, that one shall fall and the other not.

Mr. Chairman, there is something in this section down below which gives the United States the right to sue the person, corporation, or company engaged in the transportation of people unlawfully to this country. Not only that, but it gives the person himself unlawfully transported here the privilege of suing these companies. In line 19 it says:

Or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor in his own name, including any such alien or foreigner thus promised labor or service of any kind as aforesaid.

In other words, if an alien is induced to come to this country by reason of solicitation and promise, or an advertisement, or any of the inducements generally urged for these purposes, under this act he has an action against the company. At the same time this law provides, mind you, Mr. Chairman, that we have a right to deport that alien instantly upon his arriving here. While in one instance, under the law, we have a right to deport him, in the other instance we give him the privilege of appealing to our courts. We throw around him the protection of the law and we clothe him with all the authority and privilege that our own citizens are clothed with in this country.

Now, does that not tend to fix his status here? If he has a right to sue in our courts, has he not a right to residence to the extent of the time until his suit shall be determined? Has he not a right to appear personally in court, and does it not negative the idea that we have the right under authority of this bill to deport him immediately to the country from whence he came? I think it is a dangerous provision to leave in here, and that the alien's right will, to some extent at least, be confused, and the authority of the people having the administration of this law must stand confused until that question is decided.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, that law has been in effect, I think, for twenty years.

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to say something with reference to this twenty-year business.

Mr. SHATTUC. I am very anxious to get along with the bill.

Mr. COOMBS. Does the gentleman consent to return to that?

Mr. SHATTUC. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to return to this section. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That it shall be unlawful for any transportation company or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel to bring to any port within the United States or its territory any alien afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that any alien so brought to a port of the United States or its territory was afflicted with such a disease at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such transportation company or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $100 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section; and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers while any such fine imposed upon it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted.

Mr. SHATTUC. There are some committee amendments to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 18, after the words "United States," strike out the words "or its territory."

On page 7, line 19, after the word "or," insert "with a."

On page 7, line 22, after the words "United States," strike out the words "or its territory."

Mr. PAYNE. What is the object of striking out those words "or its territory?"

Mr. SHATTUC. That is all taken care of in the thirty-fourth section of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Are the words "United States" defined?

Mr. SHATTUC. Yes. Section 34 says:

SEC. 34. That the words "United States" as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States and any territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

Mr. PAYNE. All right.

Mr. MANN. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] gave notice that he would move to strike out in section 34, in that definition, the words "and any territory?"

Mr. SHATTUC. Have we passed that yet?

Mr. MANN. No; we have not reached that yet.

Mr. SHATTUC. Then we will attend to that when we get to it.

Mr. PAYNE. If that should be stricken out, would it not be advisable to leave it in here?

Mr. SHATTUC. I am perfectly well satisfied with the bill in the way it is reported. If any of these constitutional lawyers want to change it, they must be here to do it.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman may be perfectly satisfied with the way it is reported——

Mr. SHATTUC. What section does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. MANN. Section 34. It raises an apparent question under the decision of the Supreme Court in the insular cases, which I suppose the gentleman does not wish to have involved in this case.

Mr. SHATTUC. No; I do not. This was written with all the light we had at the time it was written.

Mr. MANN. I might say to the gentleman that the decision of the Supreme Court in the insular cases can not always be considered as light.

Mr. COOMBS. You do not want to disturb the law of twenty years ago, do you?

Mr. SHATTUC. I would rather take the law of twenty years than the opinion of some attorney here. I would rather take the chance of its being sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. At all events it is stricken out in this section.

Mr. MANN. Why not leave it in this section if you want to cover the territory of the United States?

Mr. PAYNE. What is the matter with the language in section 34?

Mr. MANN. The Supreme Court in the insular cases held that the Territories in this country, such as New Mexico and Arizona, had become incorporated into the Union; that the Constitution had extended over them, and that because of the legislation of Congress which had caused them to be incorporated into the Union Congress could not take away from those Territories the constitutional provisions; but I take it it is not desired in this bill in any way to extend the Constitution over the Philippines if it is not already extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments to section 9. Is a separate vote demanded on any of these amendments? If not, they will be voted on in gross.

The committee amendments to section 9 were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That in the case of the failure of the master or commanding officer of any vessel to deliver to the said immigration officers lists or manifests of all aliens on board thereof as required in sections 12, 13, and 14 of this act, there shall be paid to the collector of customs at the port of arrival the sum of $10 for each alien qualified to enter the United States concerning whom the above information is not contained in any list as aforesaid.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 13. I have an amendment I want to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to section 13 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. SHATTUC. I object, until I can talk with him about it. What is the amendment?

Mr. CLARK. The amendment is to straighten up the language in lines 11 and 12.

Mr. SHATTUC. What is the nature of it?

Mr. CLARK. The nature of it is to have the examination made on the other side of the ocean in addition to having it here.

Mr. SHATTUC. I asked the gentleman to make a speech for the bill, and he said he would speak against it, and therefore I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the word "provided," on page 12, section 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that section 16 has not yet been read.

Mr. CLARK. I thought it had just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That upon the receipt by the immigration officers at any port of arrival of the lists or manifests of aliens provided for in sections 12, 13, and 14 of this act it shall be the duty of said officers to go or send competent assistants to the vessels to which said lists or manifests refer and there inspect all such aliens, or said immigration officers may order a temporary removal of such aliens for examination at a designated time and place, but such temporary removal shall not be considered a landing, nor shall it relieve the transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees of the vessel upon which such aliens are brought to any port of the United States from any of the obligations which, in case such aliens remain on board, would, under the provisions of this act, bind the said transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees: Provided, That where a suitable building is used for the detention and examination of aliens the immigration officials shall take charge of such aliens, and the transportation companies, masters, agents, owners, and consignees of the vessels bringing such aliens shall be relieved of the responsibility for their detention until the return of such aliens to their care.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the proviso in section 16.

Mr. SHATTUC. I would like to hear the gentleman's views on that subject.

Mr. CLARK. My views are very brief. If you leave these words of that proviso in there, it will relieve the steamship companies that bring these people over here from all responsibility under the law.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. SHATTUC. If we take these immigrants out of their control, why should we not be responsible for them?

Mr. CLARK. For this reason: Two-thirds of this immigration that you do not want is brought about by the industry of these steamship companies, in order to make the profit that there is in hauling these people back and forward across the ocean. They bring these prohibited classes over here when they know they have no business to bring them, and after they get them over here they do everything on the face of the earth they can to evade the law in reference to that very business.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do you not know they are fined a large sum of money for the violation of this section?

Mr. CLARK. You put the provision in here and it relieves them of the fines to a large extent.

Mr. PALMER. It relieves them until they return to their care. Read the last line.

Mr. CLARK. I read the last line.

Mr. PALMER (reading):

Shall be relieved of the responsibility for their detention until the return of such aliens to their care.

As long as they are not in their care the responsibility does not attach, but after their return the responsibility attaches.

Mr. CLARK. The whole thing ought to be struck out, and all of section 10, in lines 11 and 12, which my friend the Chairman will not let me amend, ought to be changed so as to read the port of embarkation instead of the port of arrival. Now, if the gentleman won't raise the point of order I will make remarks that will give you the best reason that can be given for it.

Mr. SHATTUC. I am always glad to hear the gentleman. I move that the gentleman may have five minutes to express himself on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Here is the situation. It is a plain business proposition. In the first place, the traditional policy of the people of the United States has undoubtedly been, and I think is yet, to let into this country such foreign-born people as we have reason to believe will make good citizens. Until a very few years ago there was no particular effort to restrict immigration. Within the last few years a crusade has begun in this country to shut out certain undesirable criminal classes, epileptics, and diseased people, and all that. The old law has this exclusive provision in it, to exclude undesirable classes. It provides that they shall be examined. Then a great wail goes out that these people come over here that you do not want, that the steamship companies know that you do not want, about the hardships of their being examined at our ports and returned to Europe again, or wherever they come from.

Now, I say it is in the interest of the people of the United States, and not only that, but in the interest of these foreigners themselves that want to come over here, of the excluded classes, to have these examinations at the port of embarkation rather than come clear across the ocean and have them examined here and then to be sent back to Europe. It would be a positive kindness to them—a saving of time, trouble, and money—to examine them on the other side. Instead of being a hardship, it relieves the hardship to these very people themselves. The ports of embarkation are very few. We already have consuls or consular agents at every one of them. In addition to the usual consular duties we can add to that the duty of having these people examined there, and it saves the expense of bringing them across the ocean, saves the trouble of the worry and the mortification of those people having to go back across the ocean again. As matter of fact, the South American Republics have this identical provision, and it saves litigation. It is a plain business proposition enacted for the benefit of the people of the United States and for the benefit of these people who want to come over here, too.

Mr. PERKINS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. I am not at all opposed to the proposition, but I would like to ask the gentleman in what way he would have the medical examination made in the foreign port? The consul will not be qualified to make a medical examination.

Mr. CLARK. I take it that it would not be any more difficult for a consul to get a good doctor over there to make the examination at the port of embarkation than it would be to get a good doctor in New York or in New Orleans.

Mr. McCALL. I would like to ask whether the existing law does not provide that the examination shall be made at the port of departure?

Mr. CLARK. I do not know; but I think it does.

Mr. McCALL. Does not this change existing law, and is it not something regarded as valuable in the administration of the law?

Mr. CLARK. I think the old law provides that they shall be examined over there. The italicized words in the clause change it so that they are examined only on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his colleague's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER. Has the gentleman the old law to which he refers?

Mr. CLARK. No; I have not. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] has it.

Mr. McCALL. I was trying to find the provision.

Mr. ADAMS. The old law refers only to the manifest of the ship. It provides that it shall be examined by the consul, but it has no relation to the emigrants at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say the other day that this had been the custom at two or three ports, but there was no law to sanction it.

Mr. ADAMS. No; the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Some gentleman on the floor made that statement.

Mr. ADAMS. It was not this "gentleman." The time, Mr. Chairman, for the adoption of the idea of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has passed, but as long as he has raised the question I would like to reply and say why his proposition is not advisable and is not a simple business proposition which he has submitted to the House.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to speak to the point to which he called my attention but a moment ago? The gentleman was mistaken in saying that this simply refers to the manifest. It provides that the "list or manifest shall be verified by the signature and the oath or affirmation of the master or commanding officer or of the officer first or second below him in command, taken before the United States consul or consular agent at the port of departure before the sailing of said vessel, to the effect that he has made a personal examination of each and all of the passengers named therein, and that he has caused the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith to make a physical examination of each of said passengers, and from his personal inspection and the report of said surgeons he believes that no one of said passengers," etc., which is vastly broader than the gentleman had an idea it was.

Mr. ADAMS. No; the question submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, as I understood, was that there was a provision in the old law that the consul was to have something to do with the inspection of the immigrants, whereas I said it was simply to swear to the manifest, and he has found that the officer of a vessel must also swear to its inspection, but it is not different from my idea. The consul under the old law has nothing to do with the immigrants that come to the country; therefore it is a new proprosition.

The gentleman states that this is in the interest of economy and is simply a business proposition. When asked by the gentleman from New York if the consul could make the necessary medical examination of the immigrants who are about to sail, his reply was that the consul could get as good doctors over there as they could on this side. Why, Mr. Chairman, this country does not wish to trust the foreign inspection of the immigrants coming to this country. We want the inspection of our own physicians, upon whom we can absolutely rely. I cast no disparagement on those physicians in foreign lands, but we know we can trust our own people.

I ask the gentleman to consider what would be the expense to this country of having these immigrants examined by the consul abroad and the staff that he would be obliged to have around him. He would be obliged to have a doctor. Then he would need also an expert in criminology, such as we have on this side. At each port of departure there would need to be a complete staff, such as we have at our leading ports, in order to examine these immigrants.

Now, wherein lies the difference in expense? At our ports we have steamers arriving at a single port almost daily from all the different countries. If such an examination were attempted at the foreign port, it would be necessary to have these expensive arrangements where probably there would be a sailing only once a week. As a simple business proposition it would probably be ten or twenty times more expensive to conduct the examination over there than to have it at our own ports.

Then there is another point. Our consuls are under the police jurisdiction, under the entire police control of foreign governments. They would not be so free to act in a matter of this kind as they might desire. And, besides, any country would resent the act of the representative of a foreign nation in putting the seal of condemnation, either as to health or physical ability or criminality, upon any of its citizens or subjects who were about to sail for another country. The foreign government would say, "Is an officer of the United States Government to stamp our citizen or subject as in his judgment unhealthy or immoral and send him back to this community with the stigma upon him that he is unfit for military duty or for other service as a citizen?" I believe that any government would resent an act of this kind on the part of a foreign official.

Then there is another point. I believe that if we should undertake to endow our consuls abroad with this function their exequaturs would be withdrawn. They are there simply at the tolerance of the foreign nation. No such function as it is proposed to bestow upon our consuls is granted under international law to the consuls or other representatives of a foreign country. I refer the gentleman from Missouri to any of the text-books on the subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to come down to the amendment which is immediately before the House, the other is not and can not be. It is proposed to strike out the proviso at the end of section 16. The gentleman offering this amendment is an eminently fair man, as has been shown in the position he has taken on many questions in this House, but I doubt whether he has taken in fully the results that would follow if his amendment should be adopted. Surely he does not ask this House to say that when, under the law, the officer of the United States Government takes these immigrants off the ship and out of the jurisdiction and control of the ship's officers——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I ask that my colleague's time be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman surely does not wish to hold any shipmaster responsible for the custody of individuals or money or other property that has been taken from his possession and controlled by authority of law. That would be such an act of injustice that I am sure the gentleman who offers this amendment would think about it very long before asking this House to adopt it.

Mr. METCALF. Does the gentleman believe that a provision requiring the examination of immigrants at the foreign ports could be efficiently enforced?

Mr. ADAMS. I doubt it very seriously. I have tried to state the objections to such a system. I may not have put the matter very clearly, but that was the tenor of my remarks.

But, as I have said, that amendment is not before the House, and can not be; and that is the reason I am laying more stress upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. If you will remove from this section the proviso which that gentleman proposes to strike out, you would hold an innocent party responsible for something which, by operation of law, you have placed beyond his control. That surely could not be right.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes about this question of examination. It is a matter of considerable importance.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Missouri will be recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] thinks that the examination can not be made at the foreign ports. Let me say that there are only a few ports of embarkation for immigrants from foreign countries; and I undertake to say it would in the end be absolutely cheaper for the people of the United States to have the examination conducted there; it would be cheaper and otherwise better to have a board created at every one of these foreign ports of embarkation for the purpose of conducting this examination. In order to prove this, I am going to reread to this House a letter which was read here the other day by my colleague [Mr. BARTHOLDT], which clears up this whole matter.

This is possibly the only United States consulate—

This letter is written, I understand, by some one of our consuls—my colleague can tell you who—

This is probably the only United States consulate where for some years there has been a consular inspection of emigrants. Let me tell you how this work is being done, with a view to encouraging an effort to have this system of inspection extended to all seaports whence emigrants leave for the United States. In the height of the season from three to four steamers of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company leave this port every week and each steamer requires from two to three inspections of the steerage passengers. At first all the bedding of these people is ordered into the disinfecting chamber, then each person is vaccinated and his or her physical condition carefully examined into, special care being taken to detect diseases of the eyes, skin, lungs, and mind, etc. The examination takes place in the presence of the United States consul or one of his assistants, and is in charge of Dr. Peltzer, a sworn medical officer of our Government, who is assisted by one or two physicians of the Lloyd Steamship Company.

As soon as trachoma, lupus, pulmonary phthisis, and certain other diseases or any mental trouble is discovered the person so afflicted is rejected, and the consul regularly sends the list of all rejected emigrants to the commissioner of immigration at New York or Baltimore or Galveston, whither the steamer may be bound. At the same time the steamship company is also at once notified as to which passengers have been rejected at the consular inspection, whereupon they may, if they choose, investigate the cases more closely and determine for themselves whether or not they will risk taking such rejected passengers to the American port.

The system of consular inspection here at Bremen was introduced without any order from the State Department, but with its full sanction. If I am correctly informed, it was begun at the request of the Lloyd people themselves, who evidently were prompted by a humane desire to have the fate of unfortunate emigrants decided at the earliest possible moment, and also by their own business interests, for it undoubtedly has saved them considerable sums of money to have people retained on this side who probably would have been excluded by the Treasury officials at our ports of entry and deported at the expense of the steamship company. And, as is well known also to the Department, the North German Lloyd Steamship Company spare neither pains nor money to have the inspection done right, and they regularly reimburse this consulate for the salary paid the examining physician.

The records at the various immigration bureaus will show, I believe, that the work done at this port by the present system of consular inspection of emigrants has been fairly successful. I know that among the deported steerage passengers there are but very few that have passed the consular inspection at Bremen. In looking over the lists of such deported aliens which are regularly sent me I rarely ever find a person returned to Bremen on account of some physical disability, etc.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is without authority of law, but it is a custom that has arisen.

Mr. CLARK. That is without authority of law, but it is a custom that that consul has established himself, it seems.

Mr. ADAMS. What is the place?

Mr. CLARK. Bremen. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say this: It is none of the business of the foreign government to decide what our consul is over there for, as long as the consul does not interfere with either the social or political arrangements of the country that he is accredited to, and all this talk about giving them their exequaturs is moonshine, to put it politely. I am credibly informed that the republics of South America have their agents at all of these ports of embarkation, and one of the representatives of the American Federation of Labor, and an intelligent man, told me the other day that he had seen at one of the ports in Italy a lot of these men come along who belonged to these excluded classes in this country, and a representative of Brazil on personal inspection could see that they fell under one of those classes and would not allow them onto the ship that was bound to South America. They then walked out across the gang plank and got onto the ship bound for the United States.

As to having a criminologist, I can not conceive of a more thoroughly useless adjunct to an office either in the United States or in Europe. There is not any criminologist living who can tell whether a man is a criminal or not with anything like certainty, and as far as ascertaining the criminal record of a man is concerned you can do it a hundred times more easily at the port of embarkation than you can here at the port where he lands, because you have access to the courts of record. For instance, if you want to know whether a man has been sent to the penitentiary—for ex-convicts are excluded—how can you tell when he gets to the American port? The chances are one thousand to one that a man who has been in the penitentiary will tell a lie or swear to it, for that matter, if it suits his convenience. Over there where he comes from you have the records of the courts to examine, and if there is any question about it the consul can find out, and there never was a proposition made in this House that was plainer or of more practical utility than the one under discussion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he intends that examination to be final?

Mr. CLARK. I would not care whether they had another one over here, but I am not sure but it would be better to have one over there than one over here if you are to have only one.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague, but I want to ask him whether he would vote to substitute my suggestion which I made the other day in committee, providing for an examination on the other side, abroad, in place of the examination on this side, in preference to what is usually and generally termed the educational test on this side alone?

Mr. CLARK. Why, yes, I would vote for it without any hesitancy whatever. In fact, I did vote for it the other day when my colleague [Mr. BARTHOLDT] offered it; and I will vote against this bill unless it is fixed up better than it is now, too. This bill is too loosely drawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought not to be changed. It was made after conference with all the commissioners of immigration, the Secretary of the Treasury, and with the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and there is no reason why it should be stricken out; no good reason has been given, and there is no good reason. I hope it will be left as it is.

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent to print some remarks on this bill in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to print some remarks on this bill in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I understand that during my temporary absence from the floor the question has been raised as to whether an examination of emigrants in European ports of embarkation would in any way conflict with the rights of other governments, and whether such a system of inspection and examination would be tolerated by other governments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As to whether there is any law for it now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no law for it, but with the permission of the German Government—to cite one instance—a system of inspection is now in vogue in the city of Bremen, where the consul personally inspects every emigrant that goes on board of any ship leaving that port. He is assisted by a United States medical officer and by two physicians appointed by the Lloyd Steamship Company. No objection has ever been raised by the German Government against that system, and if we should give it the authority of law I do not think any objection would be raised either by the German or any other European government.

The point is this, Mr. Chairman: We want, if possible, to prevent the people barred under our laws from coming across the ocean, and thus avoid the necessity of sending them back. If possible we want to make the inspection on the other side, and prevent objectionable immigrants from embarking at all. That is the advantage of the system I propose over the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I do not advocate a system of certification, because that might bring an American consul in conflict with the laws of Europe. If, for instance, a young man who is subject to military duty should come to a port of embarkation, the consul, because of the law of the land, might be compelled to reject him. He would have to refuse him a certificate, at least. But what we want is merely for the consul to ascertain officially whether a man or a woman fulfills all the requirements of American law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt the gentleman from Missouri, I should like to make a suggestion or two and would like to have his judgment upon them. His theory is to have the inspection before embarkation. That would necessitate the employment of a physician and the furnishing of the machinery to this end. Now, in addition to that, if we have a system of careful inspection here, where the officers are under the jurisdiction and control, and under the eye and in direct responsibility to the people of the United States, would not that cast the burden upon the steamship companies that are bringing these people over here in violation of our laws because of their cupidity and their promotion of immigration? Would they not be compelled in self-defense to see, before these immigrants are embarked at all, that they will not be likely to be rejected here.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, this suggestion of mine would in no wise relieve the steamship companies from any responsibility. If an emigrant should slip through the picket line on the other side and come here and be found to be not admissible under our laws, he would be sent back and the steamship companies would have to pay the expense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHATTUC. I give notice now that there will be no more speaking on this bill unless it is germane. This talk has all been going on by unanimous consent. I permitted it out of regard for my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], and it has gone as far as I can allow it to go.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. With the courtesy of the gentleman from Missouri, I will only take a little time to ask him whether his theory is to have not only the system of inspection at the point of embarkation which he explained to us the other day, but also to have the severe United States examination at this end of the line, so as to secure the result, or would he have but one inspection?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question I will say that I am not in favor of the particular educational test proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I believe that is a very large proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But that is not the point I make.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. You ask an immigrant to understand and read the Constitution of the United States. That is a severe test. I might be more friendly to the proposition if you would substitute, for instance, the Bible, or some standard work on American history.

Mr. SHATTUC. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SHATTUC. This is not germane.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order. The pending amendment is the amendment to strike out the proviso at the end of section 16.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, the question is not as to the educational test, but suppose the gentleman has his way and has an inspection with reference to morality and physical condition in Germany, for instance, would he want likewise to have the severe examination that is proposed by this bill at this end of the line?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will say to my friend that we now have an examination at this end, and that examination as it is now conducted is in my judgment sufficient, if we have a thorough system of inspection and examination on the other side into the moral, physical, and mental qualifications of every immigrant proposing to come to us.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should be loath to surrender to a foreign port, or to the officers of the United States in a foreign country, the inspection of immigrants such as we ought to have to secure the requisites desired to be accomplished by this bill. We have an inspection now, we have an inspection under the eye and espionage of the United States people at home now, a charge upon the steamship companies, who are responsible under the laws, under which they are compelled to take back all such as by careful examination shall be found not admissible; and if it was to be done in the foreign port the navigation companies would be relieved from securing at their own expense surgeons to make this inspection.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Is not all the hullabaloo and cutting up about the hardship of this business based on the fact of the examination here and then sending them back across the ocean?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would suggest to the gentleman that the examination provided here, which is severe and under the espionage and under our control, more nearly makes the onus on the steamship companies not to embark the passengers, because they are to be taken back again if they are found to be not admissible.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Do you not think that Mr. BARTHOLDT'S amendment, providing for a mental, physical, and moral examination of these immigrants, will more certainly ascertain their fitness to come in than the so-called educational test?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The educational test has already been passed upon by the House. I would, if necessary, provide an additional examination—one at a foreign port and the other here. I think probably that the evil is so great as to warrant both examinations. Of this I am not certain.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment to strike out the last word. I want to say in opposition to the idea of foreign inspection that there are some very good reasons why the inspection of immigrants should be made in America and not in a foreign country. As suggested here the other day, if a young man wants to leave one of the foreign countries, such as Germany, Austria, or France, there is a law prohibiting his leaving there until he has rendered military service. If we have a consular inspection on the other side of the water, our consuls could not stay in that country and yet assist or help that immigrant in leaving his country; could not give him a certificate, no matter how well educated he was or how much we might want him here as a citizen; the consular officer of the United States could not under the comity of nations sign a certificate allowing that man to emigrate to this country while standing on foreign soil in violation of the laws of that country.

Mr. WACHTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WACHTER. Do you not agree to the fact that even if the inspection takes place on this side that the qualifications necessary for the entry of such an immigrant would be known all over the world?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that has nothing to do with my contention. It certainly would be known. I say a consular officer of the United States could not issue a certificate to immigrants on foreign soil, whereas when the immigrant had landed on our soil he can be inspected no matter whether he came to escape military duty or for any other reason. When we would not reject him we could accept him on this soil, but our consular officer residing in the country from which he came could not issue a certificate.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Do you not know that the consulate where the American consul is located is American territory anywhere?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Then why could not he issue a certificate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because we could not send a consular officer to a foreign country and maintain him there in violation of the laws of that country.

Mr. CLARK. It would not be in violation of any law there. It would be simply enforcing the laws of the United States on a particular subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the Empire of Germany there is a statute which provides that no young men shall leave that country until they shall have served time as soldiers of the Empire. Would it not be in violation of the laws of Germany if the consular officer of the United States residing in Germany aided one of these men to violate the laws of his own country?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly not. He simply certifies that under the laws of the United States that particular individual is a permissible immigrant to this country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the consular officer knows that under the law the man is subject to military service in that country. The point that I object to is, that no immigrant shall leave his own country until he gets the certificate of a consular officer of the United States instead of having him examined on this side.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I believe my friend from Alabama did not listen to my explanation. It is not intended, Mr. Chairman, that the consuls in the ports of embarkation shall issue certificates. It is not intended for the consuls to inquire whether the young man who offers himself as an immigrant complies with the German or the French or the English or any other law. The American consul does nothing but to say that the young man is all right as far as American law and American qualifications are concerned, or, on the other hand, he stops him then and there from proceeding any further.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand all that.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. He simply passes him and says, without any special certification, "This man is all right; he can go."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly there is no difference between the gentleman from Missouri and myself as to what the consul would do. I do not pretend the American consul would stay there and certify that the man was not violating the German law in leaving the German Empire; but I say that a man maintaining a consular office in Germany, if he authorized immigrants and gave to them a certificate when they were leaving Germany in violation of German law, could not stay there, because the Emperor would say that the consul was persona non grata, and he would not allow us to maintain a consular officer there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS rose.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I give notice that I shall move that debate be closed after the gentleman from New York has spoken.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the committee gave careful attention to this subject, and while it is, of course, possible and feasible to make examinations on the other side, yet at the same time it would necessitate the sending abroad of a large corps of doctors in the employ of the United States Government, as we naturally would not care to depend on foreign doctors, and it would entail unnecessary expense. It seems far best to have the final examination on the shores of our own country, because then we throw the onus or the responsibility on the steamship lines to make at ports of embarkation, according to our law, most careful and critical examination of all aliens before they are allowed to go on board the steamer. If they then make mistakes, if they do not safeguard properly the law which we provide that they must follow, the responsibility rests with them, and we have the privilege of correcting that error on their part when we inspect at this end. To have the consuls of the United States hire doctors on the other side, foreign doctors, would not fill the bill at all. It would be an unwise proposition, and I have been surprised to hear the gentleman from Missouri advocate anything of that kind, intelligent man that he is. We all know immigrants are most anxious to reach our shores, and that we are receiving far more of them than we ought to, and often not a class that commend themselves to our sympathy.

Under these circumstances foreign doctors dealing with their own countrymen would be able in many cases to give them certificates which would not be proper; whereas if final decision is left to our own physicians, when the alien arrives here, if careful selection was not made we can deport them.

If we allow the examination to be made abroad, there would be serious trouble here, because they would show certificates and claim that they had a right to land on our shores when they might not be fit to become citizens. This has been proved by the experience in other countries. The assertion has been made that other nations had this provision and it worked well. That is not quite correct. I know of no other nation that absolutely accepts the examination made in other countries, except where they offer a premium for immigration, where they desire to have certain people come to their shores, and then they even pay or partly pay for their passage. That has been done in South America and Australia and other places. But there the alien is so critically examined that there can be no question at all except so far as health is concerned, and this is also closely looked into.

Now, you take the physical examination on the other side, and it would be preposterous to accept it. It is well known that the change of the condition from land to sea will often develop diseases in a person who might be properly passed by the doctor on the other side and sail away with the most complete health, yet when he reaches our shores several weeks afterwards he will develop diseases undiscovered previously in his constitution.

Now, there are all these points which have been carefully considered and gone into by the committee, and I do not think it is advisable or wise to pass amendments to this act after it has been considered by the Department and by the committee, without giving serious thought and judgment to the question. They ought not to be offered and passed without looking them up in the most careful and critical manner.

Mr. CLARK. I would like to inquire if the gentleman knows whether President Roosevelt recommended the same identical thing that I have suggested in this amendment?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not object to the ideas of the President, but perhaps I would not always agree with him.

Mr. CLARK. No; but the gentleman was reflecting on my intelligence.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was applauding it. What I said, if I may answer the gentleman, was that the idea of inspection on the other side was not wise, and would cause more expense than if the work was done here.

Mr. CLARK. The question of expense cuts absolutely no figure in the matter. The efficiency of the examination is what you are after, in my judgment. I think if you had adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] the other day it would have relieved the whole situation. That provided for an entire examination—mental, physical, and moral.

Mr. METCALF. You do not propose to do away with the examination and inspection on this side?

Mr. CLARK. Oh, no.

Mr. METCALF. In other words, you provide for a double examination.

Mr. WACHTER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] a question. Suppose an immigrant is examined at Bremen and is given a "clean bill;" and suppose something transpires on the voyage which does not permit the landing of that person. What will be the status of such a person, having received a "clean bill" at Bremen, but being rejected here? At whose charge will such a person be returned, or can he get into this country?

Mr. CLARK. I think he ought to be let in. I do not believe that travel across the ocean develops any disease except sea sickness. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on the amendment of Mr. CLARK). The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CLARK. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SHATTUC and Mr. CLARK were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 17, with the amendments reported by the committee; which were agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHATTUC. On what subject?

Mr. PADGETT. On the subject of banking and currency.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the majority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency have submitted a report recommending the passage of H. R. 13363, commonly known as the Fowler banking and currency bill. The minority members of the committee have submitted a report adverse to said bill, setting forth reasons why said bill should not pass.

It is my purpose to call to the attention of the House the various provisions of said bill, and to set forth some of the reasons why we think the position of the minority members of the committee is well taken, and that the bill should be defeated.

This bill is very comprehensive and far-reaching in its scope, and we believe in its results will be very pernicious and destructive of the best interests of the country. The bill is exceedingly radical and will subvert the whole banking and currency system of the country, and we believe will be ruinous to the stability of our currency and subversive of the development of the banking system of the country. The bill is entitled "A bill to maintain the gold standard, provide an elastic currency, equalize the rates of interest throughout the country, and further amend the national banking laws." This is a very fascinating title. If the bill would provide an elastic currency and equalize the rates of interest throughout the country without carrying with it many evils which we are persuaded would result from its enactment, it would accomplish a much-needed and very desirable purpose.

But we do not believe that the bill would result in adding either strength or benefit to the present gold standard, nor do we believe that its passage would provide a safe and sound currency or lower or equalize the rates of interest throughout the country. On the contrary, we believe that it is a cumbersome and hazardous experiment, one calculated, in a large measure, to weaken and injure the existing banking and currency system. Instead of being an improvement upon the existing system or remedying existing evils and defects, it is calculated to create unrest and distrust throughout the country and weaken the confidence of the public in our whole financial fabric. The bill provides for the abolition of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and substitutes in his stead a board consisting of three members, whose term of office shall be twelve years, except that the terms of the first three members shall be for twelve, eight, and four years, respectively. The salary of each member of the board shall be $7,500 per annum.

While we would not emphasize or magnify with undue stress our dissent upon this provision in view of the subsequent more far-reaching evils of the bill, yet we think it proper to call attention to the fact that it increases the number of officers threefold and multiplies the salary expense nearly fivefold, not to mention such additional clerical expenses as this change will necessitate. It lengthens the term of office from five to twelve years. This we deem unwise and contrary to the fundamental ideas and practices of our Government from its foundation. For these changes we see no adequate necessity, nor do we believe any sufficient reasons exist. The contention of the majority that such a change will secure better service is fully met by the possibility of inferior service. It is easier to secure the reappointment of an efficient public servant than to get rid of an inefficient one holding by the tenure of office provided in this bill.

The provision of the bill that the salaries of the members of the board shall be paid out of the taxes collected from the banks upon their note circulation in no way meets the objection to the multiplication of public offices or the increase of public salaries. The tax upon the note circulation is only an indirect method of levying a tax upon the public.

The majority assert that one of the purposes of the bill is "to simplify and limit the Government fiscal operations." If such be true, we see no reason or necessity for increasing the number of officers and the increase of the salaries.

Section 2 of the bill provides for the issuance by the national banks of a currency based upon general assets, and also provides for the retirement and cancellation of the United States notes commonly known as greenbacks. It provides "that if any national bank shall assume the current redemption of an amount of United States notes equal to 20 per cent of its paid-up capital, it shall have the right, without depositing United States bonds as now provided by law, first, to immediately take out for issue and circulate an amount of bank notes equal to 10 per cent of its paid-up capital by paying a tax on the first days of January and July of each year of one-eighth of 1 per cent upon the average amount of such notes in actual circulation during the preceding six months."

Second, after the expiration of one year to take out for issue and circulate an amount of bank notes equal to 10 per cent of its paid-up capital upon the same terms.

At any time after the expiration of the second, third, fourth, and fifth year to take out for issue and circulate an amount of bank notes equal to 10 per cent of its paid-up capital for each of said years, upon which it shall pay a tax of 1¼ per cent per annum upon the average amount of such notes in circulation.

With the approval of the board of control, after the expiration of six years, it may take out an emergency circulation equal to 20 per cent, upon which it shall pay a tax of 3 per cent per annum, and with the approval of said board, after the expiration of seven years, may take out an emergency circulation of 20 per cent, upon which it shall pay a tax of 5 per cent per annum.

The bill provides that these bank notes shall constitute a first lien upon the assets of the bank.

While not combatting the proposition that it might be well by suitable regulations to provide for an emergency circulation properly safeguarded so as to afford a safe and sound currency to the people when needed, we are firmly persuaded that the scheme provided in this bill is unsafe, and that the currency will prove insecure and unsatisfactory in times of stress and panic.

We believe that it is apparent to all who will dispassionately consider the scheme that the large banks will hesitate to place upon themselves the burden of the current redemption in gold of the greenbacks as provided in the bill, nor do we believe that the banks in the smaller towns and villages, whose facilities for acquiring gold are limited, will inflict upon themselves the unequal and unjust burdens and discriminations which will result from the passage of this bill.

Under existing laws relative to bank reserves and the deposit thereof in the reserve cities and the central reserve cities, a very large amount of money, amounting at the present time to about $225,000,000, is derived from the banks of the other cities and villages of the United States and kept on deposit in the three central reserve cities. Under existing laws the national banks can deposit United States 2 per cent bonds and receive in circulating notes the par value of the bonds, and at the same time receive the interest on the bonds and only pay a tax of one-half of 1 per cent per annum on circulation.

Under the proposed bill, on the first 20 per cent of currency issue the tax is one-fourth per cent; on the next 40 per cent it is 1½ per cent; on the next 20 per cent it is 3 per cent, and on the next 20 per cent it is 5 per cent. In addition the bank is required to assume and maintain the current redemption in gold of an amount of greenbacks equal to 20 per cent of its capital stock.

We do not believe that the national banks would exchange the privileges of the existing law for the burdens of the proposed law, and the result would only be confusion in our monetary system and injury to the people. We believe that stability in our financial system is a condition not to be ignored and a virtue not to be despised. Especially is this true when the measure offered promises more of evil than of good.

The proposition involved in the bill is to authorize the national banks to issue a general asset currency pure and simple. We do not deem it necessary or proper at this time to discuss the propriety of authorizing national banks to issue currency, as that is not the question involved in this bill. We shall confine ourselves strictly to the propositions of this bill.

It will be noticed that the bill contains no provision requiring the maintenance of any metallic reserve of either gold or silver. In fact, by its subsequent provisions, as we shall note later on, it seeks to destroy utterly the silver dollar as standard money. The security provided for the payment of these notes of issue consists of a first lien upon the assets of the bank and a 5 per cent guaranty fund deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

We insist that it is unfair to the depositors of a bank to inaugurate a system of currency which is a first lien upon the deposits of the bank. The depositors are the best friends of every bank; they give it support and encouragement. Their deposits constitute the life blood of the institution, and we insist that it is not wise to inaugurate a system which subjects these deposits to a first lien in favor of the note holder. We know it is said that the notes are currency, and circulate as money and pass from hand to hand throughout the country to innocent holders, and that the innocent holder should be protected, and that he should not be forced to investigate the condition of the bank.

The force of this position we fully realize, but we insist that it is not necessary to institute in this country a system which will place the holder of the bank note in such a condition, and it would be unwise to inaugurate in our country any banking and currency system which would place the depositor in such a condition. It is not so in England, in Germany, or in France, which are the great commercial countries in the world; and we insist that it would be a financial outrage to inaugurate a system in this country that would place the depositors in the position of having their deposits taken to pay the notes of the bank. The depositors are as much creditors of the bank as the note holders.

These considerations only illustrate the weakness and fallacy of the position of the advocates of this bill. They assert that the 5 per cent guaranty fund will be more than adequate to secure the payment and afford ample protection to the entire bank issue. If their contention is true, why are they unwilling to allow it to constitute the guaranty for the payment of the note, and why do they insist that the deposits shall be liable under a first lien?

If the 5 per cent guaranty fund affords adequate protection, there is as much equity and justice in constituting the banks of the country a mutual and joint guarantor, through the medium of this 5 per cent guaranty fund, of the bank-note issue as there is to require the deposits to stand as such a guaranty. In fact, there is more equity and justice in the proposition, and it is better public policy. The bankers are better versed in such matters, have a more intimate and comprehensive knowledge of the situation, and have better opportunities and facilities for ascertaining and knowing the dealings and solvency or insolvency of the banks than the depositors. Moreover, such a liability would constitute every bank a lively agent to look after the solvency of the other banks, and in this way would exercise a healthy and benign influence in maintaining proper and legitimate banking.

On the other hand, the proposition of the majority to constitute the bank note a first lien upon the assets, and thereby subject the deposits to the payment of the bank notes, is an incentive to fraud and corruption, as it will be an invitation to the officers of the bank, upon its approaching insolvency, to scuttle the bank in favor of the local depositors. Especially do we consider this feature obnoxious in view of the other provisions of the bill which authorize the establishment of branch banks throughout this country and even in foreign countries. In such cases the depositor in the local branch would have no opportunity to acquaint himself with the conditions or methods of business of the parent bank or its other branches.

The provisions of the bill for the redemption of the notes of issue of the bank are at best questionable and uncertain. They will be sufficient for good times, but in seasons of financial stress and panic, when the people lose confidence in the banks and their management and hoard their money, the provisions made for the redemption of this asset currency are wholly insecure and insufficient.

The majority seek to support their contention for asset currency by reference to the history of the national-bank currency. There is no parallel between the two issues. The national banks have not in any sense issued an asset currency. The issues of the national banks have been secured by special deposit of Government securities. The public realize that the bank notes were absolutely secured and did not in any way or to any extent depend for their payment upon the solvency of the bank or the wisdom or honesty of its management. It is not difficult to perceive a wide difference between such a security and one depending for its payment upon the proper management of the bank and the honesty of its officials. In times of a general financial stress or panic, when the people lose confidence in banks and hoard their money and the bank notes return to the banks for redemption, it is not difficult to forecast the results of such a condition when the banks have to redeem their own notes in gold and also an amount of United States notes equal to 20 per cent of their capital, and there has been no provision of law for securing or maintaining a metallic reserve in the banks for redemption purposes.

The majority cite the history of European banks to support their theory of asset currency. Aside from the differences in political and social conditions, we think there is little, if any, comfort to them from these sources. The Bank of England does not issue asset currency at all. Every note in the Bank of England has behind it, in the bank, the full equivalent of gold, except about $84,000,000, which is secured by Government bonds.

In Germany the Imperial Bank is obliged to hold in its vaults, as security for its bank notes in actual circulation at any time, at least one-third in current German gold, Government certificates, or in bullion or foreign coin (the pound fine being reckoned at $348), and the balance in discounted notes which bear maturity of three months at the longest and on which the names of three, or at least two, persons known to be responsible stand as indorsers.

In France, while the law does not specifically provide for a definite metallic reserve, yet the fact is that the Bank of France holds a metallic reserve rarely, if ever, less than 75 per cent or 80 per cent of its outstanding note issue. It will be remembered that in none of these countries does free banking exist to any appreciable degree. Banking is a monopoly, and the Bank of England, the Bank of France, and the Imperial Bank of Germany not only have the practical monopoly of banking in those countries, but they are the fiscal agents of the Government and share an intimate relationship with the Government wholly at variance with our political conditions. The majority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency advocate a general asset currency for the reason, as they say, the demands of the business of the country will determine and regulate the volume thereof.

They lose sight of the fact that under the provisions of section 2 of the bill it requires five years in which to issue an amount equal to 60 per cent of the paid-up capital of the banks. This provision is a limitation upon the regulations of the business demands of the country, and is a denial of the right of the business demands to determine the volume of the currency in circulation. The emergency circulation provided for is only available after the lapse of six or seven years. The bill makes no provision for an emergency circulation during the six years following the passage of the act, and during the first five years limits the issue by the banks during any one year to 10 per cent of its paid-up capital. What assurance have we, if an emergency circulation is desirable and useful, that it will not be needed within the next six years? If it is dangerous to allow an emergency circulation to be issued during the next six years, what assurance have we that it will not be equally dangerous thereafter?

The outstanding United States notes amount to more than $346,000,000, and under the provisions of this bill, if the banks should avail themselves of its provisions and assume the current redemption of $130,000,000 of United States notes, immediately more than $216,000,000 of United States notes would be withdrawn from the circulation of the country, and only $65,000,000 of bank notes issued in lieu, and thus we would have a contraction of the currency of $151,000,000, which under the provisions of this bill could only be replaced at the rate of $65,000,000 a year upon the present basis of national bank capital. No good can result to the business interests of this country by so violent a contraction of the volume of currency and no provision available for an emergency circulation to supply its place.

After the expiration of seven years and all the provisions of the bill become operative, then it would be true, as the advocates of the bill claim, that an opportunity would be afforded for the demands of trade to regulate and determine the volume of currency. Under such conditions an asset currency encounters another danger. It is not always safe to allow the volume of currency to be determined by the borrowers of money. In such case the amount of the currency may increase or diminish according to the supposed rather than the real wants of business.

It occurs to us that under the latter conditions wild speculation or illegitimate combinations may bring about an undue inflation of the currency; and the insolvency of some large trading concerns return to the bank for redemption in gold an amount of notes which would prove embarrassing.

It occurs to us that the friends of this measure have embraced the popular misconception, which in our former history was so widespread throughout the country, "that banks in good credit can circulate a far greater sum than the actual quantum of their capital in metallic redemption money." This is the fundamental notion of all juggling with bank issues. This was the radical error in the system of banking in this country prior to 1860. The theory of the advocates of this bill seems to be that there is an amount of gold in circulation in this country adequate for all of its needs as the standard money of redemption, and that it is unnecessary to require that the banks shall keep and maintain any specific gold reserve to secure the redemption of their notes of issue. They further appear to harbor the thought that gold when employed merely as an instrument of exchange and alienation is dead stock, but when deposited in banks to become the basis of a paper circulation it acquires life and becomes active and productive.

Such was the theory and opinion of many of the bankers and financiers of former days in this country. We know of no better exposition of the fallacy of such a position than is contained in the following extract, taken from the treatise A History of Banking in all Nations:

> The bank commissioners of Ohio in 1842, in the bitter retrospect of the previous five years, quoted these words in order to say: "The experience of more than half a century since this opinion was expressed has failed to convince the American people that gold and silver are to be regarded as dead stock, except when placed in banks as a basis for the issue of their paper. This idea that gold and silver acquire life, activity, and productiveness only when placed in banks as a basis for paper issues rests upon the assumption that bank notes to an indeterminate extent may be thrown into circulation and that a proportionate increase will be given to the commercial, manufacturing, and agricultural interests of the country."

Out of the same period of sackcloth and ashes, when delusions had been dispelled and things appeared in their naked truth, the governor of Ohio said:

> The great error which prevails on this subject (banks of issue) has its origin in the common, vague impression that we are dependent on the bank-paper system for the supply of a sufficient quantity of the circulating medium, and that without bank paper commerce would not flourish, business would stagnate, and the country cease to advance in prosperity and improvement. This fallacy is the chief cause of that superstitious attachment to the paper system, which with some has become idolatry.
>
> Vain indeed would be the attempt to hedge in the circulating medium of a country and pump it up to fullness by the ministry of banking institutions.

We contend that it is neither safe nor prudent to authorize national banks to issue an asset currency as provided in this bill. We further insist that this bill fails properly to protect and safeguard the interests of the public against the dangers of an asset currency. Such a system of banking depends for its success upon the wisdom and integrity of its management, and a failure in either of these respects wrecks the bank and destroys its note circulation and is calculated to produce financial panic.

Commenting upon the Scotch system of banking, Mr. Sumner says:

> It requires vigilance, sagacity, science, and moderation on the part of the bankers. The freer any system is, the more it requires these characteristics. The Scotch banks have succeeded because their managers have possessed these qualities. The same system on a paper basis or managed by unreasoning avarice is a short road to ruin.

The same conservatism in banking does not prevail in this country as in Scotland or England or the European countries. In this country banking is conducted upon a more liberal basis, and greater risks are assumed and more extensive financial enterprises are undertaken. And, having in view these differences of conditions and the sweeping changes and insufficiently guarded and poorly protected provisions of the bill relative to the issue of asset currency, we fear this bill would prove a short road to ruin in times of panic and financial distress. The majority report embodies certain statistics showing the amount of deposits and note circulation in the banks of Scotland, of England, France, Germany, and various States in this country.

In our opinion the majority report fails to apprehend or express the proper conclusion to be drawn from these statistics. The true lesson to be learned is that in countries having large accumulations of wealth the bank deposits are large and their note circulation relatively small; while in countries not so conditioned, the note circulation is large and the deposits are small. In other words, the deposits represent the accumulation of wealth, while the note circulation represents the use of credit.

In support of the contention for an asset currency, reference is made to the history of the Suffolk system from 1840 to 1860. This was the period of financial ease and prosperity. Let us call to your attention a quotation from A History of Banking in All Countries, showing the workings of this system during the panic times from 1830 to 1840:

> Between the years 1831 and 1833 a great increase took place in the number of banks in New England. During this period 90 new banks were chartered, of which 45 were located in Massachusetts. The Suffolk bank became overloaded with redeemed bills. The banks were slow in making remittances, and the accounts of many of them were overdrawn. Accordingly, the Suffolk bank sent a circular to such of its correspondents as it allowed to overdraw, informing them that on account of the scarcity of money and in order to have some control over its own funds overdrafts must be limited to $10,000. * * * In 1834 the redemption business had increased fivefold—from $80,000 to $400,000 daily. * * * These bills poured into the Suffolk bank for redemption, and in April, 1836, it sent out a circular letter to 44 banks whose accounts were overdrawn in the aggregate sum of $864,000, saying that it would send their bills home.

As stated before, this bill fails to make any provision requiring the banks to keep and maintain a metallic reserve to insure the redemption of its notes. This we regard as a positive defect. It is unsound banking. It encourages and fosters a carelessness and looseness in banking which may prove very disastrous to the country. It is very unwise to authorize a system of banking having a general asset currency and wholly fail to provide for or require the maintenance of a metallic reserve sufficient to insure the redemption of the bank notes. "Redemption in coin on demand constitutes the essential soundness of a banking currency, and a bank should keep a coin reserve constantly in its vaults to pay depositors who desire coin, and to redeem its circulating notes. This proportion is sometimes reckoned at one-third of the demand liabilities, but is often permitted by law to be less, and is often required by prudent banking to be more. 'The intensity of the liability,' in the language of Mr. Bagehot, is to be considered as well as the amount, and 'the cardinal rule is that errors of excess are innocuous, but errors of defect are destructive.'" The foregoing is the language of Mr. Conant, in his treatise, History of Modern Banks of Issue, and is deserving of weighty consideration and serious attention in view of the failure of this bill to provide any metallic reserve.

We do not believe that the national banks of this country should be authorized to establish branch banks at such places as they may determine and issue an asset currency inadequately secured and defectively safeguarded and at the same time make the deposits of its customers security for the currency notes of the bank. No such system exists anywhere that we now recall. In the French and German system, cited by the advocates of this measure, no such preference is given. The depositors and note holders, as creditors of the bank, have equal rights.

The bill further provides for the cancellation and retirement of the United States notes known as greenbacks. It contemplates that the national banks shall assume the current redemption in gold of $130,000,000 of greenbacks and provides that $65,000,000 shall be redeemed and canceled by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the general gold in the Treasury,

It further provides that as soon as the national banks shall have assumed the current redemption of $130,000,000, and the United States has redeemed and canceled $65,000.000 of United States notes, no national bank shall thereafter pay out any United States notes, the current redemption of which has not been assumed by some national bank, but shall return the same to the United States Treasury for redemption, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem the same out of the gold coin in the issue and redemption division of the Treasury, and they shall not be reissued, but shall be canceled and destroyed. And after the first presentation and cancellation of any United States note in accordance with the provisions of this law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall not pay out or issue any gold certificates. This means the early retirement of the entire issue of greenbacks except the $130,000,000 assumed by the national banks, if the banks avail themselves of the provisions of this law, and the substitution therefor of a national bank-note issue of asset currency inadequately protected and not possessing the quality of full legal-tender money.

We oppose the retirement of the greenbacks at this time and in the manner provided in this bill. If it should be deemed necessary to retire the greenbacks, there is a safer and better way to do so. We insist that a general asset note of a national bank issued under the provisions of this bill is not any improvement upon the paper money now in existence, and we see no good to be accomplished by retiring the greenbacks in the way contemplated in this bill.

Mr. William G. Sumner, in discussing the question of the retirement of paper issue and the substitution therefor of other paper issue, uses the following language:

> If the withdrawal of the paper should be resolved upon, the best way to accomplish it is the one which is simplest and most straightforward—that is, to raise a surplus revenue and with it cancel the Government issues.
>
> It is not consistent with the present purpose to criticise the various schemes which have been proposed. They all involve some kind of conversion of one sort of paper into another, and every such change complicates a system already far too intricate, and every such change involves chances of unforeseen events or of unexpected effects, for they consist of experiments on totally untried ground.
>
> Some of these schemes involve no actual reduction of the outstanding paper, and can lead to nothing but expense and injury to the public credit.

We fail to see the right or to appreciate the justice of requiring the national banks to assume the redemption of the United States notes. The Government is able to care for and protect its own obligations, and if it is necessary to redeem these United States notes the Government can do so without shifting this obligation upon the banks.

We believe that the passage of this bill authorizing the establishment of branch banks throughout the United States would result in the formation of a few banks of large capital, which would establish branches at the desirable points throughout the country and suppress the local banks and thereby secure control of the banking of the country, and thereafter these banks would form a combination and have control of the finances of the country. In our opinion such would be the worst calamity that could befall our people. We can conceive of no condition which would equal in its disaster the placing of the money power of this country in the hands of a money trust. Such a condition would mean financial dictation such as was never experienced in this country. It would invite and lead to political intrigue and corruption that would hazard the perpetuity of our popular institutions and the preservation of our liberties.

The student of financial history will at once recall the intrigue and political corruption which characterized the old United States Bank in the early history of our country. The branch system of banking has established monopoly in banking in England, France, Germany, and the other countries where it prevails. In this country the great underlying principle or theory of government is that the power and authority of government is disseminated among and vested in the masses of the people. In the monarchies of the Old World a contrary principle prevails. There the sovereignty of government is withdrawn from the people and is vested in a sovereign ruler. Monopoly of banking may exist alongside of monopoly of sovereignty vested in a monarch. But monopoly of banking and monopolistic control of the money power is antagonistic to every principle of a republic and poisonous to its very existence.

Another consideration deserving of serious attention is if the parent bank fails it pulls down all of its branches in its ruin and spreads disaster throughout the country, and in many instances may prove a national calamity.

In 1878 the City of Glasgow Bank of Scotland, with its 131 branches, failed for about $70,000,000. Speaking of this, the American Encyclopedia says:

> The failure of the City of Glasgow Bank on October 2, 1878, amounted to almost a national disaster, reducing hundreds and thousands of families in the south of Scotland to beggary.

The failure of the Western Bank of Scotland in 1857 for about $15,000,000, together with its many branches, is another illustration. Mr. Conant says:

> The Scotch system of banks of issue comes nearer to the ideal of successful free banking than that of any other country.

If such failures and financial disasters are possible under such a system in such a small and conservative country as Scotland, what would be the limit of disaster and ruin in this country of mighty financial undertakings? Many other such instances might be cited, but we deem it unnecessary.

The friends of this bill deny that it will result in financial monopoly, and yet we find in the speech of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], delivered in the House of Representatives May 9, 1902, the following significant statement relative to the issue of bank notes:

> Personally, I would have preferred to have limited the issue privilege to banks of not less than half a million capital, or, better yet, to one large bank in each redemption district, or, best of all, to one bank in New York City; but none of these propositions is politically possible to-day, and can only become so by a process of evolution, a process which we must admit to be in excellent working order just now.

No one is more intimately identified with this bill or has contributed more to its construction or better comprehends its ultimate purposes and results than Mr. HILL, and in view of his close relationship with this bill, the above statement is pregnant of meaning when he says, speaking of the process of the evolution for securing one large bank of issue in New York City, "a process which we must admit to be in excellent working order just now."

A branch bank system is calculated to destroy local pride and paralyze local efforts and undermine that spirit of thrift, enterprise, and local endeavor which is of incalculable value to every community.

Manhood is of more value than money, and local pride and patriotism, coupled with a spirit of thrift and enterprise engaged in developing the country and fostering its industries, is more to be considered than interest rates. In our judgment the passage of this bill means the creation of an immense money trust, the establishment by law of a financial monopoly. No longer will a free banking system exist in this country. These free banks and free banking systems will disappear from this country with the same rapidity and unerring certainty that they have disappeared in England, France, Germany, and all the other countries where a branch-bank system has been inaugurated. It is impossible for the two systems to stand together, and to-day, as we debate this measure, we stand face to face with the proposition that the people of this country must choose between a free banking system or a monopoly banking system.

This assertion is no mere guesswork, nor is it a mere surmise. In France the contest between free banks and branch banks, or as it is denominated in history, between monopoly and liberty, has been waging since 1848, and has resulted in the complete destruction of free banks and the establishment of monopoly banking. For years this same warfare was waged in Germany and in England with the same results—the death of the free-bank system and the establishment of monopoly banking. Between these two systems there can be no affiliation and no harmony, and the testimony of history is that a branch-bank system means the death of a free-bank system and the establishment of monopoly banking. In all of these countries the local independent banks have steadily disappeared and been absorbed by the large central bank until to-day the Bank of England controls and dictates the finances of England and enjoys a practical monopoly of issuing currency. In France the Bank of France enjoys the monopoly of note issue and controls the finances of the country.

The Imperial Bank of Germany was organized in 1876, and under the law was allowed to establish branches. Since that time the decadence of the independent banks has steadily continued, and at the beginning of 1896 there remained only six banks of issue in the Empire. We have not at hand the later statistics and are not prepared to state how many banks of issue of these six still remain. A like system of monopoly banking exists in Canada, and we have it upon reliable information that the rate of interest is higher under the branch system than it is under the independent banking system across the line in this country.

The advocates of this measure claim for it that it will reduce and equalize the rate of interest throughout the country. They seem to forget that interest rates are determined largely by local conditions and the character of the security offered. They seem to forget that the conditions of the world's money market exercise controlling influences upon the interest rates, and that the rates of interest vary at different times and in different localities, as the prices of commodities. Speaking upon this question, Mr. Conant says:

> The folly of attempting to maintain a uniform rate of interest or discount is on a par with maintaining a uniform price of wheat. Money is governed by exactly the same laws as commodities.

Money and capital are regulated by the laws of supply and demand. Under a free banking system it is difficult, if not impossible, to "corner" the money of the country, but under a branch banking system the parent bank dictates and controls the financial conditions, and it can increase or diminish the money supply as it may suit the purposes of the managers. This country is not without both observation and experience as to the practical workings of monopoly. We know that the glass trust raised the price of glass, the nail trust raised the price of nails, the steel trust raised the price of iron products, the sugar trust raises the price of sugar, the Standard Oil trust fixes the price of oil at such figure as may be necessary to yield its predetermined dividends. Why should the credulity of the American people be taxed to believe that a money trust, a banking trust, having a monopoly of the banking and currency of this country, would not be actuated by the same motives and pursue the same selfish purposes as these others have done? None of them having the power or the opportunity have refused to avail themselves of every occasion to suppress competition and to secure every advantage.

Mr. Chairman, I can not refrain from again asserting that it would be a most hazardous experiment and a most dangerous piece of legislation to surrender the money power of this country into the control of any monopoly. I am unable to conceive or properly and adequately to express the evil consequences and the direful results which would result from such a policy. Again would I call attention to the potent influences which would be exercised in the politics of this country by such an institution, and the opportunities of intrigue, fraud, and corruption which such a condition would offer are fearful to contemplate, when we bear in mind the spirit of corporate aggregation and aggrandizement abroad in the land, and the purposes manifested to subordinate all interests to these ends, so that the few may control the wealth and exercise power and influence over the many.

The bill further provides that the board of control shall have power to charter clearing houses with such charter powers and authority as the board of control may authorize and approve, and it further provides that the Government shall cease to issue gold certificates, and these clearing houses shall have the exclusive right to issue gold certificates. We deem it unwise that the Government should surrender this power to private corporations. It is another evidence which makes manifest the ease and facility of the organization of a money trust, and the completeness thereof when organized. Only to a limited extent does gold enter into active circulation. It is represented in trade and commerce by the gold certificate, and when the Government yields to these clearing houses the sole power and privilege of issuing gold certificates it clothes them with the authority and the opportunity to control and manipulate the circulation of gold in the country, and to increase or diminish the amount of gold in active circulation, as it may suit their purposes. This we regard as a dangerous innovation into the finances of this country. The Government should sacredly cherish and preserve unto itself every right and privilege and facility which relates to the coin issues of the country or which affect their circulation, and should never surrender to any private institution any portion of such rights and privileges, nor yield to them an opportunity to manipulate or limit their circulation.

The bill makes provision for the redemption, by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the standard silver dollars in gold. This we regard as a radical departure from all precedent and theory of finance, and wholly unnecessary, and not responsive to the sentiment of the country or demanded by its business interests. As far as we are informed or have been able to ascertain no other country in the world resorts to such a practice. Its friends contend that it will strengthen the existing gold standard. Of this we have grave doubts. It is our opinion that it will weaken the gold standard and place upon it unnecessary weight and burden. It will be recalled that under previous sections of the bill 150,000,000 of gold from the redemption division and 65,000,000 from the general fund in the Treasury have been consumed in the redemption of the greenbacks, and under the operation of that portion of the act relating to clearing houses the gold is diverted from the Treasury into the clearing houses, and there will only remain in the Treasury an amount of gold equal to 5 per cent of the outstanding circulation of silver.

Heretofore it has been insisted that it was necessary to maintain in the Treasury, for the redemption of the greenbacks, $100,000,000 of gold, which is nearly 30 per cent of the outstanding greenbacks, and since the act of March 14, 1900, it has been required to keep in the Treasury, for the redemption of greenbacks and Treasury notes, $150,000,000 of gold, which is about 40 per cent.

This bill proposes to maintain a redemption fund of 5 per cent to redeem the silver. If the 5 per cent guaranty fund is sufficient it demonstrates that silver does not require redemption in gold. If silver requires redemption in gold, then 5 per cent is an insufficient guaranty fund, and the bill is faulty and liable to produce financial disturbances.

France maintains a large circulation of legal-tender silver alongside of gold; the silver is not convertible into gold, yet there is no difficulty in maintaining her silver circulation on a parity with gold.

In speaking of this Lord Farrer says:

> The notes of the Bank of France are convertible into gold or silver at the option of the bank. * * * There is no difficulty in maintaining either the silver or the notes at their gold value.

From the recent edition of Mr. David K. Watson's History of American Coinage we make the following quotation:

> The following are the gold-standard countries, with the amount of gold and silver in circulation in each:
> The United Kingdom, including England, Ireland, and Scotland, has $550,000,000 of gold, with $112,000,000 of silver.
> France, $825,000,000 of gold, with $494,000,000 of silver.
> Germany, $625,000,000 of gold, with $215,000,000 of silver.
> Belgium, $75,000,000 of gold, with same amount of silver.
> Italy, $90,000,000 of gold and $30,000,000 of silver.
> Switzerland, $15,000,000 of each.
> Russia, $455,000,000 of gold and $48,000,000 of silver.
> Turkey, $50,000,000 of gold and $40,000,000 of silver.
> Japan, $88,000,000 of silver and $80,000,000 of gold.

In all of the above-named countries the gold standard is maintained and no difficulty is experienced in maintaining the silver circulation on a parity with gold, and in none of said countries is the silver currency legally convertible into gold, nor is there any legislation requiring the Government upon demand to redeem the silver in gold.

In the United States the amount of gold in circulation, including bullion in the Treasury, is about $1,183,000,000, and the amount of silver, including bullion in the Treasury, is about $537,000,000.

It will be seen that the relative amount of gold and silver in circulation in the United States is not out of proportion to that in circulation in the other countries, and there will be no difficulty in maintaining our silver circulation at a parity with gold. There is not now any demand upon the Treasury for the redemption of the silver in gold, and we deem it unwise for the majority to produce this agitation and precipitate upon the country this discussion, the tendency of which will be to produce a needless agitation of the money question and unsettle finances.

What this country needs at this time is quiet and rest and stability on financial questions and a cessation of financial disturbances.

The passage of this bill will place upon the Treasury the burden of current redemption in gold of more than $530,000,000 of silver, while it takes all of the gold out of the Treasury except a minimum of 5 per cent of the outstanding silver maintained as a guaranty fund. Instead of accomplishing the purposes of its advocates and taking the Treasury out of the banking business, it places upon the Treasury much larger banking duties and responsibilities. Instead of destroying the endless chain for depriving the Treasury of gold, it creates additional facilities for reaching the gold in the Treasury. The gold in the banks can be obtained by presenting for redemption the bank notes and the United States notes, which the banks have assumed to redeem in gold.

The gold in the Treasury can be reached by presenting silver for redemption. By these means this bill will prove a burden upon the Treasury instead of a support and relief. The facilities for acquiring gold for export are multiplied, and the Government would be powerless to protect it.

Mr. Chairman, the patriotism I bear to my country, the esteem I cherish for her institutions, the honor and the respect I have for my Government, and the affection and love I feel for my people impel me to hope that the evils of this legislation shall not be inflicted upon them.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word. We are now legislating to protect this country from undesirable immigration. It may not be out of place to call attention to a recent occurrence which is certainly an imposition upon the House of Representatives, from which we should in the future be protected.

It will be remembered that some time since Congress voted an appropriation for the expenditure of certain moneys, incident to the reception of the statue of Rochambeau. For the ceremonies upon last Saturday, for the members of this House seats were provided by the committee having the matter in charge, that committee being presided over, I think, by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY]; and we were advised by that gentleman in person, and also, as I remember, in making his report on the committee's action, that there were no reserved seats; that members of the House would be provided with two seats each; and it was so announced in the papers.

Upon arriving at the platform assigned for Representatives, their families, and friends to witness the ceremonies incident to that occasion, members of the House found that a certain number of the seats nearest the statue of Rochambeau and nearest the stand occupied by the President, the diplomatic corps, and others were in charge of an employee of the House; and members who were there with their families, having as much right as the gentleman from Minnesota or any other gentleman who is a member of this honorable body to entrance there—members who had gone early in order to obtain seats—found these most desirable seats unoccupied, and when they attempted to appropriate them they were advised by the employee of the House that they were reserved. I was unable to ascertain at the time from him, as were other members, just who were the fortunate beneficiaries of the action of the gentleman who had the matter in charge on behalf of the House of Representatives. To-day he informs me that it was by direction of the chairman of the Library Committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY], and the Third Assistant Secretary of State, and upon approaching the gentleman from Minnesota he tells me that he assumes responsibility for that action.

Now, in the name of by far the major part of the membership of this House that has no desire to make exceptions in behalf of any member—that does not recognize that any members of the House are entitled to greater recognition in the distribution of the courtesies and favors which belong to this body than any other member—I desire to denounce in the most unqualified and positive manner the action of the members having this matter in charge as a gross and flagrant indignity to the members of this House. So far as I am personally concerned, it makes very little difference to me, because, having gone very early, in order that I might secure a seat, I had personally a very fair seat upon that occasion.

But we have had a good deal of talk about flunkyism and favoritism and about sending our "emissaries" abroad to attend the coronation of a king and about our receiving statues here made in the image of an emperor, and I think we might have a little reform at home and at least express, on behalf of this House, our positive, unqualified disapprobation and disapproval of the action of the committee of arrangements on this occasion, who have attempted to favor certain members of this House upon the assumption that they are more worthy of consideration than the rest of the membership. I pronounce the action I complain of a gross indignity upon the members of the House thus discriminated against. It was indefensible and in violation of assurances given the House and its members personally. It was very reprehensible and ought to be severely condemned.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For whom were those seats reserved?

Mr. BALL of Texas. They were reserved for certain members of the House and their friends. I do not care to call any names. I make the statement and it will not be denied.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That it shall be the duty of the officers and agents of any vessel bringing an alien or aliens to any port of the United States to adopt due precautions to prevent the landing of any alien from such vessel at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers at the port of arrival, and any such officer, agent, or person in charge of such vessel who shall either knowingly or negligently land or permit to land any alien at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers at the port of arrival, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction be punished by a fine for each alien so permitted to land of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 18, in lines 18 and 19, by striking out the words "knowingly or negligently." Now, the difference in the situation that the striking out of those few words would make is this: Under the section as it is drawn it throws on the Government the burden of proving that the officer, agent, etc., of the steamship company either knew of these things or neglected to do them. If you strike out the words it throws the burden on the steamship company instead of on the Government. That is the whole tale in a nutshell.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman what are the words that he wants stricken out?

Mr. CLARK. In lines 18 and 19 strike out the words "knowingly or negligently."

Mr. RUCKER. Would that read the way the gentleman wants it?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, "who shall either land or permit to land," etc.

Mr. RUCKER. My idea was that the gentleman would want to incorporate in his motion the word "either."

Mr. CLARK. Yes; strike out the word "either" also; so that my motion is to amend by striking out, in lines 18 and 19, the words "either knowingly or negligently."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman if he would convict a man and put him in jail or submit him to a fine for doing a thing not knowingly or negligently?

Mr. CLARK. No; I would not do anything of the sort, but the difficulty is here that they know it, and there is no question about it. I will say that the steamship company does know and it is no hardship on it at all.

Mr. PALMER. I never would convict a man of a crime unless he knew he was committing it.

Mr. CLARK. Neither would I.

Mr. PALMER. Under the law of the United States there are certain crimes which a man can commit without knowing the fact.

Mr. CLARK. I never heard of one.

Mr. PALMER. I can tell the gentleman of one. Under the revenue laws it used to be the law that if a man had in his possession an empty barrel with a paid tax stamp upon it which was not canceled he was liable to be put into the penitentiary.

Mr. CLARK. I know, but every man is supposed to know the laws of his own country.

Mr. PALMER. Would the gentleman convict a man for violating a law that he did not know, or for committing a criminal act without knowing it? Can a man commit a crime without knowing it?

Mr. CLARK. The gentleman just cited a case where he could. [Laughter.]

Mr. PALMER. I am opposed to that kind of law.

Mr. CLARK. I did not think he could until the gentleman told me of that case.

Mr. PALMER. If the amendment offered by the gentleman passed, then he would put these people in the same category.

Mr. CLARK. All the difference is this, if the amendment is adopted it makes the steamship companies attend to their business, and if you do not adopt it they will always plead ignorance and that they did not know. They are up to their business, and there is no doubt about that.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SHATTUC. That very identical language has been in the law, if I remember correctly, for eighteen years.

Mr. CLARK. May I interrupt the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHATTUC. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. The gentleman has gotten up a codification here. It is no argument in favor of a law that it has been the law. If the gentleman has simply brought the old laws here to codify them and has not made any changes in them, or if the committee had not, then the argument would be good, but the gentleman is estopped by his own action.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. SHATTUC. If the gentleman were a business man, as I am——

Mr. CLARK. I am.

Mr. SHATTUC. And not a lawyer, and there was a law like this which we had been working under for eighteen years, and there never had been any trouble at all about it, I would ask the gentleman whether he would rather have that law remain as it is for the future or take the advice of an attorney who had looked at it for, perhaps, ten minutes, and suggested a new law.

Mr. CLARK. I would state to the gentleman that if I had the power I would write a new law.

Mr. SHATTUC. Undoubtedly; but that can not be done while I have the floor. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment simply on the ground that the steamship companies are entitled to certain protection. It would not be fair to fine them if they brought a passenger over here in violation of the law, when they did not know anything about it at all. I think the amendment is out of place, and I think the law is a proper one simply because there has been no trouble in enforcing it, and there would have been some trouble if it had been a bad law.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHATTUC. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman says this law has been in force for a good while, and that no trouble has been experienced.

Mr. SHATTUC. If I remember correctly, that is so.

Mr. COCHRAN. And the gentleman thinks this amendment might get the steamship companies into trouble.

Mr. SHATTUC. That is the way it looks to me.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not the object of the immigration laws to give them trouble every time they seek to introduce into the country emigrants prohibited by the statute?

Mr. SHATTUC. No; it is the object of the Government to be fair and manly with everybody,

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman thinks being fair would be not to give them any trouble if they happened to bring in a few who were prohibited by this statute?

Mr. SHATTUC. We are not here for the purpose of punishing the steamship companies. We want to do what is right by the steamship companies and by the United States as well.

Mr. COCHRAN. And you do not want them to have any trouble with this immigration law?

Mr. SHATTUC. We do not want to treat them unjustly under this immigration law.

Mr. COCHRAN. And you think it would be unjust to give them any trouble under this law?

Mr. SHATTUC. Oh, that is trifling. That is a question that I do not feel called upon to answer.

Mr. CLARK. If the chairman of the committee and the committee will adopt the amendment that I want adopted, in section 13, it would relieve the situation of all difficulty.

Mr. SHATTUC. Well, if there is any gentleman in this House who could come to us and ask us to do that, and succeed in persuading us against our will, it is Mr. CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri; and it is with great reluctance that I am forced to say we can not do it for him.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question being taken, on a division demanded by Mr. SHATTUC, there were—ayes 45, noes 38.

Mr. SHATTUC. Tellers.

Tellers were refused, 13 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand therefor.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That all aliens belonging to any one of the excluded classes mentioned in section 2 of this act shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back to the countries whence they respectively came on the vessels bringing them. The cost of their maintenance while on land, as well as the expense of the return of such aliens, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessels on which they respectively came; and if any master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessels shall refuse to receive back on board thereof such aliens, or shall neglect to detain them thereon, or shall refuse or neglect to return them to the foreign port from which they came, or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land, such master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not less than $300 for each and every such offense; and any such vessel shall not have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid: Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may suspend, upon conditions to be prescribed by the Commissioner-General, the deportation of any alien or aliens found to have come under promise or agreement of labor or service of any kind if, in his judgment, the testimony of such alien or aliens is necessary on behalf of the United States Government in the prosecution of offenders against the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act: Provided, That the cost of maintenance of any person so detained resulting from such suspension of deportation shall be paid from the "immigrant fund," but no alien certified, as provided in section 17 of this act to be suffering with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease other than one of a quarantinable nature, shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in the hospitals of the United States.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 14, lines 19 and 20, after the word "immigration," insert the words "under the direction or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1 and 2, page 14, strike out the words "belonging to any one of the excluded classes mentioned in section 2 of this act" and insert "brought into this country in violation of law."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the provision of the law, as it now is, is not consistent with the amendment that has been adopted. This provides that those who are brought in in violation of section 2, which contains the list of those who are sick and otherwise unfit, shall be returned. Since that the committee have adopted section 3, which provides that persons who are unable to pass an educational test shall not be allowed to enter. The law, therefore, should be changed, and should provide that all those who are brought into this country in violation of law should be returned. I think the chairman will agree with me that there is no reason why persons who are illegally brought in under one section should be returned and those illegally brought in under another section should not be returned. This is merely to correct the law to correspond with the changes the committee have already made in the law.

Mr. SHATTUC. The committee will accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal of the imperialistic policy of the Republican party in annexing foreign territory without the consent of the inhabitants and in providing government therefor against and in absolute derogation of the Constitution. We have seen the gradual but sure tendency toward stronger centralization of power in every department of the Federal Government, the rights of the States becoming less and less recognized and secure and the central Government becoming more and more grasping and powerful.

To those of us who still regard as sacred the individual rights of the citizen, the reserved rights of the States, and the limitations upon the delegated powers of the General Government this departure, this changed condition, is fraught with the gravest danger. In the open and almost boastful disregard of the Constitution, which is the supreme will of the people, we see the final overthrow of our whole system, depending as it was intended it should upon the fundamental principle that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

No policy of trade or territorial aggrandizement can repay the fearful cost of such a result. The specious pretexts of becoming a "world power" or of securing commercial supremacy, are but the fraud and deceit designed to filch from us our birthright of individual liberty and civic virtue.

The bill entitled "A bill for the promotion of commerce," but more generally and properly known as the Hanna-Payne ship-subsidy bill, presents to us the latest effort of the Republican party in its policy of imperialism, subjugation, and plunder. In the provisions of this bill is found the germ of a commercial imperialism which, if nurtured by the approval of the Congress of the United States, will have its flower and fruit in the slavery of all industry and enterprise to a well-selected and highly favored few.

The gigantic growth of trusts and monopolies in this country is, in my judgment, more dangerous, if possible, than any political policy of the Government, which, if not checked and restrained, will result in the complete control not only of the political rights of the people, but of their industrial and commercial liberty as well. It was but recently that a combination of all the large railroad interests was effected by which five companies, composed largely of the same persons, propose to divide the United States among themselves, each controlling a division, and all working for a common purpose, that purpose being the entire control of railroad business of the country and the stifling of all competition. We have about 185,000 miles of railroad, and of this all but 70,000 miles is under the control of this syndicate.

All the important roads are in the combination, the rest being for the most part secondary and remote from the great routes of travel and traffic. Five men representing these five companies can dictate rates for every bit of transportation which crosses the line of two States, as most of our traffic does. The direct outgrowth of this railroad combination is Mr. Pierpont Morgan's combination of the leading steamship lines into a union to control the carrying trade of the oceans. All traffic must be a matter of joint railroad and steamship control, and the steamship trust is an adjunct to the railroad trust. As the representatives of the steamship trust say, "the trust is meant to safeguard our other interests," referring undoubtedly to the railroad trust. There will be no competition for freight between the steamships and the railroads. They will work together, and the two interests are to have a unified head.

The effect of the combination is obvious. Freight rates and markets being the important factors in the prosperity of a country, the people will be at the mercy of this combine, being compelled to pay arbitrary rates for the transportation of their products and to send them to whatever markets are chosen for them. In this manner the toil of the masses of the people is to be fettered and enslaved for the benefit of a few plutocrats who already roll in millions wrung from the people by commercial monopoly, aided by unjust class legislation.

This bill is directly in the interest of these two combinations, proposing by its terms to present them with thousands of dollars annually for an indefinite length of time. There is no pretense that any return is going to be made for this money. It is simply a bounty.

I am opposed to this bill and all legislation of this character, upon the broad ground that it is vicious in principle. To legislate large sums of money out of the Treasury and into the pockets of certain people, without any consideration whatever, is the most abhorrent form of paternalism and special favor. This vast expenditure of public money must be raised by force of law from the people—the masses will be taxed in order to enrich the few. To demand money from the people for such a purpose is abusive of every principle of human justice, and is not taxation, but highway robbery and spoliation under the guise of law. No policy of expediency or even necessity can justify or excuse such abuse of legislative authority.

The golden rule of legislative action is found in that fundamental tenet of Democratic faith, "Equal rights to all; special privileges to none"—the protection of all men in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the fruits of their labor, and such legislation that no one shall enjoy greater benefit from it or be subjected to heavier burdens under it than another. When we have accomplished this we have done all that can be done, and the people, left to appropriate the blessings of the Almighty, will fail or succeed in the proportion that they embrace or neglect opportunity.

I would be content to rest my objections to this measure upon these broad, general principles but for the fact that attempts have been made to make support of this bill a patriotic duty, which we as Americans owe to our love for and pride in our country. We are told that we must rouse ourselves as a nation and no longer be humiliated by the fact that 90 per cent of our foreign commerce is carried on by foreign ships. This condition can not be overcome, we are told, unless the United States Government will give to our shipowners a large subsidy in order to enable them to compete with foreign nations for the carrying trade of the world. Three reasons are given as to why this subsidy is necessary, and I propose to examine them briefly in order to demonstrate how groundless they are upon a fair statement of the facts.

In the first place they tell us it costs more to build ships in the United States than it does abroad, and that therefore it is impossible to carry on a successful shipbuilding industry in this country unless the industry is subsidized.

This proposition contains a misstatement of the facts with regard to the shipping industry, and the complete and convincing answer to it lies in stating the facts correctly. Shipbuilding in the United States is to-day among the most prosperous of our industries. Every yard from Maine to California is working full time and to the utmost of its capacity, with orders ahead for from one to five years. There is invested in this industry $68,000,000, employing 46,000 men, with contracts on hand aggregating $114,000,000, or nearly 200 per cent of the capital invested.

In October, 1901, the Chicago Tribune, one of the leading Republican papers, sent representatives to all the shipyards of the country to investigate this reported depression in the shipbuilding industry, with the result that every yard was reported to be working overtime, with orders ahead. The Newport News yard was reported to have 145,100 tons under construction, to cost $38,350,000. This yard has $14,000,000 invested, and employs 7,000 men. I give this instance as a fair sample of the condition all over the country. The Commissioner of Navigation, one of the strongest advocates of this bill, having undergone a change of heart on the subject when the Administration changed, says in his official report:

The last three years have been prosperous years in shipbuilding. The last fiscal year was the most profitable of those three. The present fiscal year is more prosperous in its outlook than last year, so that it will be more prosperous in shipbuilding than any of the four years past, including the current fiscal year.

Here we have the official statement of the Commissioner of Navigation, who has the best opportunity for knowledge on this subject, and who, despite his desire to see this bill pass, can not hide the facts. Can we imagine less need of subsidy to stimulate an industry than is shown by these facts? What has become of the terrible depression and threatened collapse of the industry? No such condition ever existed. It is another Republican ruse to give color to hypocrisy, and instead of collapse and depression we have abundant evidence of a healthy condition and a steady growth, and a bright outlook for shipbuilding in the United States.

In the light of this business prosperity in the building of ships in the United States we are told that it costs more to build them here than abroad.

Now, let us examine that proposition closely and see what the facts are. It can not be denied that we produce the raw materials that go into the construction of a ship cheaper than any other nation on earth, in the face of the fact that we are selling those very materials in the markets of the world, and they are being bought by foreign shipbuilders for use in the construction of ships. Pig iron, which is the primary raw material of steel, and therefore of ships, is produced in larger quantities in the United States and at less cost than elsewhere in the world. We produced in 1900 14,000,000 tons of pig iron, at a cost of about $6.50 per ton, as against about half that amount produced in Great Britain, at a cost of about $9 per ton, that country being our only serious competitor in the production of iron. These facts explain why our steel plates and all grades of structural steel cross the ocean to find a market. And the same condition of affairs is plainly evident to anyone who seeks to know the truth as to all classes of materials that go into the building of a ship, but I can not take time to do more than point out the main items.

But conceding, for the purpose of this argument, that we can not produce the materials necessary for the building of ships as cheaply as other countries, it does not follow that our shipyards must stop business. Under present law all shipbuilding materials are admitted free of duty, thereby enabling our shipbuilders to go into the markets of the world and buy materials where they are cheapest and at the same price that shipbuilders of other countries secure them. So we see it is not the materials that form the expensive item of cost which, as our friends say, is going to compel our shipyards to go to the wall unless we help them.

The entire cost of a ship is embraced under two heads—materials and labor. I have shown that materials are not the cause of the alleged excessive cost of American ships. We are told, however, that American labor is more expensive, and that we have to pay higher wages for the same class of work. This question of the price of labor runs like a thread through all the arguments in favor of this bill, and the Republicans are constantly claiming that this bill is in the interest of American labor. They tell us that the cost of the labor in producing the raw materials, in fashioning it for the ships, and in operating the ships is greater in the United States than elsewhere, and that if this subsidy is granted a large part of it will come back into the hands of the American laborer.

But, like other Republican promises, it is Dead Sea fruit, which turns to ashes on the lip. Labor has had experience in voting for Republican policies on the strength of promises that the millions legislated into the hands of special classes would ultimately come to them.

American labor is intelligent, skillful, industrious, and honest. It demands and receives compensation in proportion to the work done. The American laborer is an exemplification of the well-known business maxim, "The best is the cheapest," for although he receives about 20 per cent more money for his work than any other laborer on earth, yet he turns out from 30 to 50 per cent more work.

Mr. Mulhall, the famous statistician, gives us in one of his recent books the gross earnings per capita of labor, and he shows that in England they are 20 per cent less than in the United States, although about 33 per cent greater there than in some European countries. He tells us that the rate of wages is no criterion of the relative value either to employer or laborer, that food is cheaper in the United States, that the laborer here spends one-sixth of his wages for food, whereas in England he spends one-fourth for that purpose. The total average value of a year's production in the United States is about $6,998 to each laborer as against $4,106.70 in Great Britain and $3,946 in Germany. The average wages in all industries per year in the United States is about $349.92 as against $204.12 in Great Britain and $155.52 in Germany. The difference between the wages paid and the production of the average laborer in the United States is about $1,535.76 as against $588.06 in Great Britain and $388.80 in Germany.

It will thus be seen that while the American laborer receives higher wages than the laborer of foreign countries, the output from his labor more than doubles that of the English and trebles that of the German laborer. Well-paid, well-clothed, well-fed, intelligent labor is the cheapest in the end. That is a fact which every man of business has demonstrated, and it applies more particularly to the classes of work in which skilled labor is required. But another fact which makes our labor so much more profitable than any other is the use of economical machinery, which can not be found abroad. The use of pneumatic boring, hammering, and riveting machines in the shipyards of the United States, together with other improved, labor-saving machinery, helps materially in enabling our shipbuilders to compete for the shipbuilding of the world.

The New York Journal of Commerce says:

Undoubtedly any difference in wages is more than made up in the value of the labor. That the American builder can compete needs no proof to one conversant with the facts.

It would be a waste of time to multiply the evidence of a proposition so plain that it must be apparent to any man who thinks at all.

So we find that materials are cheaper in the United States and that our laborer earns for his employer all and more than he receives in wages in excess of that of the laborers of other countries; and this being true, we can compete successfully with Great Britain—the only country we need fear—in the building of ships of every character. Hear what Mr. Cramp himself says:

For the Russian war ships we are building we competed with Germany and France. We have also built ships for the Japanese Government, and our bids were lower by 20 per cent than those of Mr. Armstrong, the English builder.

Again he says:

It is a fact that the first cost of ships is not only not a prime factor, but it is not even a serious factor in any competition that may occur between this country and Great Britain for a share of the traffic of the ocean.

Senator FRYE, who had charge of the bill in the Senate, stated that the cost of labor was the only reason why the American shipbuilder could not compete for the carrying trade. Driven to the extremity, the friends of this measure have had to abandon position after position, and now, in the light of these facts, who will say that labor has not advanced our shipbuilding industry more than anything else which has contributed to its success? Driven from this last intrenchment, there is nothing left for the plunderers to do but to admit their guilty intent and abandon a measure which so plainly bears the mark of greed and avarice.

Again, it is said that the American merchant marine can not compete for the carrying trade because the cost of operation is so much greater for our ships than those of foreign countries.

In comparing the cost of operation of steamships we have to take into consideration four items—coal, oil, provisions, and wages. These comparisons should be made with English ships because they carry the largest per cent of the trade and are our only dangerous competitors.

Now, as to coal, oil, and provisions, I understand it to be conceded that they do not constitute the excessive cost of operation, for the reason that they can be bought where they are cheapest and on equal terms with all other ships. It is the wages paid American seamen that the advocates of this bill claim necessitates the granting of this subsidy. Again, we have the question of the value and cost of labor presented. I have already demonstrated the well-known superiority of American labor, and shown by the highest authority and by the common experience of all business men that the additional cost of American labor is more than made up to the employer by the amount of output of the laborer.

These facts apply as well to the manning of a ship as they do to digging the coal and iron out of the ground or putting them into a ship, and I would rest my answer to this proposition upon those facts, except that a great show has been made by the Republican party that this bill is in the interest of labor. They would have us believe that when we vote against this bill we are striking a blow at labor. Here, again, we detect the cloven foot of Republican hypocrisy. They know that under the provisions of this bill that American seamen are not required to be employed except to the extent of 25 per cent of the crew. When an amendment was introduced in the Senate providing for the employment of American seamen only, it was promptly voted down by the majority, and again, when an amendment was offered to the Chinese-exclusion bill providing that no Chinese should be employed as seamen on the ships of the American Navy or ships enjoying the privilege of American registry, it was also defeated. And yet the advocates of this bill claim that it is in the interest of American seamen!

But let us examine the facts and see whether the difference in the compensation of the officers and crews of American and English ships is such as to necessitate this subsidy. For the purposes of comparison I will take the American liner St. Paul and compare with the British liner Campania, which is almost a twin ship. The total amount of money paid to the officers of the St. Paul is $1,010, as against $995 to the officers of the Campania. This shows an immaterial difference of $15 in favor of the Campania. The wages of the crew of the St. Paul amount to $200, as against $216 for the Campania. Here we find no material difference. But when we come to the engine room we find the first material difference in favor of the British ship.

The St. Paul pays her engine-room men a total of $4,300, as against $3,000 paid by the Campania, giving a balance in favor of the Campania of $1,300. This illustration is a fair sample of my investigation into this subject, and will be found to represent, approximately, the difference of the wages on American and British ships in proportion to their size and the men they carry. Now, this would make a difference of $15,900 a year that the American ship pays her crew in excess of that paid by the British ship. To equalize this difference, which the advocates of this measure say is the terrible drawback to American shipping, the St. Paul, under the provisions of this bill, would receive a yearly subsidy of at least $40,000, instead of the actual difference of $15,000.

On this question of wages I will quote from the Commissioner of Navigation in his annual report of 1894:

> So far as able seamen are concerned, the actual competition to-day in trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific trade is between American ships and British ships, and a comparison of the wages paid on these two different classes of vessels will show only slight disparity in wages. Any comparison of monthly wages, therefore, unless accompanied by a full statement of all the conditions under which wages are paid and of the results attained, will be misleading.

The Coast Seaman's Journal says:

> Wages are equal on vessels of all nationalities when crews are obtained in any given port. In other words, it is the rule of the port, and not the flag of the ship, that governs wages.

And again, Mr. Chamberlain says:

> The difference between American and foreign rates of wages can be, and the fact is it is, overcome by employing crews in foreign ports for the round trip.

Thus we see that there is no such difference in the wages paid American crews as would warrant this legislation. That difference only exists at all when the crews are obtained in a port of the United States, and we have the authority of the Commissioner of Navigation to the effect that all wages can be and are equalized by employing the crews at a foreign port for the round trip. It is not to be supposed that the owners of American ships will, even if this subsidy is granted, man their ships entirely with American seamen when they are only required to employ 25 per cent. The result will be that they will pocket the bounty and proceed to hire crews wherever they find them cheapest. Here we have the evidence of another bunco game at the expense of labor.

The third and last proposition upon which this bill is advocated by its friends is that American ships can not compete for the carrying trade of the world because the ships of other nations are subsidized.

More than 50 per cent of the entire commerce of the seas is carried on by English ships. They are the masters of the ocean, and other countries at present scramble for what is left. In considering this question, therefore, it is important to investigate the policy of the British Government toward its merchant marine for the purpose of seeing whether or not this mastery was obtained and is supported by subsidy.

Great Britain has never paid a subsidy to her merchant marine. She does pay, and has paid for years, about $4,000,000 annually for carrying her mails across the seas, but this can not be called a subsidy in any sense, being pay for actual service rendered, and the deficit between this amount and the amount of foreign postage, perhaps $2,000,000 annually, is a charge upon the colonial governments, and can not be said to be in the interests of British shipbuilders. Legitimate pay for actual service in the transportation of mail is not subsidy, and the word in that connection is a misnomer. But to give a clear idea of the British policy, I quote from the late consul-general of the United States at London, Mr. William Osborne. In a recent report he says:

> The Government of this country does not pursue any particular policy for the purpose of promoting its merchant marine. Subventions are paid for the use of certain vessels as armed cruisers in case of war and for the carriage of mail

The subventions referred to amount to about $300,000 annually. This, with the four millions paid for carrying the mail is all that Great Britain does for her vast shipping.

The vice-consul at London states:

> The Government does nothing to promote the merchant marine in the way of subsidizing it or the builders who construct it. Payments aggregating some $243,000 per annum are made to four companies for the call of certain steamers as armed cruisers in case of war. The mail pay for the current year amounts to $3,815,100, toward which the colonies and India contribute $850,500. This is exclusive of South Africa.

Thus we see that there is no subsidy paid by Great Britain to her ships that dominate the carrying trade of the world. That enormous trade is carried on by English iron tramp ships which do not receive one cent of the mail or subvention pay, but which are found in every port, in every ocean, competing with each other, and which furnish us the cheapest transportation we can get. England has her fast ships for mail purposes and as auxiliaries in time of war, but they do a small per cent of the vast business of which English ships are the carriers.

The example of France is often cited as an illustration of the policy of governments in subsidizing ships. The example is unfortunate for the friends of this bill, as it is but a confirmation of our own ineffectual attempt to build up the merchant marine by governmental bounty. France pays at present about $9,000,000 annually as a subsidy to her shipping interests, but, notwithstanding this, her shipping refuses to increase in any proportional measure. Her merchant marine is now about 1,000,000 tons, which is less than the United States has to show, and her shipbuilding activity is far behind our own. In the year 1901 France added 53,000 tons to her steam merchant marine, and the United States added 215,000 tons.

Mr. Thackara, our consul at Havre, says in a recent report:

> It has been shown that the support given to the steam fleet of France, by means of the bounty granted by the law of 1898, has not developed that branch of the merchant navy to the extent hoped for by the projectors of the law.

So it appears that the experience of France has been anything but satisfactory.

The same unsuccessful story is the history of Italian attempts to subsidize their ships. After spending about $6,000,000 it was given up as a failure. The Germans have their ships built abroad wherever they are cheapest, and the extent of help that their ships receive comes in the way of pay for carrying mail and subventions in case of war. I might cite example after example, and pile evidence upon evidence, but with the facts given it is plainly to be seen that the trouble with our merchant marine is not the subsidies of other countries.

This brief examination of the reasons put forth for the passage of the bill leaves them without force, and shows that they are but the subtle subterfuges relied upon by those who desire this legislation to give it plausibility and excuse. But there is no escape from the fact that this bill carries pure, naked subsidy. There is no pretense that it is paid for anything except upon the speculative idea that it would induce the building of new ships, and it has been clearly demonstrated that if it is paid for that purpose it will be nothing but a gratuity to a few shipbuilding concerns in this country.

The question will be asked, very naturally: If we can build ships as cheaply and operate them as cheaply and do not have to compete with subsidized ships, why is it that our merchant marine has declined and that England carries the large part of our foreign commerce and we only carry about 10 per cent? The answer to that question is plain. Prior to 1855 the wooden ships of the United States, the fast clippers of the ocean, were rapidly taking away the supremacy in the carrying trade from England. When this condition of affairs became apparent England began the construction of iron vessels. There is no question that for years after the war, and before 1855 even, we were unable to build iron ships as cheaply as they could be built in England. None of our great mineral resources had been fully developed, and England had coal, iron, and skilled labor, with which she soon regained her old dominion over the carrying trade of the world.

Our policy prevented the buying of ships where they were cheapest, and so we saw our merchant marine gradually give way to the improved ships of the English. A new force had come upon the sea—the iron ship. It was faster and could carry many more tons, and lasted many times as long as the old wooden ships, and it was but the natural consequence that it soon monopolized the commerce of the seas. Our stupid navigation laws, which prevent us from buying ships where they are cheapest, forced us to build iron ships or give up our trade. We had not become sufficiently developed in our mineral resources, machinery, and labor to compete with England in the building of iron ships, and thus it was that our merchant marine began to decline and that of England began to ascend.

With this handicap upon the industry, our people turned attention to other lines of industry, and began the great industrial movement which has opened up our vast resources, making the wilderness a site for cities and railroads, and smelters, and workshops, and schools, and churches, until to-day we stand upon the pinnacle of industrial glory. The 10 per cent of our trade which we carry to-day amounts to more than the 75 per cent that we carried in 1855. The attention of the people was attracted to the larger fields of enterprise and money making in the building up and development of our country. But for ten years we have been in position to compete with England in the building of ships. Capital is again being directed to the shipping industry, and we see renewed activity in all lines of shipbuilding and shipping. It is but a matter of a few years when the United States will again challenge England for her supremacy upon the seas.

Having invaded her dominions with our coal and iron, wool and cotton, breadstuffs and tobacco, we will soon be selling her completed war and merchant ships, as we are already furnishing her large supplies of the materials. If a subsidy for ships was ever necessary that day has passed. This very bill is evidence of the renewed activity of capital in this line, and with the characteristic effrontery of the money grabber the millionaires come to the Congress of the United States and ask for thousands of dollars to enable them to live. Last year they wanted $9,000,000 for twenty years, saying that that amount was absolutely necessary. Being completely routed by the friends of honest government they gave up that claim, and come again this year asking for the amount carried by this bill, which will probably amount to at least a million dollars annually.

This is not an untried experiment. Twice before, and on a large scale, the United States has attempted to subsidize her merchant marine, but in both cases it was a dismal failure, and one of the most disgraceful chapters of our legislative history was connected with them. In 1850 the Government granted a subsidy to the Collins Line, amounting to $385,000, to ply between New York and Liverpool. From that date until 1859, when the company went to pieces in disaster, the subsidy was raised until it reached $2,000,000; yet despite it all, the project failed.

The case of the Pacific Mail Company of 1865 to 1875 was not any more successful, ending in disgrace. Experience proves that the system of bounty calls into existence unnecessary ships and diminishes the regular earnings of the company, which the Government is compelled to make up, and when its support fails the company goes to the wall. The whole question is resolved at last to the well-known economical fact that only industries adapted to our conditions and to our needs, and for which we are fitted, can succeed, notwithstanding we may try to force an artificial growth by bounties.

If shipping is to be subsidized, why not agriculture? Why not mining? Why is it that we are asked to open the doors of the Treasury to the wealthy corporations owning shipyards and at the same time close the door to the farmer, who struggles from year to year for the necessaries of life; and to the miner, who is shut in the earth digging out his meager existence from day to day? Is another burden to be laid upon the patient backs of the toiling millions, who already groan and sweat under the weight of unjust taxation?

Mr. Chairman, the American people will not forever endure such unholy abuse of their rights. Let not the friends of this measure be deceived. Long suffering, slow to anger, and prone to impute honest motives to men in high places, they will at last see in what manner they have been dealt with, and in their wrath will rise up and drive the money changers from the temple.

It will not do for them to be told that this bill will enable them to obtain new markets for their products and to send them in American ships direct to the consumer. This bill does not provide for any new lines of ships, nor will a single new market result from its passage. Complaint is already heard that our products must take circuitous and unnecessary routes to reach their market. Mill men of South Carolina complain that the cotton manufactures which they ship to the East have to go by New York and Vancouver, instead of directly. This bill will not remedy that evil, but it will increase it instead. The combination of all the carrying facilities which has already been practically accomplished will have the effect of breaking down all the direct means of transportation and compelling the producer to use the longest route and pay the most freight, and this bill is a gift to the combination in aid of their purpose.

If we would help the people and procure for them new markets and cheaper means of transportation, this bill should be defeated without division, and the question of putting some limitation upon the powers and growth of monopoly in this country taken up and dealt with at once. American shipping can safely be left to the demonstrated ability of American capital to build and operate ships in competition with any other nation, and the most that we can or ought to do for it is to repeal our restrictive and unjust navigation laws.

In my judgment, 75 per cent of our foreign trade is carried by American capital in ships which fly a foreign flag, because of the unjust requirements of these laws. Let them be repealed and American ships will take their place in the advancing column of American supremacy without the need of bounty. No enterprise can be built up by governmental bounty alone. Its growth will be superficial, and when the aid is withdrawn it will fall to the ground. On the other hand, an enterprise adapted to the genius of our people and backed by the resources and demands of the country will grow despite obstacles, as is clearly demonstrated by the history of our merchant marine.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of industrial expansion and advancement along every line and accomplished by every legitimate means. I would like to see American-built ships, flying the Stars and Stripes, in every port and upon every sea, manned by American seamen and ladened with American products. I would like to see direct means of transportation established to the old and new markets of the world and our trade enlarged so as to include every quarter of the globe. I would like to see our wonderful resources fully developed, giving employment to happy and contented labor. And I would like to see the American farmer, who is the corner stone of all our advancement, freed from the oppression of unjust legislation and illegal combination. But these results will never be obtained by discriminating between classes in legislation and imposing taxes upon the masses of the people in order that the few may become gorged with wealth.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me repeat that if we would aid the people in obtaining new markets and cheaper transportation let us take up the growing power of trusts and monopolies and pass legislation that will relieve the people of the burdens imposed by them. The Republican party has not the manhood to deal with that question openly. While they are in the act of making a weak prosecution of the beef trust, they are proposing by this bill to strengthen the hand of the great railroad-shipping trust. We can not expect anything in the way of relief from the Republican party, which is the creature of private monopolies and organized capital.

The existing laws against trusts should be enforced and more stringent ones enacted, providing for publicity of all the affairs of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and requiring them to show, before being allowed to engage in interstate commerce, that they have no water in their stock and that they are not attempting to monopolize any branch of business or production, and all the powers of Congress over the mails and all modes of interstate commerce should be used to suppress and control this growing menace to the prosperity of the country.

The Republicans seem not to be interested in promoting the prosperity of the people. With the crying need of remedial legislation at home and vexed problems of vital interest demanding attention, the Administration is engaged in waging a war of extermination upon the Filipinos, the horrors and inhuman cruelty of which is being detailed to us by slow degrees. Not content with a domestic policy that robs the people of the fruit of their labors and makes them the spoil of every form of political corruption, the party in power, forgetting every principle of human justice and inspired only by lust and greed, are carrying on a war of extermination against a weak people, and laying their country open to the tender mercy of the carpetbagger, their only crime being a demand for the principles of liberty and self-government.

It is time to awake to the danger that is upon us and which, unless averted, must surely result in the overthrow of "Government of the people, for the people, and by the people." I have an abiding faith in the character and uprightness of our people, and that they will not long endure the yoke of Republican oppression and injustice.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 19, by striking out, on page 15, all after the word "act," in line 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 3, after the word "act," strike out the proviso.

Mr. CLARK. This proviso simply shifts from the steamship companies to the United States Government the expense of doctoring up these excluded persons over here. I am opposed to any such performance. That is all there is to it, one way or another.

Mr. PARKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does not that proviso only apply to those who are held here for evidence?

Mr. SHATTUC. This applies to such people as come here and stay a year under the old law, and have gone into our hospitals and the like.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will my friend permit me just one moment? I think my colleague from Missouri does not comprehend the meaning of this proviso.

Mr. CLARK. I withdraw that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That any alien who shall come into the United States in violation of law, or who shall be found a public charge therein from causes existing prior to landing, shall be deported, as hereinafter provided, to the country whence he came at any time within one year after arrival, at the expense, including one-half of the cost of inland transportation, to the port of deportation, of the person or persons, vessel, transportation company, or corporation bringing such alien into the United States, or, if that can not be so done, then at the expense of the immigrant fund provided for in section 1 of this act; and, at any time within four years after the expiration of one year following such alien's arrival he shall be deported at the joint expense of the said immigrant fund and of the corporation, municipality, or institution seeking relief from the burden of such alien, the former to be charged with the cost of ocean transportation and the latter to defray the expense of delivering such alien at the port of departure from the United States designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration; and any alien who becomes a public charge from causes arising subsequent to his landing shall be deported to the country whence he came at any time within five years after such landing, at the joint expense of the immigrant fund and of the corporation, municipality, or institution seeking relief from the burden of such alien's support, said expense to be apportioned in the manner above stated.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 21 by striking out the figure "4" and inserting the figure "2;" so that it will then read "within two years."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 21, strike out "four" and insert "two;" so as to read "within two years."

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, this four years was placed in here originally as a compromise in the committee. Some wanted the figures as high as eight and ten years. We compromised at four years. Now, there is so much opposition to the section as it stands now that the committee by a unanimous vote has agreed to reduce that to two years.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Making it three years.

Mr. SHATTUC. Making it three years in all. This particular provision is made because of a complaint that comes particularly from New York. Under the provision that they might be deported in one year, heretofore it has been found that they would be supported by friends on the outside until the expiration of one year, and then they would be put into the hospitals and poorhouses and other places and stay there the balance of their lives. Some gentleman named Brown, I do not remember his name, but a very distinguished friend of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], came here and gave us information on the subject, and there were those who were interested in our insane asylums interested in the matter also, and this arrangement was made all through the bill. You will find upon looking up the matter, I think, that from 25 to 35 per cent of those in the poorhouses and like institutions in all parts of the United States is made up of these immigrants. It will also be the duty of the Commissioner-General of Immigration to inform these different institutions as to the law and the means by which they can deport them back to the country from which they came.

Mr. COOMBS. What does the gentleman mean by the country from which they came?

Mr. SHATTUC. That is something that I do not care to discuss here. Anybody knows what it is.

Mr. COOMBS. Is that your answer?

Mr. SHATTUC. Yes, sir; that is my answer.

Mr. WACHTER. Why keep these people until they become a public charge?

Mr. SHATTUC. They become a public charge after they come here.

Mr. WACHTER. How long after do they become a public charge?

Mr. SHATTUC. That depends on how long they are well after they arrive.

Mr. WACHTER. How long after?

Mr. SHATTUC. After they have been in here a year they go to the poorhouse and stay there. They can not be deported after one year under the old law.

Mr. WACHTER. Why keep them two years?

Mr. SHATTUC. Let me answer your question. Will you please frame your question? and then I will answer it.

Mr. WACHTER. Why keep them two years after the one year?

Mr. SHATTUC. A man may come here and may pass the inspection, and he may become a public charge after a year and go into one of our poorhouses. Then the United States takes up the matter and sends him back.

Mr. WACHTER. But only after the expiration of two years.

Mr. SHATTUC. Any time during the two years, but not after.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the committee is a step in the right direction. However, I should like him to go a little further. I wish to explain to this committee that this provision of the bill has nothing at all to do with the question of the restriction of immigration. It is a question affecting the right of asylum—the right of residence on American soil. It is an American question. After a man has been in this country for the first three years he may, even in accordance with the amendment proposed by the committee, be deported to his old home.

In the meantime, gentlemen, he may have had children born to him. His children, in this case, are native-born American children. What will you do with the father? Will you separate him from his children, or will you deport those innocent children, though they are born upon American soil, with him? Therefore, I say, even three years is too long a term. In three years a man quite easily can and usually does identify himself with American institutions. He may have started a business. He may have failed in that business, and, in accordance to the terms of this law, he would have to be deported because he is liable to become a public charge.

Mr. KLEBERG. This deportation takes place notwithstanding the immigrant has been admitted in the first place; but if after a year—and according to this amendment, three years—he accidentally becomes a charge on this country he may be deported, although he may have offspring born since he came to this country.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is correct. The law now is that a man may be deported within one year. The amendment proposes to extend this term to three years. My argument is that within the three years he may have children born to him. He might be a good American; he may have taken out his first papers; he may have signified his intention to become an American citizen. In spite of all that you propose in three years to deport him to the country whence he came.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri understand that the whole section extends to the deportation of those only who have become a public charge within the time specified for causes existing prior to his arrival here?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I do not so understand it.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me read it; I may be mistaken.

And at any time within four years after the expiration of one year following such alien's arrival he shall be deported at the joint expense of the said immigrant fund and of the corporation, municipality, or institution seeking relief from the burden of such alien, the former to be charged with the cost of ocean transportation and the latter to defray the expense of delivering such alien at the port of departure from the United States designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration; and any alien who becomes a public charge from causes arising subsequent to his landing shall be deported to the country whence he came at any time within five years after such landing, at the joint expense of the immigrant fund and of the corporation, municipality, or institution seeking relief from the burden of such alien's support, said expense to be apportioned in the manner above stated.

Mr. PARKER. Now, will the gentleman look to lines 4 and 5 on page 16?

Mr. RUCKER. But this is not an amendment to that part of the bill.

Mr. PARKER. I see that, but I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that is a new provision.

Mr. RUCKER. This section applies solely to conditions existing before the immigrant came to this country.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The whole section has been read.

Mr. RUCKER. The amendment is in reference to line 21, page 15.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If that is the case, then it is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I now want to offer my amendment. On page 16, line 7, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "two."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which would strike out more of the paragraph, and I think it ought to come in first. I move to strike out as an amendment to the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 7, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "two."

Mr. PARKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move in substitution therefor to strike out the clause from the word "immigration," in line 4, to the end of the section; and I ask the Clerk to read the words that I desire stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:

"And any alien who becomes a public charge from causes arising subsequent to his landing shall be deported to the country whence he came at any time within five years after such landing, at the joint expense of the immigrant fund and of the corporation, municipality, or institution seeking relief from the burden of such alien's support, said expense to be apportioned in the manner above stated."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to line 7, and the gentleman from New Jersey made a suggestion and offers an amendment by the way of a substitute. The Chair thinks that this part of the bill should first be perfected by amendment, and then the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey to strike out should be considered, and not in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. PARKER. As my amendment refers to an earlier line, should it not be first considered?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph to be stricken out by the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey should first be perfected by the committee.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is made, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. I only want one word of explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. SHATTUC. I thought we were to perfect the paragraph first.

The CHAIRMAN. No one rose to suggest another amendment——

Mr. SHATTUC. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I rose, but I did not get the attention of the Chair.

Mr. PARKER. If the gentleman from Ohio wants to offer an amendment I will wait. I do not want to take any advantage of him.

Mr. SHATTUC. I simply do not want to lose my right.

Mr. PARKER. I do not want to take any right from the gentleman.

Mr. SHATTUC. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHATTUC. After the gentleman from New Jersey speaks, will it be in order for me to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; amendments will be in order.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of perfecting a proper immigration bill, but this clause is not one directed to immigration. If the best man in the world comes to this country and is regularly admitted, this clause declares that if, from causes arising subsequent to immigration, he becomes a public charge within a certain number of years, he shall be deported. This is not right. It may be simply a hod carrier who falls down and is hurt, but who was a good man when he came here. It may be a man of highest character and standing, who was likewise one whom we welcomed to our shores.

There is no reason—may I add that there is no right?—in international or other law under which, if a man is hurt or disabled in this country from causes arising subsequently to his arrival, he should be deported. I understand this to be a new practice, a new provision—something entirely new in the law. We rightfully reserve the right to deport a man who gets into this country in violation of law, or who is not an acceptable immigrant, or who is without means of support, or incapable of earning his own livlihood, if he is for any reason an unsuitable person to become a citizen of this country, even if this disqualification is not discovered until a term of years has elapsed. But if he is a right man, who comes in here rightly and who is in some way disabled after arriving here so that he may be disqualified for self-support, we may have no right to deport him.

Mr. KLEBERG. If we should undertake to do so, might we not practically be deporting our own citizens? The man may have declared his intention to become a citizen, or may have been naturalized.

Mr. PARKER. Certainly. And even though he should still be an alien, he is a man who has been accepted as a suitable denizen of this country; and he has the right to come and the right to stay.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, it is a grave question whether this entire section is not unconstitutional. The United States Government beyond doubt has the right to deny admittance to its territory to any man coming here from a foreign land, but whether he may be deported if it should be proved within a year after his landing that causes existed previous to his landing which rendered him not admissible under the law is a different question. I certainly agree with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] who has just spoken, that when we go still further and try to arrogate to ourselves a privilege which no other country in the world has ever assumed, of deporting a man after he has resided on our shores for five years, that we are certainly going far beyond reason, prudence, and necessity. Therefore I propose to stand by the amendment reducing the term to one year or two years.

Indeed, I hope that the gentleman from New Jersey will press his amendment so that we can take out of the bill this entire clause. I do not remember that I was in the committee when this clause was passed upon, and therefore if I was, I wish to apologize for not having made my fight in the committee. But now that I look at this question I am satisfied that to adopt such a provision would not be doing what is fair. If we are going to do this sort of a thing and deport men after five years' residence in the country, foreign nations will likely adopt similar laws, so that within a few years we may be exchanging citizens with all the countries of the world. I certainly hope the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey will prevail, and that the entire section will go out of the bill. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, because of the fact that my colleague on the committee [Mr. DOUGLAS] voted on this amendment without proper information and without understanding it, I will consent to its withdrawal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey to strike out all after the word "immigration" in line 4.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there may be something said on the other side of this question. I do not see that great hardship is going to be imposed on anybody by retaining the language now under consideration. It is the law, the public law——

Mr. PARKER. It is not now the law.

Mr. HEPBURN. We have the right to invite whom we please into this country, and we have the right to exclude whom we please. When this provision is enacted it becomes the law, and thereafter every man who comes into this country will come with the knowledge that the provision exists. And the very fact that it does exist, the fact that there is a possibility that the immigrant may not have the right of citizenship or the right of domicile after he becomes a pauper, will be deterrent in its character and will aid in keeping away undesirable immigrants.

I understand that this is a bill in restraint of immigration; that this provision will be one of the powerful aids in that direction. The very uncertainties that are created by it will deter immigration; and I understand that that is what the gentlemen of the committee desired when this section was determined upon.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Would the gentleman from Iowa separate father and child?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. You would by voting for this provision.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not so understand. These people who may come here will come here subject to this disability, if it is a disability, that they are liable to be deported. I can not see any hardship in it, because there is notice to all the world that such is the condition of our law, and that is one of the objects of the measure.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does any immigrant who comes here expect to meet with accident or misfortune?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I imagine not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly not.

Mr. HEPBURN. But such persons come here knowing, as all other men do, that they are liable to such action on account of disability, and I can not see any reason why gentlemen should be so anxious to impose upon the people of this country the burden and labor of supporting persons of this class.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] if he really believes that any large percentage of the immigrants that come to the United States know the law that is on the statute books of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I hope the time will come when no one will be permitted to come here who does not know something about our laws, and I undertake to say that the man who will come without knowing how he is to be received, what is to be his status after he comes here, what disabilities are imposed on him, is that kind of an improvident man that we do not want.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that this will strike at the very most desirable class, who are overtaken by misfortune even, and that is not the purpose of this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think that the gentlemen can say that it is applicable to all of the classes——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes, and——

Mr. HEPBURN. And I think if the gentlemen appreciate the importance that now exists for not allowing this great multitude of people to come here as competitors for the bread that our laborers, native or those that are now here, eat, that they would not be so inconsistent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think if the gentleman will look at the provision he will regard it as entirely too harsh as against the desirable immigrants who come to our shores.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is one of the misfortunes, perhaps, or one of the possible disabilities that must come from general legislation. Is it not the purpose of this bill to restrict this legislation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; for causes existing at the time of the immigration.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; not necessarily for causes existing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; that is the general purpose of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is in harmony with the general provisions of it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the purpose of the bill is to decrease the constantly increasing number of people, undesirable in character in many instances, that are thronging our shores, and this provision, by the very uncertainties that it creates, will aid in that direction, and that is why I want it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope this bill is not construed to work the harsh injustice that this provision would work.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no injustice. We are doing no injustice to a man, a citizen of another country, when we do not invite him to come here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. He becomes a citizen of this country.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no injustice to him in protecting our own rights and our own people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That in case the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that an alien has been found in the United States in violation of this act he shall cause such alien, within the period of five years after landing or entry therein, to be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came, as provided in section 20 of this act, or, if that can not be so done, at the expense of the immigrant fund provided for in section 1 of this act; and neglect or refusal on the part of the masters, agents, owners, or consignees of vessels to comply with the order of the Secretary of the Treasury to take on board, guard safely, and return to the country whence he came any alien ordered to be deported under the provisions of this section shall be punished by the imposition of the penalties prescribed in section 19 of this act.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 21, page 15, line 14, after the words "period of," by striking out the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, in addition to such other duties as may by law be assigned to him, shall, under the Secretary of the Treasury, have charge of the administration of all laws relating to the immigration of aliens into the United States, and shall have the control, direction, and supervision of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed thereunder. He shall establish such rules and regulations, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and prescribe such forms of bonds, reports, entries, and other papers, and shall issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act and for protecting the United States and aliens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, and shall have authority to enter into contracts, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner-General of Immigration to detail officers of the immigration service from time to time as may be necessary, in his judgment, to secure information as to the number of aliens detained in the penal, reformatory, and charitable institutions (public and private) of the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and other territory of the United States, and to inform the officers of such institutions of the provisions of law in relation to the deportation of aliens who have become public charges.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 17, section 22, page 17, after the word "aid," insert the words "all under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 22, page 17, line 3, by inserting after the words "under the" the words "direction of the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That the duties of the commissioners of immigration shall be of an administrative character, to be prescribed in detail by regulations prepared, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, through whom alone all communications from immigration officers to the Treasury Department in regard to the immigration of aliens into the United States shall be addressed.

The following committee amendment was read:

In section 23, line 7, after the word "prepared," insert "under the direction or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 23, line 8, after the word "treasury," by striking out the remainder of the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. That immigrant inspectors and other immigration officers, clerks, and employees shall hereafter be appointed, and their compensation fixed and raised or decreased from time to time, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner-General of Immigration and in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883. Immigration officers shall have power to administer oaths and to take and consider testimony touching the right of any alien to enter the United States, and, where such action may be necessary, to make a written record of such testimony. The decision of any such officer, if favorable to the admission of any alien, shall be subject to challenge by any other immigration officer, and such challenge shall operate to take the alien whose right to land is so challenged before the board of special inquiry for its investigation. Every alien who may not appear to the examining immigrant inspector at the port of arrival to be clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to land shall be detained for examination in relation thereto by a board of special inquiry.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 16, 17, and 18, page 18, the words "upon the recommendation of the Commissioner-General of Immigration."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which I hope the chairman of the committee will accept. As the section now reads it says that—

Immigrant inspectors and other immigration officers, clerks, and employees shall hereafter be appointed, and their compensation fixed and raised or decreased from time to time, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

I do not object to giving the entire authority—though it is a large authority—to appoint these employees and fix their compensation to the Secretary of the Treasury; but as this statute now reads, he is bound to appoint employees and to fix their salaries as the Commissioner-General of Immigration shall recommend. In other words, we give to the Commissioner-General of Immigration the power to direct the appointment of no matter how many employees, to fix their salaries in the interest of any person he sees fit. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a large power to give to an official like the Commissioner of Immigration, and certainly it might lead to very serious results. I think that the chairman of the committee ought to be willing to leave this in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not in the hands of any inferior official, giving him the right to fix salaries.

Mr. SHATTUC. If there is any one thing that has bothered the Committee on Immigration, it has been the jealousies that have obtained toward the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and the objections raised against giving him any power or authority whatever. That has been carried to such a degree that there is reason to suspect that there is something wrong in other directions; that there are other parties whom they think can be worked a great deal easier than they can work the Commissioner of Immigration. I will give you names, if you want them; but I want to tell you, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen, that if there is one place in the Government of the United States to-day that ought to have a good man in it, it is the office of Commissioner-General of Immigration in charge of the immigrant business. The present Commissioner-General will shortly leave the service of the Government because of the unpleasant conditions arising from his efforts in unearthing the biggest lot of thieves that this Government ever had in its employ. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the chairman of the committee one question?

Mr. SHATTUC. Will you get me some more time?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. SHATTUC. Then I will yield.

Mr. PERKINS. The irregularities or the serious wrongdoings that have been developed recently, did they not all come through the Treasury Department?

Mr. SHATTUC. Yes; through the Treasury Department—that is, the present Commissioner of Immigration, an official of the Treasury Department, has unearthed wrongdoing to such an extent that the President of the United States secured a $25,000 man to go and run that business for $5,000 a year, and he is doing glorious work. Now, I drew this part of the bill myself, and I want to say to my distinguished friend from New York that it meets with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; because he did me the honor that I do not think he will ever do another member of this House—to write on the back of this bill, "Dear General, it is all right." Now, I do not believe he would have done that if it had not been all right, and I want to say that I believe the men who have been talking to the gentleman from New York about this matter are the men who have condoned the biggest lot of thieves that have ever existed in Government employ. That is what I think.

Mr. PERKINS. Nobody has talked to me about this amendment at all. I do not want in any way to reflect upon the Commissioner of Immigration. I do not know who the present Commissioner of Immigration is, but I think it is rather unusual to take any official, I do not care whether Commissioner of Immigration or not, and give him the absolute right to fix the salaries of his employees at $5,000 or $10,000 a year, if he sees fit.

Mr. SHATTUC. This is all under the civil-service law.

Mr. PERKINS. But that does not fix the salaries.

Mr. SHATTUC. I know that very well.

Mr. PERKINS. He can fix the salaries to suit his own taste.

Mr. SHATTUC. I assume that the gentleman who occupies the position of Commissioner-General of Immigration will do about what is right. He has done it so far when he has been let alone. The great trouble is that they have made a chief clerk of the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

Mr. PERKINS. The general policy of the United States is to fix the salaries of employees of the Government and not take all power and control and fix it in some other employee of the Government. But if my friend insists on that, I do not care anything about it. It is his bill, but I think it is a very bad provision.

Mr. SHATTUC. I will say to my friend from New York that I wrote this section of the bill myself, and I wrote it for the special purpose of adding dignity to the office of the Commissioner-General, so that he would have some authority and not be a chief clerk, and that he should have something to do.

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from New York will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, before leaving that section, I notice there is a missprint of one word on the top of page 19. The word "land" is not properly spelled there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will make the correction. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 25, lines 17 to 20, by striking out the remainder of the section, after the word "prevail," and insert "but either the alien or any dissenting member of said board may appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, whose decision shall be final."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. That the circuit and district courts of the United States are hereby invested with full and concurrent jurisdiction of all causes, civil and criminal, arising under any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to be numbered sections 30 and 31.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding as new sections, to be known as sections 30 and 31:

"SEC. 30. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

"SEC. 31. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs, or to boatmen or guides on the lakes and rivers on the northern border of the United States."

Mr. SHATTUC. A point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order against the amendment. Does the gentleman from Ohio wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHATTUC. It is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be recognized on the point of order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, this is practically the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] on last Thursday, with the last line stricken out, which makes it applicable to residents of Canada. I do not care to repeat here the arguments that the gentleman from Michigan presented at that time with so much fullness. But it seems to me that this amendment is entirely germane, inasmuch as it deals with Canadians entering this country the same as other sections treat passengers who enter the country.

I see no reason why this amendment should not be germane, since it provides that Canadians can not enter the country to work without having given notice of intention to become citizens of the United States. I do not see why it is not as germane as the preceding section, which requires that one coming in from Canada shall pay a dollar and a half if he be a passenger. This amendment corresponds with the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan as amended by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to argue this question. It is parallel to the question decided by the Chair the other day, and therefore I submit that this is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York, with a slight variation which does not change the effect of the amendment, is the same as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] last week, and to which the point of order was sustained. The same question was raised in the Fifty-fourth Congress by a similar amendment to an immigration bill; and, as the Chair stated in passing upon it last week, Mr. Speaker Reed sustained the point of order on the ground, among other things, that the amendment related to contract labor, on a subject not included within the general scope of an immigration bill. One of the tests of the germaneness of an amendment would be whether if introduced originally it would go to the committee having in charge the bill before the House. Now, it seems to the Chair that the provisions contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, if submitted as an original amendment, would, under our rules, go to the Committee on Labor——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the Chair allow a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Chair will observe that there is nothing in this amendment suggestive of contract labor. It does not refer to persons coming in under contract to labor. It provides simply that corporations shall not employ Canadians or others after they arrive in this country. There is no contract labor in it, if the Chair will indulge me in the suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair stated, this is the same amendment that the Chair ruled upon last week, and although the word "contract" does not appear, the reading of the amendment discloses this fact, referring to those who come regularly and habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, the amendment is one which relates to the occupation or the employment of the immigrant after his arrival. So that under the circumstances, and the Chair having ruled upon it last week, the point of order will be sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. That after the 1st day of January, 1903, all exclusive privileges of exchanging money, transporting passengers or baggage, or keeping eating houses, and all other like privileges in connection with any United States immigrant station, shall be disposed of after public competition, subject to such conditions and limitations as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

The committee amendment, to insert in line 18, after the word "immigration" the words "under the direction or," was agreed to.

Mr. BOWERSOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, after the word "prescribe," in line 20, insert "provided that no intoxicating liquors shall be sold in any such immigrant station."

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio wish to argue the point of order?

Mr. SHATTUC. No, Mr. Chairman; it is so simple that it does not need any argument. There is nothing said in this section about what kind of clothes the immigrant shall wear, nor how he shall comb his hair, nor what perfume he shall use; and there is nothing said as to what he shall drink. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas wish to argue the point of order?

Mr. BOWERSOCK. No, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to argue it. It seems to me that it is germane. The section applies to eating houses and says that they shall be disposed of after public competition, etc.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the Chair if the first amendment proposed by me a moment ago would, in the Chair's opinion, be germane? There were two sections, and perhaps they could be divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was of the opinion that both of these sections were not germane.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the Chair hear me further upon it?

The CHAIRMAN. The matter has passed, and it could only be done by unanimous consent, and then not until the pending matter has been disposed of.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very well; I will wait until the pending matter is disposed of and then offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BOWERSOCK]. An examination of this bill discloses that section 30 in connection with section 32 provides in general terms for the government and regulation and the administration of the law in immigrant stations. In section 30 it is provided that eating-house privileges and other like privileges shall be disposed of by public competition under the direction of the Commissioner of Immigration and the Secretary of the Treasury. These terms are general and include the entire subject of the regulation and preservation of order in these immigrant stations. Any amendment making specific restrictions and thereby limiting the general language in this section would, in the opinion of the Chair, be clearly germane, and the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio is therefore overruled.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That beer, fermented liquor cheaply made of malt and hops, may be sold in any immigrant station owned or used by the United States Government or in the grounds appertaining to the same under the direction and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and that the sale, purchase, and handling of said beer shall be in every respect under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SHATTUC. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to have a letter read in my time that was written by William Williams, the gentleman who was appointed the commissioner in New York on Ellis Island by the President of the United States, and who, I understand, is a twenty-five-thousand-dollar-a-year man working simply for $5,000 per annum and for glory.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES IMMIGRATION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER,
New York, N. Y., May 1, 1903.

Hon. L. M. SHAW,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.
(Through Commissioner-General of Immigration.)

SIR: In reply to a letter of Rev. Wilbur F. Crofts, written to the President on April 22, and referred to this office for investigation, under the Commissioner-General's indorsement of the 25th ultimo, No. 30250, I beg to report as follows:

I took office on the 28th ultimo. I find that there are, outside of the restaurant, three lunch counters in this building. At one of them no liquid of any kind is served; at another only beer is served; at the third beer, as well as milk, coffee, tea, and soda water. I have directed that at each counter at which any liquid is served there shall hereafter be served milk, coffee, tea, and soda water; that the quantity of milk heretofore sold for 5 cents shall be sold for 4 cents; that it be made just as easy for immigrants to purchase these articles as beer, and that at all reasonable times and places milk shall be furnished to young children upon the mother's request. I shall also increase the facilities for procuring drinking water.

I have been here too short a time to personally observe whether or not any drunkenness occurs in this building. I am advised that it has not occurred in the past, and I have given orders that no undue amount of beer shall be sold to anyone.

Upon the question whether all sales of alcoholic beverages should be forbidden opinions will necessarily differ. Having in view the character of people who come here, practically all of them accustomed to the use of light alcoholic beverages in their own countries, I can see no reason for preventing those who may so desire from obtaining a moderate amount of beer upon landing. At any rate, I shall for the present decline to recommend a change in the existing Treasury regulations upon this subject.

The letter in question speaks of the immigrants as being "treated like cattle" and "herded." In so far as this statement may mean that they are at times crowded, and that the portions of the building set over to the use of the railroad companies are inadequate, the statement is correct. The condition is one which can not be wholly remedied, except by the creation of additional quarters. To this matter I will in due time give my attention.

Respectfully,

WM. WILLIAMS, Commissioner.

Mr. SHATTUC. Now, Mr. Chairman, I had that letter read to show the members of the House just how matters were conducted on Ellis Island. I also hold in my hand the contract which may be terminated at any time on thirty days' notice, and it says that beer shall be sold only by the bottle and that no other alcoholic beverage will be allowed at this island. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is entirely proper for an amendment of the kind offered by the gentleman from Kansas should come from the State of Carrie Nation. He has introduced Carrie Nation's resolution in the House of Congress. I do not believe there is any more harm for these Germans and other respectable immigrants coming to Ellis Island, or coming into the country, to get their beer and drink it in moderation than it is for me to go down in the restaurant of this House and drink it there if I want it.

Mr. LANDIS. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he does not think such a thing questionable in any building owned by the Government?

Mr. SHATTUC. I have a resolution right here in my desk designed to put a stop to this thing. Will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. LANDIS. I will. I do not think that liquor should have any place in this building.

Mr. SHATTUC. Very well.

Now, those immigrants are educated very differently from our people here at home. They come from countries where it is not regarded as a disgrace to take a glass of beer, and I do think it would be a great jar on their sensibilities if they should on arriving here run up against such a code as our temperance friends wish to impose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I move that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. SHATTUC. I ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I think gentlemen of the House will take it for granted that the immigrant agent in New York, a responsible, reputable gentleman, tells the truth when he says that they are limiting the sale of beer there and that it is the only intoxicating liquor sold. I think it would be an absolute hardship for us to pass a provision of this kind, to be made effective the moment these people reach our shores. Therefore I hope this amendment which I have offered, to make it legal to sell beer to immigrants under the restrictions named in the amendment, will be adopted.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] will be adopted. I do not think this House ought to go into the prohibition business and deny to these people the mild beverages which are now being sold at the immigration stations under the supervision and control of the United States authorities. Certainly no disorder of any sort would be permitted there, either by the local authorities or by the authorities of the United States. I think that an amendment such as that offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BOWERSOCK] would smack very much of prohibition and would look like an interference with the local laws of New York and of any other State in which these immigration stations may be located. I therefore hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine will be adopted.

Mr. BOWERSOCK. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the House. It was not my intention by the amendment which I offered to protest at this time against or to prevent Germans or others who may desire beer from procuring the same. The object, and the prime object, of my amendment was that the Government of the United States in the use of its property or buildings should not be connected with the saloon or liquor-selling business. Certainly the first experience of the immigrant when he lands on our shores should not be with the liquor traffic under favor of the Government. I ask to have read in my time a newspaper clipping, which, I think, will indicate the feeling of a large portion of the people of this country on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOLLOWERS OF FATHER MATTHEW PROTEST AGAINST THE POISONING OF IMMIGRANTS.

EAST CAMBRIDGE, MASS., May 8, 1903.

At the regular meeting of the Father Matthew Total Abstinence Society of East Cambridge, held upon Monday evening, the following resolution was presented by ex-Alderman John T. Shea:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of the members of the Father Matthew Total Abstinence Society of East Cambridge, Mass., the oldest Catholic temperance society in America, Congress should forever prohibit the sale of liquor at all immigrant stations of the United States.

"It is decidedly inconsistent to enact laws that all immigrants must possess a certain amount of finances to permit their landing, and then immediately endeavor to handicap them by encouraging, enticing, or permitting them to secure liquor.

"The United States will not permit a criminal or pauper to land on our shores, yet before our incoming future citizens reach our mainland the saloon door, which leads to pauperism and crime, is thrown open for their admission and temptation.

"We protest against our immigration officials conducting a United States bar, rightly called a bar.

"In the name of humanity, we ask Congress to pass the Penrose bill, which prohibits the sale of liquor at all immigrant stations.

"As it is prohibited to sell liquor in any Government building within the District of Columbia, so should these stations be so governed that hereafter no one should be allowed to sell that which proves to be the greatest menace to home, State, country, and church."

In presenting the resolution Mr. Shea spoke at some length of the conditions existing on Ellis Island. The resolution was unanimously adopted with the hearty approval of all present, and Mr. Shea was directed to forward a copy of the same to Senator PENROSE, of the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Committee of the Whole will vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. SHATTUC]. I have only a word to say in relation to the question. I listened with great interest to the reading of the fresh letter written by the gentleman who is contributing $20,000 a year, as I understand, to the United States Government, by rendering service for $5,000 a year when his services are worth $25,000. About all there is in that letter is the statement that the sale of beer is conceded to be injurious in immigrant stations; and it is conceded by William Williams, if I get his name right——

Mr. SHATTUC. Will the gentleman tell me how it is conceded by that letter that the sale of beer at immigrant stations is injurious?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is conceded by the statement that the traffic needs regulation, that it must be controlled.

Mr. SHATTUC. Anybody knows that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Of course, anybody knows that the sale of beer must be controlled, because when the sale is unlimited it is injurious.

Now, then, so far as I am concerned, I want to go on record upon this question. If the House wants to take the position that the United States Government will use its premises for the sale of beer, you have presented by this amendment the opportunity to make that declaration. If that is your position, vote for the amendment; if not, vote against it.

I am ready to go on record upon the proposition that the United States Government does not want to engage either directly or indirectly, by the use of its premises or otherwise, in the sale of beer, leaving its regulation to William Williams or any other man who happens to be Commissioner of Immigration. That is all there is to the question, and I hope the amendment will be voted down, and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BOWERSOCK], notwithstanding he comes from the State of Carrie Nation, as the chairman of the committee sneeringly said, will be adopted by the House. It does not involve any great controversy. It is simply that question, Do we want the United States to stand in this position? For one, I do not.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment there is another question involved than the mere sale of liquor. Nearly every argument that has been made on the floor of this House in favor of the restriction of immigration into this country has had stated as its main foundation the fact that the migration from the northern countries of Europe was falling away, and the influx was coming from the southern quarters—from Italy, Hungary, and Austria—where the class of immigration was not so desirable. Nearly every supporter of this bill, and everyone who advanced arguments, made that as the primary ground of the necessity for the restriction of migration to this country. All deplored the falling off of migration from Ireland and England, and Germany, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway.

Now, I submit to the judgment of this House that if you wish to encourage immigration from those northern countries and to stop the falling away you can not do anything more efficacious than to do something which will prompt every one of those immigrants, when he arrives in this country, to write home to his relatives and say, "Why, we have come to a land where we can not even get a glass of beer." This is not a question of temperance. It is not a question of a Government building being occupied for the purpose of selling liquor, excepting what I believe to be under the good condition. To take away from a German his glass of beer will do nothing in aid of the cause of temperance at all.

I do not think any happier sight exists in this world than to see the German, with his family, sitting in a German beer garden having feelings ennobled by listening to good music. It is the custom of the country. There is no question of intoxication or intemperance about it. It is the rarest thing to see an intoxicated man in Germany or in France, or any other country where people use the gifts of God in moderation, because it is the custom and the morality of the people so to do. Therefore I take issue with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]. This is not a question of temperance as regards those people who want it. It is meat and drink to them in the broadest sense of the word. Do not put a stoppage to the desirable class of migration by imposing such conditions at the port of entry that they will send home accounts of the inhospitable ways of this country and of the prejudice of the Government against what they have always been accustomed to in their own land, and in that way raise a prejudice in the minds of those people whom everyone who has spoken in favor of this bill desires to come to this country.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will not consume the time of this committee, but I do want to say on this particular matter, much as I regret to—and I do regret it profoundly—I shall have to break away from the leadership of my distinguished chairman and vote against the amendment and vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BOWERSOCK]. If it be true that it is necessary to stimulate emigrants into this country by inviting them to a glass of beer or by putting it where they may get it while on Government property, I, for one, think that we had better do without emigrants. I am in favor of prohibiting in the most rigid way that the law can be framed the sale of liquor in any form under any roof owned and controlled by the United States Government, and if that should drive it from this building I would welcome it. I believe every gentleman here will. Fortunately, in our gripsacks, we can conveniently carry enough for a day's rations. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not a follower of Carrie Nation, neither am I a professional prohibitionist; but I do believe that it is the duty of this House to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. The suggestion that it is essential to present the immigrant from a foreign land to this country with a glass of beer immediately upon his arrival, to stimulate him and to enable him to continue his progress to his destination, is utterly and absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. SHATTUC. If you are taking this matter so much to heart, why is it that you do not distinguish yourself by offering a resolution to stop drinking in this Capitol? If you will do that I will vote with you.

Mr. LANDIS. I would vote this instant to abolish absolutely the sale of intoxicating liquors in this Capitol. [Applause.]

Mr. SHATTUC. Why do not you put in a resolution?

Mr. LANDIS. I do not believe that beer or whisky or anything else that intoxicates has any place in any institution owned by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SHATTUC. That will never be effective unless you put in a resolution and address your remarks to that.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman from Ohio knows that such a resolution would not be germane, and the gentleman from Ohio would object if I should offer it now.

Mr. SHATTUC. If you would put me in the chair I would determine it. [Laughter.] I want to give you a chance to get in your resolution.

Mr. LANDIS. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I shall surely offer such a resolution if he will promise not to make a point of order against it.

Mr. SHATTUC. I will promise to be in the chair when you do it. [Laughter.] Let us see, then, how long we will have to wait to get it.

Mr. LANDIS. I shall offer such a resolution, Mr. Chairman, and I shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. The immigrant that we have to tempt to this country with a glass of beer is not the kind of an immigrant that we want. Nearly all the trouble that we have had with our military posts and Soldiers' Homes has grown out of the sale of liquor near those military posts and Soldiers' Homes, and if I had it in my power I would not permit the sale of liquor within ten miles of either a military post or a Soldiers' Home. [Applause.] I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will be voted down, and I serve notice on the House now that I shall offer a resolution in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio abolishing the sale of liquor in the Capitol building of the capital city of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, this discussion strikes me as somewhat funny, and I am surprised that our prohibitionist friends see fit to inject their peculiar notions into a bill for the regulation or restriction of immigration. I frankly confess that I am a temperate man, but I for one would protest against the majority of this House depriving me of my personal liberty, of the right to indulge in a glass of healthful malt liquor if I desired it, even in this Capitol.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I do not.

Mr. RUCKER. I wanted to ask you if it would be any deprivation of your rights to deny you the privilege of buying it in this Capitol, when you could buy it elsewhere?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If we permit our prohibition friends to go up to Ellis Island and teach their lessons there, we might as well go a step further and permit emissaries of the Republican party to teach immigrants the meaning of protection and sound money, and we might allow emissaries of the Democratic party to teach immigrants what free trade and Bryanism means. We might admit the missionaries of the idea that all people should be drilled in military service, and we might introduce on the floor of the great halls in Ellis Island gymnasiums for the purpose of drilling and training those immigrants before they are admitted to the streets of New York, where, by the way, they can drink as much as they please.

Mr. COCHRAN. I should like to inquire if you think it would be necessary to have anybody teach the country the meaning of speeches of that kind?

Mr. MANN. Or the meaning of questions of that sort.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask you if you think it would be necessary to have anybody teach the country the meaning of such speeches as you are delivering?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the gentleman means. He may have a little fun at my expense, but I assure him that I am serious in this matter, and if he understands the English language, I think he will understand what I said, even without a special lesson.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will pardon me for one minute——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Before I yield, I want to compliment the Democratic party of the great State of Missouri upon having found on this floor a champion of prohibition. If the Democratic party in Missouri stands for that, it will mean a Republican State of Missouri and a Republican United States Senator from that imperial State next time. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? I want to suggest that as to resolutions prohibiting the sale of liquor in the Capitol and speeches advocating the use of liquor, or suggesting it as personal liberty, it is probably immaterial what my views are upon the subject. My opinion is, however, that the country will regard speeches on this subject as very cheap bids for the approval of constituents.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman will have an opportunity to go on record before his constituents.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will go on record.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yielded to the gentleman for a question, but not for a speech. He can speak in his own time. If he is for prohibition in his constituency he has the same right that I have, and I may say that in my own district there are a great many people who do not believe in the use of liquor. But I say this, even as a temperate man, and even if I were a prohibitionist, I would not indulge in this sort of prevention. I would not attempt to. I would look at it as any American ought to do it, and not deprive any one else of the privilege of taking a healthy glass of beverage such as described here. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to regulate immigration, if you please, and I think we can safely intrust these minor details of dealing with the immigrants upon their arrival at Ellis Island to the authorities of the Treasury Department, and if anything has convinced me that would be the proper policy to pursue, it is the letter which has been read here, offered by my friend from Ohio, from the gentleman who is in charge of that system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. Debate upon the two pending amendments has been exhausted, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BISHOP. I would like to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will again be reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHATTUC. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25; noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHATTUC. I offer the following substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful to sell intoxicating liquor in any immigrant station or other building accessible to aliens owned or used by the United States Government, or in the grounds appertaining to the same.

Mr. MANN. Upon that I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois raises the point of order against the substitute.

Mr. MANN. That the bill before the House is a bill relating to immigration, and the amendment which is now offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Ohio would embrace every building owned by the Government of the United States. It goes far beyond the question of immigration. It would forbid the sale of liquor in the Capitol. It would forbid the sale of liquor in any building anywhere owned by the Government of the United States. It is entirely beyond the province of the present pending bill, and is in no way a restriction upon immigration, because any building in the United States is subject to entry by an alien. No amendment or substitute would cover all the buildings owned by the United States. It is not a restriction upon immigration, and, in my opinion, it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, if he will yield.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LANDIS. In what building, except the Capitol, owned by the United States, is liquor sold?

Mr. MANN. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether liquor is sold in any building of the United States, but the point I make is that this bill, which is a bill to restrict and regulate immigration, can not be amended by putting any provision forbidding the sale of liquor in a post-office. It has nothing to do with immigration. I am talking about the point of order.

Mr. LANDIS. The manner in which you emphasized that proposition led me to believe that there must be some particular building in the United States in which liquor was sold.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman asks my opinion concerning it, I do not know of any building in the United States outside of the Capitol where liquor is sold; and so far as I am concerned no liquor would be sold in the Capitol. There is none sold to me, I will say, in the Capitol; but I do not believe in hysterics in legislation, and this is pure hysterics at present. [Applause.]

Mr. SHATTUC. Just as I stated when the issue was made. I said to those temperance advocates that they should have an opportunity to go on record, and I was told that I would be the one to rise and object. Now I want to say that I do not drink anything at all; I do not smoke anything at all, and I do not chew at all; and I do not think I am one bit better man than the man who does all those things in moderation.

Several MEMBERS. What do you do?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHATTUC. No; I will not permit you.

Mr. MANN. I want to suggest that the gentleman has one very bad habit, and that is he tells good stories. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHATTUC. It is not usual for a member of Congress to tell what he does not do. Very few come up here and tell the House what they do do, either. [Laughter.] I want to say, in good faith, that I do not think it any worse to sell beer on Ellis Island than it is to sell champagne here. I just simply want to demonstrate to this House, to these great constitutional lawyers, that they were not sincere in everything that they have said about this matter.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman refer to myself? Because if he does, I voted for the gentleman's amendment. [Laughter.] And if in so doing I was voting for a fanatic, I did not know it.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the offensive remark.

Mr. MANN. Nothing the gentleman can say will be offensive to anybody in the House.

Mr. SHATTUC. I will see that that goes out of the RECORD. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, seriously, it has been so of late when you could not get what you wanted from the Chairman, when he does not do as you want him to do, you either damn him and curse him or take an appeal. I am not going to damn him or curse him because he has not ruled as I want him to, neither will I take an appeal; but I trust in the good sober solid sense of the Chairman, that he will not let these temperance people avoid this vote. I know if I took an appeal they would overwhelmingly vote to put that thing through, and I know how easy it would be for me to teach the Chairman a lesson and tell him how small he is when we want to use him by reversing his decision, but I am not going to do it, and, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The raising of a point of order necessarily throws upon the chairman the responsibility of deciding it. This amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio as a substitute, taken in its entirety, is certainly not germane to even the broadest scope or intent that could be given to this bill. As the Chair stated in ruling on the point of order, one test of the germaneness of an amendment that can always be made is this: Could the subject embraced in the amendment, if offered as an independent bill in the House, be referred to the committee which has reported the bill under consideration?

Now, that part of this amendment which restricts the sale of intoxicating liquor in all public buildings would certainly not be a matter which would be referred to the Committee on Immigration, and the description of these buildings as buildings which are accessible to aliens is a mere description of all public buildings by indirection or by circumlocution of words. It seems very clear to the Chair that, taken as a whole, this amendment, offered as a substitute, is not germane, and the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas. Debate on the amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to know whether the restaurant business at Ellis Island is under the control of the United States officers, or whether it is under contract entered into between the Government and a private party, and whether the restaurant business is conducted by a private citizen?

Mr. SHATTUC. It is conducted by private citizens under a contract which they can terminate with thirty days' notice, and it is well conducted.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. COCHRAN. I rise Mr. Chairman, to speak to the amendment offered by my colleague from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized in opposition to the amendment to strike out the last word. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, every now and then an opportunity arises for speech making in favor of suppressing the rampant evils of King Alcohol, and then we have an exhibition of the avidity with which persons can signify their interest in the general welfare and the cause of temperance. A few, myself among the number, will protest against measures like this as unwarranted interference with the personal habits of the citizen. Do such discussions serve any good purpose?

I do not believe a majority of the members of this House want the House saloon closed, or it would have been closed long ago. A majority want it, or it would not be there. If we have no other power, we have power to order and enforce police regulations for the Capitol. The bar remains down stairs week after week, month after month, and year after year because we do not want it closed up.

Yet when the question arises whether liquor ought to be sold here we find a comfortable majority bobbing up and signifying indignant opposition to the sale of liquor in the Capitol. As I suggested to my friend and colleague [Mr. BARTHOLDT], the country will need no help in interpreting his speech. I arrived at the conclusion long ago that speeches on this subject are taken for about what they are worth.

Hearing on this floor a speech on this subject, one need not to know the name of the speaker or where he comes from to know the sentiments of his constituents. If he denounces "King Alcohol," I will guarantee there is a strong prohibition sentiment in his district. If on the other hand he discourses of the personal liberty of the citizen and opposes anything that would shackle his freedom of action, it is safe to assume there is a pretty large liquor interest in his district. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There was a time when the gentleman from Missouri was rather outspoken in his denunciation of the conduct of the British in buying Missouri mules; but when it was found that a British camp had been established near his district he suddenly became reticent on that subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to my friend and colleague that if he knows the facts of the case he is misrepresenting the truth; and if he does not know the facts, he commits a serious indiscretion in illustrating his usual ignorance of the proceedings of this body. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] When I heard that there was such a camp within 40 miles of my town, I arose on this floor and stated that if the President of the United States and the Secretary of State would perform their duty they would terminate that infamy as they ought, in good conscience, to have done long ago. [Applause.] That is what I said, and I repeat it now.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether he made that declaration because he honestly thought it, or because he thought it would be popular in his district? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I expected just such a question from an Indiana politician [laughter]; and I will answer——

Mr. SHATTUC. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHATTUC. The gentleman is not discussing the question before the Committee of the Whole. I want to get through with this bill this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BOWERSOCK].

Mr. BOWERSOCK. I ask that the amendment be again read.

There being no objection, the amendment was again read.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 83, noes 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 33. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico, so as not to unnecessarily delay, impede, or annoy passengers in ordinary travel between the United States and said countries, and shall have power to enter into contracts with foreign transportation lines for the same purpose: Provided, That any such transportation company shall agree, as far as practicable, to assume all the obligations imposed by this act on the masters, agents, and owners of vessels bringing aliens to ports of the United States or its territory.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 24, page 22, after the word "Immigration," insert "under the direction or."

In line 10, page 23, strike out "or its territory."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to state at this time, not only for the information of this House, but so that it may go into the RECORD for the information of others, just what obtains in the entry and inspection of aliens into the United States through the Canadian frontier, as prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with section 8 of an act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act in amendment to various acts in relation to immigration and inspection of aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor, etc."

First. All aliens arriving in Canada destined to the United States are inspected at the following ports: Halifax, Nova Scotia; Quebec; Point Levis, Vancouver; St. John, New Brunswick, and Victoria, British Columbia. Holders of certificates duly signed by the United States Commissioner of Immigration at any one of the said ports are entitled to admittance to the United States without further examination by United States immigration officers at any one of the places of entry to the United States along the border, as to their right to enter, upon the identification and their surrender of said certificates to such official. Certificates are of regulation form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Second. Examinations at Canadian ports of aliens destined to the United States are in all respects similar to those conducted at ports of this country.

Third. Aliens arriving at said Canadian ports who are adjudged inadmissible to enter the United States, under the agreement, should be refused certificates and the steamship company bringing such aliens, under the agreement, should return them to the countries from which they respectively came.

Fourth. Under the agreement, the masters of vessels are required to furnish the United States commissioners of immigration at such ports with manifests of all passengers destined to the United States, and the masters, owners, or agents of such vessels should pay, under the agreement, the sum of $1 for each alien brought to such ports and destined for the United States. Payment is made to the United States commissioner of immigration at said ports.

Fifth. All aliens who are not provided with such certificates, as required, who shall apply at the border line between Canada and the United States within one year after arrival at a Canadian port are required to return to such port, or any designated port, for the payment of the head tax, examination, and certificate.

Sixth. That immigrants destined in good faith for Canada who shall apply as above for admission to the United States within one year after arrival in Canada who shall have settled at a point west of Quebec shall be held for investigation by the board of special inquiry at Montreal, Canada; Buffalo and Suspension Bridge, N. Y.; Detroit, Port Huron, and Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; Pembina, N. Dak., and Sumas, Wash., under the agreement.

Seventh. Under the agreement, the railway and other transportation companies in the Dominion of Canada should not sell to any alien en route to any part of the United States tickets for their transportation or transportment in cars or vessels from the point of entry until after they have exhibited their certificates as provided by the agreement, and the agreement provides also that they shall not knowingly transport any rejected or inadmissible alien or those who are by law prohibited from entering the United States into its territory, but are to return all rejected aliens to the port at which they arrived.

Eighth. The agreement further provides that the various steamship lines, parties to the agreement, shall return through some port of the United States at their own cost and expense, such aliens as, having been brought into Canada on their respective lines, have become public charges in the United States within one year thereafter from causes existing prior thereto; in like manner as aliens who have become public charges under similar conditions are now returned by the lines that bring them to the ports of this country.

The United States Government, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Elder-Dempster Company, the Allan Line, the Hamburg-American Line, and the Dominion Line are parties to the agreement, but the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway are the companies that see to it that the agreement is kept, and without these two companies, I am credibly informed, there would be no agreement. And these two companies interest themselves in seeing that the agreement is kept, not because they are legally bound to do so, but because of the fact that they know that if there was no agreement, and if the agreement was not reasonably well maintained this Government would at once put itself in such a position as to obtain desired results, so far as possible under present laws.

Now, it is shown by this agreement that there is no hardship imposed upon any one of the railways and steamship lines at all, and that there would not be any need of new legislation so far as transportation is concerned if it were not for the fact that the agreement is purely a voluntary one on the part of the Canadian lines, and that there would not be an agreement at all were it not for the action of the two Canadian railway companies, who are themselves interested in seeing an agreement made and kept and who have not themselves, under present conditions, that commanding position that they will legally be given by this bill as amended in the first section where the transportation lines are included with the steamship lines as being required to pay the head tax, unless otherwise arranged for by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, which is authorized by this bill. Besides, the Secretary of the Treasury at present, under the old laws, is not in a position where he can demand and enforce a contract as provided for in the last section of the bill. The old law leaves the Secretary of the Treasury without either legal or moral backing to enforce a proper agreement authorized in the last proviso of section 1 of the bill before the House.

It is understood by everyone that the Canadian steamship companies are not subject to our jurisdiction, and the only possible way we can reach them is through the Canadian railway companies, and the only possible way we can occupy an influential or commanding position with the Canadian railroad companies, such a position as we should occupy in order to secure the proper observance of our immigration laws and for reaching an agreement with the Canadian lines that would be fair to all concerned, that would protect American interests and carry out the intent of the immigration laws of this country is to allow this bill to pass as amended, including transportation lines in with steamship companies as being held responsible for the payment of the head tax. It is well understood by everybody that the Canadian railways that have no terminals is this country are not subject to our jurisdiction, but it should not be forgotten that the railways that have no terminals in the United States must necessarily, if they sell tickets to aliens to points in the United States, ticket via some American railway, and it is the connecting lines, the American railways, we will look to when necessary and hold them responsible.

Now, I have said before that if the Canadian railway lines do not do what is right in the conduct of the immigration business the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is to place in operation the rule against the American connecting lines doing business with the Canadian lines.

This bill under discussion now does not in any essential feature change the situation as far as the Canadian frontier is concerned, except in this particular requiring that the railway lines shall be responsible for the collection of the head tax and the establishment of designated ports of entry on the Canadian frontier. It will be observed that under the present agreement the head tax is collected only once from the aliens who are in Canada who wish to run backwards and forwards to the United States and vice versa, and after that one collection there is nothing said about the head tax.

Very many of our New England friends are apprehensive that this law is going to inflict some terrible calamity upon New England interests. I respectfully call the attention of these distinguished gentlemen to the latter clause of section 1 of this bill, wherein the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make an agreement or agreements with foreign transportation lines to arrange in some other manner for the payment of the duty imposed upon aliens seeking admission overland, "either as to all or as to any such aliens." It will be to the interest of this country in the collection of the head tax to collect as at present from the steamers, as it can be much more easily collected from the steamship companies because of the fact that the steamship companies have facilities for collecting this tax that the railway companies do not possess.

Besides this the Government of the United States should be in a position to force, if necessary, a strict compliance, not only with the agreements but with our immigration laws as well, because it is a fact that the Canadian steamship companies have not returned debarred aliens to the ports from which they came, as they have agreed to do, and that at very recent date, and the evidence substantiating that statement can be found in my address opening the debate on this question. Thousands of these aliens who should have been returned—diseased aliens and others—those who would not be admitted at New York—have sneaked in through Canada on account of the negligence of these Canadian steamship companies and for want of proper facilities along the Canadian frontier. They have advertised in certain portions of Europe and Asia especially with a view of securing these objectionable people to come in on their lines, people who would be rejected at New York by our Government.

Now, our Government should be in a position to tell these steamship companies, through the Canadian railways, to do business in a proper way, in an American way, or that they can not do business at all to this country. Our Secretary of the Treasury should be in a commanding position where he will not have to beg and beseech of these foreigners that they treat us fairly. It is belittling; it is humiliating.

This bill gives him that position. When it is borne in mind that Canada last year paid $500,000 commission to secure alien immigrants to their country, when it is also remembered that they had no exclusion laws and that any one of these people who wanted to could come into that country, one can see at a glance what a horde of undesirable people they have induced to come to their shores, and it is not a rash statement to make that a very large number of this objectionable people have found their way across our border simply on account of the inefficient service that we have there at the present time. This state of affairs will be remedied as soon as the amendment offered by me to this bill becomes law, the amendment establishing ports of entry along the Canadian frontier, where better watch can be kept on these people than is kept at the present time, where our force of inspectors and other officials will be concentrated on the Canadian frontier.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that our New England friends, a large number of whom did not vote for this amendment—that of establishing ports of entry—and who objected to the head tax applying to aliens who might be visiting Canada and would want to come over for a day or so to this country, will not be antagonistic to any further effort on the part of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee to close that open gate on the Canadian frontier, because I noticed that all these members regarded with astonishment that little amendment, and they feared it might interfere with free immigration to the United States from points adjacent to the homes of these gentlemen. I noticed they objected to anyone coming in at ports of this country along the Atlantic coast who could not read. It looked to me that these gentlemen were not quite so particular about reform when it affected "the home market."

This is their position: They voted in effect that a good, honest, strong, healthy German boy or girl, or Irishman, English boy or girl should not be permitted to land at Ellis Island or any port on the Atlantic coast unless they could read, but they refused to vote that the gates should be closed on the Canadian frontier against debarred classes. They refused to vote to keep out undesirable people at those places on the frontier by voting against my amendment establishing ports of entry on the Canadian frontier. They did not care if they came in by their borders whether they could read or not, whether they were insane or not, whether they were paupers or not, or whether they were anarchists. It has been claimed by responsible people that it would be impossible to get a bill finally passed that was not approved of by the New England railroads and the Canadian railroads and the Canadian steamship companies. It is claimed that this influence is so great and strong that the last time an immigration measure was taken up they had it modified before the bill was introduced and afterwards, so that every line suited them.

I insist that there should be no laws enforced or rules maintained at Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, New York, Ellis Island, or anywhere else along the Atlantic seaboard that are not enforced on the Canadian frontier. I do not think the Canadian lines should be exempt from laws and rules which other lines in any other part of the United States are forced to obey. It is an insult to the intelligence of every member in this House to have any other rule obtain. I for one will not sanction putting into effect any immigration laws at all that do not apply with equal force to all parts of the United States and to every port in the United States.

I can not understand how my friends the members from the New England States are so sensitive about this Canadian frontier business and the head tax, in view of the fact they voted unanimously for the educational-test amendment, which, by the way, does not even except citizens of Canada. Every citizen of Canada who comes over here will have to observe this law if it becomes a law, and it must become operative if it passes, and these citizens of Canada will have to go into the Government official's office and show their ability to read or go back home. I wish the gentlemen would explain their position in this matter. I should like to have them explain for the information of this House and the country at large how they voted for the educational test and, on the other hand, are so anxious that the railroad companies of Canada shall not be responsible for the head tax and that there shall be no designated ports of entry on the frontier. The explanation would be undoubtedly entertaining if not instructive.

One New England gentleman said on the floor during this debate, and it is a matter of record:

I have been a collector of customs along the frontier for some years and had something to do with these matters. Nobody—

Said he, referring to the head tax—ever thinks of collecting the dollar.

Now, this gentleman was once, the record shows, governor of Maine. He is a gentleman of mature years, evidently an honest man, and certainly a man of intelligence, yet he did not know it was his duty, under the law, to attend to this business, and he says:

Nobody ever thinks of collecting the dollar.

Citizens living along the Canadian frontier never think of abiding by the contract-labor laws or the immigration laws; in fact these laws are a dead letter in that section. They have allowed each year over 70,000 aliens to come into the United States illegally for years past, and the only evidence we have, Mr. Chairman, that there has been any "thinking" going on about this immigration business is what has been manifested on the floor of this House since this bill has been under discussion, in the effort on the part of quite a number of these gentlemen to prevent the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, with the sanction of the House, to place the Canadian frontier on an exact parity in the enforcement of the immigration laws with the rest of the United States.

Obstacle after obstacle has been presented; suggestion after suggestion has been made; query after query has been propounded, and some of our members have been in a state of almost nervous collapse for fear there might be something in the bill that would close the Canadian frontier against the entrance of objectionable and unobjectionable immigrants, and that laws would be enacted and enforced and applied the same exactly as to the Canadian frontier as obtain at all other points of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion that the Secretary of the Treasury has full authority by a provision of this bill—the last part of section 1—to arrange with the steamship and railway lines for a satisfactory method of payment of the head tax. He is also authorized in the last part of this bill to prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens entering at our borders in such a way as not to delay, impede, or annoy passengers in ordinary travel between the United States and other countries, and it gives him power to enter into contracts with foreign transportation lines for the same purpose. So it will be seen that there need be no apprehension that this act in any way will prove a hardship to anyone in any direction. The Secretary of the Treasury is fully authorized to make the enforcement of the law as agreeable as can be done and at the same time insure carrying out the intent of the law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say further, and I ask the indulgence of the House a moment. My good friend from Maine [Mr. POWERS], the ex-governor of Maine, out of the kindness of his heart the other day made a motion to include in the free list of the head tax the Cubans. I wanted then to explain why that could not be done, but those around me kept saying, "SHATTUC, let it go; SHATTUC, let it go; SHATTUC, let it go." I would not say one word here if it was possible to help the Cubans in the way indicated, but it is not possible. Mr. Chairman, I call for order.

The CHAIRMAN rapped for order.

Mr. SHATTUC. If these gentlemen around here do not want to hear this eloquent speech, they had better retire to the cloakroom, for I want to explain. [Laughter.] Now, the gentleman offered that, of course, in good faith. The tax of a dollar and a half, as it will be under this law, will not affect the rates at all between here and Cuba. It will be the same as now whether this Cuban clause stands in the bill or whether it does not.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to continue for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHATTUC. It does not make any difference what is done about this matter, the rates remain the same, and the result will be that you are simply instructing our collectors in New York not to collect anything from the steamship companies, and the steamship companies will collect the same for passenger tickets as at present. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to strike out this part from the bill, which was introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS], because it is inoperative.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to amend the bill by striking out certain words, which he has referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the request will be granted.

Without objection, the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio will be withdrawn.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent that we may be permitted to correct the numbers of the sections in the bill when it is passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The numbers of the sections will be corrected by the Clerk so that the text of the bill may conform thereto. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 34. That the words "United States" as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States and any territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has offered an amendment.

Mr. MANN. But I understand that that is to be a separate section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "that," in line 11, the words "for the purposes of this act."

Mr. MANN. The section will then read, "That for the purposes of this act the words 'United States,'" etc., shall be construed to be so and so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I also offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 23, line 13, after the word "or," amend by inserting the word "other."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to the section, the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. LANDIS.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an additional section after section 4 the following:
That no intoxicating liquors of any character shall be sold within the limits of the Capitol building of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment offered by Mr. LANDIS the following:
"And the collectors of revenue districts of the United States are hereby directed to refuse license to sell spirituous, vinous, and malt liquor by retail to any person living in a county or district where the inhabitants of said county or district have by vote prohibited the sale of such liquors in such county or district."

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that amendment and on the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is too late to raise a point of order on the first amendment, an amendment having been offered to it. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order against the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. SHATTUC. Then I withdraw the other point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHATTUC. I made the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER. He withdrew his point of order and I have been recognized. I decline to yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the point of order was made to the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, and that then the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio was withdrawn.

Mr. WHEELER. And the Chair recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. And that the amendment to the amendment is now pending.

Mr. SHATTUC. I did not withdraw my point of order to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, but to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. WHEELER. I insist on my rights, Mr. Chairman, and I decline to yield the floor for the purpose of a point of order, or any other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must accept the statement of the gentleman from Ohio as correct. An amendment was offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], inserting a new section. A point of order might then have been made to that. No point of order was raised. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] offered an amendment to the amendment. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] was then recognized, and raised a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. He stated that he also raised a point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS]. The Chair stated that the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] came too late. The Chair then understood the gentleman from Ohio to say that he withdrew his other point of order, and the Chair so stated it, and recognized the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] as in order to speak upon his amendment. The Chair now understands the gentleman from Ohio to state that he did not intend to withdraw the point of order made to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, and the Chair must be governed by that statement. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Ohio against the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio state his point of order?

Mr. SHATTUC. I should like to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment of Mr. WHEELER was again read.

Mr. SHATTUC. My point of order is that that amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized to speak on the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I scarcely deem it necessary to suggest to the chairman that while the amendment to the amendment may not be germane to the pending bill, it is certainly germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, against which no point of order has been made.

I desire to say, sir, that the amendment suggested by myself is offered in no captious spirit, but is the result of a sincere conviction that the Government of the United States ought not, and can not in justice to its own dignity, aid in the constant violation of the laws of the several States. It is a practice known to us all that in the various States of the Republic authority is given by the legislature to counties and communities to say whether or not liquors shall be sold at retail within certain districts.

It is also a fact, unfortunate but still true, that the average citizen of the Republic stands not so much in dread of the law of his State as he does of the Federal law, and that what has been vulgarly termed "blind tigers" are run with impunity in almost every State of the country, under the ægis of a license from the revenue collector of the district. If Congress would prohibit the issuing of licenses to parties living in districts where the inhabitants have declared that they do not desire liquor to be sold, it would tend to lessen, if it did not entirely destroy, the illegal sale of spirituous and vinous liquors. We are accomplishing but little when we prohibit the sale of liquors in this Capitol; but if there be a healthy temperance sentiment in this House, let us go to the root of the matter and prohibit the Federal Government from issuing licenses in districts where the people of the county or district have said they do not desire liquor to be sold.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. KLEBERG. Do you not think that a law of this kind, taking away the revenue which the Government now derives from the sale of liquor, would simply result in a lot of "blind tigers" which would pay no license whatever to anybody?

Mr. WHEELER. On the contrary, this strikes a blow at the "blind tigers." It is for the purpose of preventing a man, when arraigned before a Federal court for a violation of the liquor law, protecting himself by exhibiting a license from the revenue collector of the district.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I did not quite catch the gentleman's amendment. Does it prohibit a license to manufacture as well as to sell?

Mr. WHEELER. No; it is not intended to interfere with the manufacture of liquor. It is not intended to interfere with the wholesaler. It is not intended to interfere with anyone who does a legitimate business; but it is intended to prohibit men living in districts where prohibition has been voted from going to the revenue collector of the district and securing a Federal license so as to protect him against prosecution in the Federal courts.

Mr. McRAE. Will my friend allow me to ask why he makes any distinction between the manufacture and the sale? I agree with you that some legislation of this kind ought to be passed; but I think it ought to go to the manufacture as well as the sale.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no right to offer such an amendment. Now, where the party is licensed by the State this amendment does not apply. If it is manufactured——

Mr. McRAE. That is what I am talking about, that in the prohibited districts we should prohibit the manufacture of whisky.

Mr. WHEELER. I would vote for such a measure if it were within my ability to secure its adoption in this body. But I believe that the members of this House will see——

Mr. SHATTUC. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHATTUC. What is the question before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHATTUC. I would like to hear the gentleman, because he is a splendid man; but I have my duty to perform, and therefore I raise the point of order that he is not speaking germane.

Mr. WHEELER. I submit with all courtesy that the Chair is judge of whether or not my remarks are pertinent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I am attempting, feebly it is true, but to the best of my ability, to explain the purpose of this amendment, and to see if it is germane. Now, I say to the gentleman from Arkansas that if the manufacturer had a license from the State this amendment would not apply; but it is intended to prohibit a man who desires to violate the State law from receiving a license from the collector. I do not think the Government ought to disregard the local statutes of the States.

Mr. McRAE. They should not do that; and they should not authorize a distillery to be set up in one of those prohibited districts, because it is from the distilleries that youth is debauched.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILEY. I move that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. SHATTUC. I will not object to the gentleman's time being extended at this time, but hereafter I shall object, as I want to get through with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question now pending is the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Chair will pardon me, I have been under the impression that there was no limitation upon a gentleman discussing a point of order. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said about all I care to say. I simply desire——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand the purpose of your resolution merely to be this: To enable the States to execute their police regulations without interference upon the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. WHEELER. That is exactly the purpose of this amendment. And I have resorted to this method, Mr. Chairman, because in the Fifty-fifth Congress I introduced a bill embodying this idea and it found the same resting place where so many similar measures repose now.

Now, just a moment, in reply to something said by the gentleman from Missouri a while ago, that there are many times upon the floor of this House members of Congress who are disposed to drink and to have a good time generally. In justice to the present membership of this House and this Congress, and those Congresses in which I have served, I desire to say, without any purpose of advancing my own political or selfish ends, for I have voluntarily eschewed this life, I do not believe within the limits of the Republic 357 men can be found who from year to year and day to day, surrounded by the temptations that beset the average legislator in this Capitol, live more correctly than the average membership of the Houses of Congress.

I assert, sir, without fear of successful contradiction, there is no more temperate body of men within the limit of the Republic than the members of the lower House of Congress. I could enumerate on that hand the number of members I have seen under the influence of drink in the six years that I have been here. I think it is unjust to the gentlemen here and it is unjust to the American people and it is unbecoming the dignity of this great body for gentlemen to give to the country the idea that the members of this House are guilty of drinking or any other habit that will detract from their great place and high character. I do not believe it is becoming in us to say so; and for my part, as an American citizen—not as a member of Congress—I feel it my duty to pay a just tribute to the high character, morally and intellectually, of this House upon both sides of the Chamber. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana provides that no intoxicating liquors of any character shall be sold within the limits of the Capitol building of the United States. It will be observed that this amendment is not a general provision prohibiting or restricting the sale of intoxicating liquors on all Government property or in all Government buildings, but is simply a prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquors in one building, and any amendment restraining the sale of liquor in any other building or any other locality controlled by the Government would not be in order under the rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky also affects matters relating to the revenues, and would be original matter which would go to the committee dealing with matters relating to revenue. The Chair feels very clearly, therefore, that the amendment is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, and sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHEELER. With great respect for the Chair's ruling, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHEELER) there were 102 ayes and 16 noes.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. The committee had not entered upon the discussion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, and therefore it is now in order to make the point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana can now be made. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana was pending and no gentleman of the committee addressed the Chair, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, who offered an amendment to the amendment. It has been uniformly held that under the rule a point of order can not be made after an amendment has been considered, and an amendment offered to an amendment is consideration of the pending amendment. There seems to be no exception to these precedents, and the Chair would hold that the amendment having been offered by the gentleman from Kentucky to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, it would now be too late to raise the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, there was no time after the gentleman from Indiana took his seat between that moment and the time when the gentleman from Kentucky was recognized to make the amendment. There were three or four gentlemen ready and willing to make that point, but before it could be made the gentleman from Kentucky was recognized to offer his amendment.

Mr. HAY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman from Missouri appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was waiting to hear the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri. The Chair does not know what the conclusion of his position will be.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether a second point of order is in order, but I submit to the consideration of the Chair that there was not time intervening for gentlemen on this side to make the point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky rose in his seat and said he had an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and he was immediately recognized, and therefore it was perfectly impossible for any member to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In reply the Chair will state that during the entire consideration of this bill whenever an amendment has been offered he has been ready to recognize the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge or any member of the committee, several of whom are sitting by him, or any member of the House. The Chair has been especially careful in that direction, and, as members know, various points of order have been raised, and raised abundantly, by the chairman of the committee. When the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana was read, the Chair was ready to recognize the gentleman from Ohio and looked in the direction of that gentleman, but no one rose connected with the committee, and the gentleman from Kentucky rose and addressed the Chair. The Chair did not know but that the gentleman from Kentucky proposed to raise the point of order. In view of the way in which the amendment was offered, the Chair feels that a point of order would not lie against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WACHTER) there were 108 ayes and 19 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is an amendment in order to the new section just adopted, offered by the gentleman from Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that would depend on the nature of the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add thereto "or on any part of the grounds on which the Capitol building is located, or in any public building owned or used by the United States Government."

Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana relates only to the Capitol building, and for that reason it was held in order. This proposed amendment says no building owned or used by the United States Government. So the amendment is not germane to the bill, nor is it germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I think this amendment is germane. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana refers to one building and this amendment would cover other Government buildings. It is simply extending the provision of the law and in the line of the original provision. There is no question of revenue involved in this.

Mr. MANN. I ask the attention of the Chair to the further point of order, that this amendment can not now be offered because the section to which it is offered has already been adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the first point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that the amendment is not germane must, in the opinion of the Chair, hold. This amendment relates to other localities not alluded to in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana; and in accordance with the precedent established in similar cases, that an amendment relating to one specific object does not admit of amendments relating to other and different objects, even of the same general character, the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question being taken, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "repealed" in line 16, page 23, insert the following:

"Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal or in any wise interfere with the administration of laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese or persons of Chinese descent; nor shall this act relate to said Chinese."

Mr. SHATTUC. I make a point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SHATTUC. The amendment is not germane to anything in this bill. There is nothing in this bill at all about the Chinese.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr COOMBS] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. COOMBS. I will simply say that inasmuch as, according to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, there is nothing in this bill pertaining to the Chinese, this amendment simply affirms that proposition and proposes to keep out of the bill everything relating to the Chinese question. Assuming that the Chinese question has been legislated upon in this Congress and in 1891——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California will confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. COOMBS. Confining myself to the point of order, let me say that this is proposed as an amendment to section 35, which provides that "all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." The effect of this amendment is that if it should hereafter be construed that the Chinese-exclusion act is inconsistent with this act, it shall not for that reason be repealed. I think that is the only question involved. I submit that the amendment is pertinent.

Mr. SHATTUC rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In the opinion of the Chair this amendment, which proposes to restrict the general provisions of section 35, is clearly germane and in order. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, there is a very serious question presented by this amendment. This bill contains provisions much more restrictive in their operation than those contained in the Chinese-exclusion act. For instance, in that act there is nothing preventing the introduction into this country of persons afflicted with smallpox or any contagious disease. This is the only law which will prevent the entrance into the country of Chinese persons who may become a public charge or who, being diseased, are liable to communicate disease to our own citizens. Therefore, I submit, the provisions of this bill ought not to be narrowed in their operation by such an amendment as that now submitted.

This bill as drawn has been carefully guarded. I very well understand who are the parties that have inspired this proposition. I do not charge anything improper upon the gentleman who offers the amendment; but there are certain transportation lines that have been moving heaven and earth in order to get just such legislation introduced into this bill. The adoption of the amendment will have the effect for which they have been working. I submit that it ought not by any means to be adopted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to emphasize to this Committee of the Whole the words that have just been spoken by the chairman of our committee [Mr. SHATTUC]. The bill which we have been considering is designed in its main features to restrict inmigration to this country. But there is another feature of the bill that is much more important to the people who are already in this country—to the great body of our citizens. I refer to the restrictions which are included in this bill for preventing the introduction of disease into this country. There are no such provisions in the Chinese-exclusion act. That act was designed simply to prevent the introduction of cheap labor into this country to compete with our own working people. But the present bill includes sanitary provisions, every one of which, so far as they relate to the incoming of Chinese, will be nullified by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California. As is very well known doubtless to every member of the House, this danger is much more serious as connected with the immigration of Chinese than as to any other race that may enter our country. Therefore I most seriously ask the House to vote down this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. If this amendment was divided and the last clause of it stricken out, I would ask whether it would in any way interfere with the operation of the bill in regard to the particulars of which the gentleman has spoken?

Mr. TAWNEY. Move to amend by striking out the last clause, "nor shall this act relate to said Chinese."

Mr. PAYNE. If that was stricken out I do not think it would relate to the question of disease.

Mr. ADAMS. Why not?

Mr. PAYNE. Because, from the reading of the amendment, the other portion of it simply restricts the repeal so as not to repeal the Chinese law, and of course the gentleman has no objection to that.

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. PAYNE. I think if this amendment were read again and the gentleman paid attention he would find that if the last clause was stricken out—and of course the amendment is divisible—that it would correct the defect that he speaks of, which is a very serious one.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, Mr. Chairman, it is most difficult to discuss an amendment offered offhand to a bill which has been carefully prepared and to take in the full meaning of the amendment as it is read from the desk. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that amendment by striking out the last clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the amendment the words "nor shall this act relate to said Chinese."

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I will say this, that I put those words in the present amendment for the simple reason that they have been in the existing immigration laws since 1891. In the amendment of 1891 they were put in; in the amendment of 1893 they were put in, and it was with the idea of perpetuating the existing law in that respect that they were incorporated at this time. I have no objection to the striking of them out at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committe rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is ordered on any amendment, the Chair will submit them in gross to the House. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHATTUC, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5500. An act granting an increase of pension to Angus Cameron;

S. 4718. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Whitcomb;

S. 1981. An act granting a pension to Thomas Hannah;

S. 484. An act granting an increase of pension to Fletcher J. Walker;

S. 5748. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Utler;

S. 5741. An act granting a pension to Mrs. William H. Kendrick;

S. 5856. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. Turner;

S. 5263. An act granting a pension to Fannie Frost;

S. 4190. An act granting a pension to Fredereka Seymore;

S. 2265. An act granting an increase of pension to William Kelley;

S. 5648. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Bulkley;

S. 2051. An act granting an increase of pension to H. W. Tryon;

S. 5924. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin Young;

S. 1132. An act granting a pension to R. Sherman Langworthy;

S. 7. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Thomas;

S. 4401. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Kropf; and

S. 1343. An act to correct the military record of Samuel F. Hall.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6037. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Holcomb;

H. R. 8134. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Dunn;

H. R. 13211. An act granting a pension to Melissa Burton;

H. R. 9695. An act granting an increase of pension to Evaline Jenkins;

H. R. 5475. An act granting a pension to August Schill;

H. R. 12428. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth G. Getty;

H. R. 2286. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Etna Poole;

H. R. 7560. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Butler;
H. R. 11288. An act granting an increase of pension to William E. Ball;
H. R. 9794. An act granting a pension to Zebulon A. Shipman;
H. R. 6718. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew R. Jones;
H. R. 5551. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Edward Price Lance, alias Edward Price;
H. R. 2289. An act granting an increase of pension to Pitzar Ingram;
H. R. 2623. An act granting an increase of pension to John Smith;
H. R. 5248. An act granting a pension to Frances A. Tillotson;
H. R. 13168. An act to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Mass.;
H. R. 11124. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Scott;
H. R. 13614. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. White;
H. R. 4542. An act granting a pension to Eliza J. West;
H. R. 13037. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances W. Anderton;
H. R. 12983. An act granting an increase of pension to Eleanor Emerson;
H. R. 9833. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret McCuen;
H. R. 12422. An act granting an increase of pension to David Topper;
H. R. 8487. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. Crist; and
H. R. 12779. An act granting an increase of pension to George Chamberlin.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 7319. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Anthony;
H. R. 2901. An act to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams;
H. R. 357. An act for the relief of Levi Maxted; and
H. R. 11249. An act granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1464) to establish storm-warning stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, are hereby authorized to strike out the word "forty" from line 24, page 43, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-seven."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4995) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 44.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee consisting of three Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate to meet with a committee of like number to be appointed by the House of Representatives, to confer upon the matter of the message of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12804) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Presiding Officer had appointed, as said committee on the part of the Senate, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. PETTUS.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Appropriations, presented a conference report on the bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; which, with the accompanying statement, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13359) "making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 9, 11, 19, 20, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21, 22, 23, and 25; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, and if in his judgment it will be for the best interests of the Government to purchase all land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, necessary to be used to erect additional batteries, and for buildings for the troops, $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until a valid title to said land and property shall have been acquired by the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In line 2 of said amendment strike out the word "bill" and insert in lieu thereof the word "act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of said amendment, after the word "States," insert the following: ", except the contract of November 7, 1891, for 100 8, 10, and 12 inch guns."

In line 8 strike out the words "security in proper" and insert in lieu thereof the words "good security in same."

And in line 10 strike out the words "according to the true intent and meaning thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
LUCIUS N. LITTAUER,
THOS. C. MCRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
F. E. WARREN,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications, etc., submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Appropriates $325,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $500,000, as proposed by the Senate, for installation of range and position finders.

On No. 2: Appropriates $150,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, for purchase and installation of searchlights.

On No. 3: Appropriates $225,000, as proposed by the Senate, to enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, and if in his judgment it will be for the best interest of the Government to purchase the land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, necessary to be used for additional batteries and buildings for troops.

On No. 4: Appropriates $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the House, for protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications.

On No. 5: Grants to the State of Connecticut, as proposed by the Senate, the right to occupy for purposes of a park a tract of land situated on the east shore of New London Harbor, Connecticut.

On No. 6: Appropriates $100,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, for construction of sea walls and embankments.

On No. 7: Divides the proposed appropriation for submarine mines between the Engineer Department and the Artillery Corps, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 8: Appropriates $165,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $46,500, as proposed by the House, for the purchase of steel forgings for coast-defense guns.

On No. 9: Appropriates $250,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $406,000, as proposed by the Senate, for carriages for mounting seacoast guns.

On No. 10: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, for the further test of disappearing gun carriages.

On No. 11: Appropriates, $100,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $170,000, as proposed by the Senate, for range finders.

On No. 12: Appropriates $82,000, as proposed by the Senate, for mountain guns.

On amendments 13, 14, 15, and 16 strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, restriction as to the calibers of breech-loading rifles, siege, and breech-loading howitzers, siege, and carriages therefor.

On No. 17: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the obligation of certain contracts made with the Bethlehem Iron Company to be assumed by its successor, the Bethlehem Steel Company.

On No. 18: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the Secretary of War to accept the proposition of the Pneumatic Gun Carriage and Power Company for settlement of its contract to furnish a 10-inch disappearing gun carriage.

On Nos. 19 and 20: Appropriates $37,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $43,926, as proposed by the Senate, for current expenses at the proving ground at Sandy Hook, and strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the employment of services in the Ordnance Bureau.

On No. 21: Appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, for sea wall at Sandy Hook.

On Nos. 22 and 23: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $58,000 for power plant for artillery ammunition factory, and $28,000 for a box-making and packing shop at the Frankford Arsenal, Pa.

On No. 24: Strikes out the appropriation of $4,600, as proposed by the Senate, for additional battery of two boilers at the Watertown Arsenal, Mass.

On No. 25: Strikes out the provision proposed by the House authorizing payment on account of Isham shell and Tuttle thorite.

The bill, as finally agreed upon, appropriates $7,298,955, being $612,526 less than as it passed the Senate, $736,500 more than as it passed the House, $65,056 less than the last law, and $9,100,353 less than the estimates.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
L. N. LITTAUER,
THOS. C. McRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14589. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902;

H. J. Res. 172. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the Morgan Memorial Association, of Winchester, Va., certain Revolutionary trophies at Allegheny Arsenal, Pittsburg, Pa.;

H. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution authorizing the use and improvement of Governors Island, Boston Harbor;

H. R. 13895. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

H. R. 2857. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances C. Haughton;

H. R. 12418. An act granting a pension to Matilda C. Clarke;

H. R. 10782. An act granting a pension to Ole Steensland;

H. R. 6625. An act granting increase of pension to Mary S. Downing;

H. R. 1346. An act granting a pension to Adelbert L. Orr;

H. R. 10995. An act to regulate the introduction of eggs of game birds for propagation:

H. R. 9606. An act granting a pension to Charles Blitz;

H. R. 7397. An act granting a pension to Louisa White;

H. R. 989. An act to authorize the Light-House Board to pay to Chamblin, Delaney & Scott the sum of $1,704.46;

H. R. 13395. An act granting a pension to Arthur J. Bushnell;

H. R. 10144. An act to donate to the State of Alabama the spars of the captured battle ships Don Juan d'Austria and Almirante Oquendo; and

H. R. 6330. An act granting an increase of pension to William D. Tanner.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2168. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Baldwin;

S. 712. An act granting an increase of pension to John Housiaux;

S. 1797. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Russell;

S. 2511. An act granting an increase of pension to William Phillips;

S. 1464. An act to establish storm-warning stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan;

S. 2535. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph;

S. 3063. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge;

S. 2697. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Baldwin;

S. 2457. An act granting an increase of pension to Warren Y. Merchant;

S. 2551. An act granting a pension to Amelia Engel;

S. 3888. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Hubbard;

S. 3998. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Kimble;

S. 4240. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin N. Perkins;

S. 4642. An act granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery;

S. 4415. An act granting an increase of pension to Vesta A. Brown;

S. 4638. An act granting a pension to Helena Sudsburg;

S. 3551. An act granting an increase of pension to John P. Collier;

S. 5669. An act granting a pension to Charlotte M. Howe;

S. 5759. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Crooker;

S. 5670. An act granting a pension to Samuel H. Chamberlin;

S. 4729. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp;

S. 4712. An act granting an increase of pension to Eliphlet Noyes;

S. 4706. An act granting an increase of pension to William Harrington;

S. 4655. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver K. Wyman;

S. 4766. An act granting an increase of pension to James P. McClure;

S. 4759. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Clark;

S. 4758. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Doane;

S. 4732. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hazzard;

S. 4730. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Youngs;

S. 5106. An act granting an increase of pension to Horace L. Richardson;

S. 4983. An act granting a pension to John W. Smoot;

S. 4853. An act granting an increase of pension to Amos Moulton;

S. 4871. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Worthen;

S. 4862. An act granting an increase of pension to James Welch;

S. 4829. An act granting an increase of pension to Nimrod Headington;

S. 4790. An act granting an increase of pension to Stephen A. Seavey;

S. 5371. An act granting an increase of pension to Jonathan O. Thompson;

S. 5209. An act granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Van Eaton;

S. 5202. An act granting an increase of pension Jennie M. Wagner;

S. 5153. An act granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham;

S. 5152. An act granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin, alias Marion M. Martin; and

S. 1038. An act granting an increase of pension to Gustavus C. Pratt.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1343. An act to correct the military record of Samuel F. Hall—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 7. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Thomas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 484. An act granting an increase of pension to Fletcher J. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1132. An act granting an increase of pension to R. Sherman Langworthy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1981. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Hannah—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2051. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry W. Tryon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2265. An act granting an increase of pension to William Kelley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4401. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Kropf—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4718. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Whitcomb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5263. An act granting a pension to Fannie Frost—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5500. An act granting an increase of pension to Angus Cameron—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5648. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Bulkley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5741. An act granting a pension to Martha E. Kendrick—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 5748. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Utter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5856. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. Turner—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 5924. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin Young—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4995) to establish an additional life-saving station at Monomoy Island, Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this request will be granted.

There was no objection.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a report from the Committee on Rules, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House numbered 178, have had the same under consideration, and report the following in lieu thereof:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12704) to increase the subsidiary silver coinage, and after two hours of general debate the bill shall be read by paragraphs for amendment, and upon the conclusion of said reading the Committee of the Whole shall rise and report the bill with amendments, if any, to the House: Provided, That the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House to consider the said bill shall continue privileged each day until said bill is disposed of, not, however, to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill referred to in the rule is a short bill, consisting of a single paragraph, providing for the coinage of the silver in the Treasury into subsidiary coin. The necessity for the bill will appear from a short extract which I will read from a letter of the Director of the Mint, submitted to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. He says:

The facts of the situation briefly stated are that prior to the passage of the act of March 14, 1900, the total stock of subsidiary coin in the country was limited to $80,000,000, and by that act the limit was raised to $100,000,000. The demand for subsidiary coin during the past two years has been very heavy, and the total stock in the country is now nearly $92,000,000, almost all of which is outside the Treasury in active circulation.

It seems quite probable that unless this Congress takes some action to again raise the limit the entire amount authorized will be absorbed before another Congress can act, and the Treasury will be unable to meet the legitimate wants of trade. It is, therefore, of urgent importance that some measure be passed by the Fifty-seventh Congress, and, if practicable, during the present session, to relieve the situation.

That is the opinion of the Director of the Mint as to the necessity for the passage of the bill referred to in the rule. The rule provides for a general debate limited to two hours, and then for consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule until disposed of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask my colleague on the committee to yield to me ten minutes, as I desire to yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the gentleman whether he will not consent to allow this matter to go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. DALZELL. I prefer not. I should like to have the rule adopted to-night, so that we can start in with the consideration of the bill to-morrow morning.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want the full twenty minutes that we are entitled to on our side.

Mr. DALZELL. So far as that is concerned, of course I can now move the previous question and shut off debate, which I do not desire to do. I yield to the gentleman fifteen minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the time to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand that is in lieu of what I have already yielded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to yield the time to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, the bill sought to be considered proposes to stop the coinage of silver dollars now authorized by law, which coinage was authorized by the Sherman Act, and authorized again by the war-revenue act, adopted in 1898, and again authorized by the gold-standard act, approved March 14, 1900. It proposes to take the entire bullion that is in the Treasury and coin it into subsidiary coin. It then proposes to take the silver dollars and melt them down for subsidiary coin, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The bullion in the Treasury was purchased for the purpose of being coined into silver dollars, and was paid for in notes issued by the Government, called Treasury notes, which notes were to be retired by the silver dollars as fast as coined.

Mr. Speaker, there are two grounds upon which I oppose the consideration of this bill. In the first place, there is no necessity for the measure. There is no occasion for any legislation whatever relative to subsidiary coinage.

Two years ago we enacted a law relative to this subject, which it was presumed would supply all the subsidiary coins needed for years. Previous to that time for twenty years the subsidiary coins of the United States had been equivalent to $80,000,000. The gold-standard act approved March 14, 1900, raised that amount $20,000,000, or to a total of $100,000,000. Previous to that time there never had been in circulation subsidiary coin amounting per capita to more than $1, and the average had been 89 cents. This additional $20,000,000 is sufficient for the needs of the people for at least fifteen years to come. Mr. Speaker, the conclusive evidence of that fact is the Treasury report which every member received this morning at his house. He will find upon examining that report that there is a redundancy of subsidiary coin in the Treasury. It seems impossible for the Treasury to put in circulation all of the subsidiary coin now issued.

We find from this morning's report that $12,793,284 are now in the Treasury, notwithstanding the fact there is a law on the statute book which provides that the Government shall pay the expense of shipping subsidiary silver to any part of the United States. It is true that before the adoption of the act which raised the limit to $100,000,000 the amount of subsidiary coin in the Treasury sank to $2,500,000 or $3,000,000, but since the twenty millions were authorized it has been climbing higher and higher, until to-day it is over $12,700,000. That same report shows that there has been issued $456,145,000 of silver certificates, of which only $7,152,837 are in the Treasury. Showing a redundancy of subsidiary coin and a shortage of silver certificates. In the last four years there has been an increase of $30,000,000 in $1 and $2 silver certificates, which has further relieved the necessity for more subsidiary coin, as such certificates form a large part of our change money.

Mr. Speaker, there is no occasion, consequently, to coin more subsidiary coin. The intention of this bill is expressed by the gentleman in his report when he says it is a slow process by which to eliminate and destroy the silver dollar as money. All of the twenty millions of subsidiary money which was authorized by the act of last Congress has not yet been coined. There are still $5,000,000 uncoined; and what is the necessity of enacting more legislation with respect to subsidiary coin when the amount authorized by the act of March 14, 1900, has not yet been issued and $5,000,000 is yet to be coined?

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why this bill should not be considered, which is more potent to my mind than the one which I have given. Gentlemen of this House remember that in the last Congress we passed an act called the gold-standard act. The gentlemen remember that they had a clause in that bill which was like this, providing that the silver dollar should no longer be coined. Gentlemen will remember that the Senate of the United States was then so constituted that no such legislation could be enacted by that body.

The gentlemen knew there were certain persons there who opposed the retirement of the silver dollars or the stoppage of their coinage. The gentlemen well remember that the Committee on Finance of the Senate was so constituted at that time that it was impossible even to get a favorable report of that committee indorsing such a measure. Consequently it was necessary that a compromise should be made with reference to the matter. There were certain Senators there who were termed "silver Senators," who were willing to vote for the bill if the coinage of the silver dollars from the bullion in the Treasury was continued, and their votes could not be obtained until it was so provided and until it was further provided that the Treasury notes issued for the payment of the bullion purchased under the Sherman Act should be retired by the issuing of silver dollars in place thereof. They produced a bill that provided for the continuation of the coinage of the silver dollars until the Treasury notes were retired by the silver dollars so coined.

That was compromise legislation. They said, in other words, that we will give you the provisions of your bill. We will make the United States notes termed greenbacks payable in gold at the option of the holder; we will increase the gold reserve to $150,000,000; we will make Treasury notes directly redeemable in gold; we will give you the privilege of issuing a gold bond instead of a bond payable in coin; we will give you certain privileges in regard to national banks and in regard to the issuing of money by them, provided you give us the privilege of having this silver bullion that was purchased under the Sherman Act coined into silver dollars.

Mr. Speaker, that was the arrangement and that was the compromise. Is it right, is it fair, is it just, after having obtained all of your side of the consideration of the agreement, before the time has elapsed, when the fulfillment of your part of the agreement could be made, that you repeal the provision and enact a law that the silver dollars shall not be coined? Is it right, and is it just, having obtained by legislation the consideration as stated on your side, and having agreed in the same legislation that the silver dollar shall be coined until the Treasury notes issued in payment thereof should be redeemed, that before your agreement can be complied with that the provision should be repealed?

Mr. Speaker, it is not right; it is not fair. This bill should not even be considered by this House, because, in my judgment, it is a violation of an implied agreement of the terms of a compromise measure. I therefore contend, first, that there is no necessity for this legislation, and the Treasury report this morning shows it conclusively, and, second, that it is a breach of good faith to a compromise when the moving consideration on one side has not been complied with.

Mr. Speaker, the time that is proposed by this resolution to consider a bill of this kind is absurd—two hours' debate on a bill which involves in one provision the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to melt down silver dollars until every one is out of existence. Is that the kind of consideration to be given to a bill of so serious a character? Is that the length of time we should take to consider a bill to change the monetary system of our Government? No wonder the House is losing its character as a deliberative body. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that from every point of view the resolution for this rule should be defeated.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WATSON, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOREING, indefinitely, on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was then agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for repair of the naval laboratory, Brooklyn, N. Y.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers and the draft of a bill, with a recommendation relating to the claim of the estate of George Lea Febiger—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Chief of Ordnance, relating to the disposal of certain useless papers—to the Joint Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting letters and documents relating to comparative tests of the Gathmann torpedo gun and the 12-inch Army service rifle—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed, except the accompanying Senate and House documents.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and at the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on the first Monday in June in each year, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2247); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14247), to authorize the Charleston, Suburban and Summerville Railway Company to construct and maintain two bridges across Ashley River, in the State of South Carolina, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2251); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HEATWOLE, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the House concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 51) providing for the printing of 33,000 copies of a volume on farm animals, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2256); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. REID, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 111) for the relief of William J. Smith and D. M. Wisdom, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2248); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7793) for the relief of Columbia Hospital and Dr. A. E. Boozer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2249); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the House resolution (H. Res. 228) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Peter Guttormson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2250); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8186) for the relief of John D. Chadwick, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2252); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. TRIMBLE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1928) for the relief of G. H. Sowder, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2253); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10808) for the relief of Thomas Monteith, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2254); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RHEA of Virginia, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12896) for the relief of George T. Larkin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2255); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6992) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2257); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14576) for the relief of Wells & Zerwck, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2258); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14705) to increase the pension of Lucien Bonapart Love, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14738) to divide the State of California into three judicial districts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DE ARMOND (by request): A bill (H. R. 14739) declaring the Osage River not to be a navigable stream above the point where the line between the counties of Benton and St. Clair, in the State of Missouri, crosses said river—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 14740) to increase the efficiency of the Marine Corps of the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BURLESON: A bill (H. R. 14741) for the erection of statues of Baron De Kalb and Count Pulaski—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. SNOOK: A bill (H. R. 14742) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate a national military and naval asylum for the relief of totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States," approved March 3, 1865, and all acts amendatory thereof—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SCARBOROUGH: A bill (H. R. 14760) to provide for the erection of a monument to Brig. Gen. Francis Marion—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. EDDY: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 196) empowering the State of Minnesota to file its selections for indemnity school lands upon public lands in Minnesota, otherwise undisposed of in townships, immediately upon the survey thereof in the field and prior to the approving and filing of the plat and survey thereof—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GOLDFOGLE: A resolution (H. Res. 274) asking for a statement of expenditures of Gen. Leonard Wood in the island of Cuba—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK (by request): A bill (H. R. 14743) granting a pension to William Dillon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COWHERD: A bill (H. R. 14744) granting a pension to Smith B. Nunn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDDY: A bill (H. R. 14745) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Reynolds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 14746) granting an increase of pension to Francis Riley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: A bill (H. R. 14747) granting a pension to Amanda Blackford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14748) granting an increase of pension to John Oran—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MERCER: A bill (H. R. 14749) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Heelan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14750) granting a pension to Thomas C. Kelsey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOODY of Oregon: A bill (H. R. 14751) granting an increase of pension to Regina F. Palmer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOSS: A bill (H. R. 14752) granting an increase of pension to Gibby Goodman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14753) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Martin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14754) granting an increase of pension to W. M. Houchin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14755) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen Johnson, widow of the late Capt. Oliver P. Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 14756) granting a pension to Robert P. Baker—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 14757) granting a pension to Sidney N. Lund—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WACHTER: A bill (H. R. 14758) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Talbott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14759) granting a pension to Margaret Herold—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: A resolution (H. Res. 273) to pay Rosa Nichols, mother of Charles C. Nichols, deceased, the expenses of the last illness and burial of said Charles C. Nichols in a sum not exceeding $250, and an additional sum equal to six months' pay—to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: Petition of North American Gymnastic Union of Hanover, Kans., in opposition to the passage of House bill 12199—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. CANNON: Paper to accompany House resolution to pay Rosa Nichols expense of last illness and burial of Charles C. Nichols—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. CREAMER: Resolutions of United Garment Workers and Clothing Cutters and Trimmers' Union of New York City and vicinity, in favor of the proposed increase of pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to William Dillon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DE ARMOND: Petition of citizens of St. Clair County, Mo., for legislation concerning the Osage River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to Francis Riley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCLEARY: Petitions of J. S. Redmon and others, of Minneapolis, and citizens of Bemidji, Minn., favoring the enactment of bill (H. R. 10793) forbidding railroad officials to separate passengers on account of race or color—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of E. F. Crawford and other citizens of Bemidji, Minn., favoring Senate bill 5002 and House bill 12940, designated as the "inquiry commission bill"—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of American Association of Masters and Pilots, to extend the lien for mariners' wages to the masters of vessels; to amend an act relating to injurious deposits within adjacent waters of New York City, and providing for investigation of the conduct of officers of steam vessels by jury trial—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. MERCER: Papers to accompany House bill 12722, granting a pension to Mary A. Peterson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill 1409, granting a pension to Charles A. Warrick—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PALMER: Resolutions of United Mine Workers' Union No. 1217, of Luzerne; No. 582, of Sandy Run, and No. 209, of Stockton, Pa., favoring the restriction of the immigration of cheap labor from the south and east of Europe—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Jerome B. Cassavant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNOOK: Petitions of W. S. Edwards Camp, Spanish-American War Veterans, favoring the amendment of Senate bill 1220, so as to permit said veterans to place the name and number of their camps on the American flag—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Iowa: Petition of General Bell Post, No. 332, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, favoring a bill to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the board of supervisors of Sioux County, Iowa, in favor of indemnifying the State of Iowa and the counties thereof for the swamp lands granted under the act of September 28, 1850, and disposed of by the Government after the passage of said act—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WACHTER: Paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Mary A. Talbott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG: Resolutions of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., against the passage of Senate bill 1118—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 28, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

Mr. GALLINGER called the Senate to order, and the Secretary read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., May 28, 1902.

To the Senate:

The undersigned, performing the duties of the Chair during the absence of the President pro tempore, names Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, Senator from New Hampshire, to perform said duties during Wednesday, the 28th day of May, 1902.

O. H. PLATT.

Mr. GALLINGER thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer for to-day, and directed the Secretary to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

RECESS.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Acting President pro tempore is attending a funeral in his official capacity as a pallbearer, and the Senator who has the important pending business in charge is also there, and other Senators. I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER). The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that in his opinion the Journal should first be read or its reading dispensed with.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Journal will stand approved.

Mr. HOAR. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reassembled.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Do I understand there was an agreement that there should be no morning hour to-day?

Mr. LODGE. Two Senators gave notice that they are ready to speak to-day. I do not see the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] in the Chamber at this moment, but I understood that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] is ready to go on. I should be glad, of course, to make progress with the bill. If the Senator from Wyoming has a conference report, I will yield for that.

Mr. WARREN. I have not only a conference report, but one or two other matters even more important which ought to be acted upon this morning. It will take only a few moments, of course.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield for morning business, as the Senator from Tennessee is not here, provided it does not give rise to debate.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] informs me that he will be ready to go on quickly. He has some notes that he expects in, and he says he understood that the Senator from Tennessee was to speak first.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see the Senator from Tennessee here.

Mr. WARREN. I assume that pending the arrival of the Senator from Tennessee it will be agreeable for me to proceed with morning business.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will telephone to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LODGE. It is understood that when the Senator from Tennessee returns he will take the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, and the Senator from Wyoming is recognized for morning business.

BILLS FROM COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Claims, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, and before the inquiry to make a statement.

The Committee on Claims reported certain bills early in the session, some of which passed the Senate and others were favorably reported and are now on the Calendar. Later an omnibus claims bill was made up. The omnibus bill included bills that had passed at this session and sessions heretofore.

One Senate bill (S. 173) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo and one Senate bill (S. 567) for the relief of H. B. Matteosian, after passing the Senate were favorably reported by the House and placed on the House Calendar. The members of the House Committee on Claims were informally notified of the fact that these claims were included in the omnibus bill, but for some reason it seems they overlooked the matter of Senate bill 173. Possibly the House feared that the omnibus bill would fail and therefore preferred to make sure of this one claim. Of course the Senate could offer no resistance or advice until the omnibus bill was approved. In the meantime the Foscolia bill (S. 173) was passed by the House, came back to the Senate, was signed by the Presiding Officer, and went to the President. Pending at the same time was the same matter, included in the omnibus bill. I discovered yesterday this dual condition of the Foscolia bill, and upon the signing of the omnibus bill communicated it to the White House, where the former bill is now awaiting some action.

Now, Mr. President, this arises through no fault of any member on this side of the Capitol; perhaps not on the other.

The Senate and House differ in modes of business. In the House they have one Committee on War Claims and another Committee on Claims. Furthermore, many bills which we handle at this end of the Capitol in the Committee on Claims are there handled by other committees, such as the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and others. Hence, from those four committees and from others come various bills and in great numbers to the one Committee on Claims on this side, and when we go into conference to consider an omnibus bill we meet conferees from only one committee, while the claims making up the omnibus bill come from numerous other committees.

If Senate bill 173 must be vetoed in order to dispose of it, it will come back to the Senate as a Senate bill vetoed, which would seem to indicate perhaps that the Senate was at fault. If there is any fault, it is on the other side, of course. I will ask the Chair if there is any prescribed way of withdrawing a bill thus situated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that if a concurrent resolution should be introduced, first in the Senate, and agreed to by the House of Representatives, recalling the bill from the President, it would bring the bill again before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I will prepare such a resolution and present it later on.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to suggest to the Senator that he prepare a resolution requesting the House to return to the Senate all the Senate bills which we passed and sent there and which were included in the omnibus bill.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator, and I will do so, in addition to the resolution I have just mentioned.

Mr. COCKRELL. So as to cover them all.

Mr. HOAR. They ought to be named here. We ought not to require the House to pick out and see which were in the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, let each bill be named by its number and title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest in this connection that that would properly be a separate resolution from the one recalling Senate bill 173 from the President.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be entirely different. I wish to suggest that I intended to introduce a resolution to that effect in reference to certain bills I had presented so as to prevent the possibility of their being passed and sent to the President.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, I should like to strike from the Calendar the bill (S. 918) for the relief of Alphonso M. Potvin. This claim was included in the omnibus bill. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. There are eight several bills on the Calendar under Rule VIII, commencing and running consecutively from Order of Business No. 368, being Senate bill 308, and I make the motion that they be indefinitely postponed, since they also have become laws through the approval of the omnibus claims bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be read by title.

The bills were severally read by title and postponed indefinitely, as follows:

A bill (S. 308) to reimburse the State of Wyoming for money expended by the Territory of Wyoming in protecting and preserving the Yellowstone National Park during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886;

A bill (S. 1516) for the relief of Richmond College, located at Richmond, Va.;

A bill (S. 2213) for the relief of George W. Graham;

A bill (S. 1680) for the relief of William A. Cowles, administrator of the estate of George Cowles, deceased;

A bill (S. 208) for the relief of Jeronemus S. Underhill;

A bill (S. 925) for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood;

A bill (S. 1024) for the relief of Larrabee & Allen; and

A bill (S. 172) for the relief of the estate of Charles M. Roberts, deceased.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 99) fixing the time when certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1903, shall take effect.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14018) making appropriations to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 7, 10, 12, 23, 33, 39, 42, 43, 47, 50, 57, 62, 63, 71, 73, 74, 82, 83, 85, 87, 88, 89, 95, 96, 112, 114, 117, 124, 125, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 158, 159, and 161.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 8, 11, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 26, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 44, 45, 46, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 59, 60, 61, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, 76, 77, 79, 80, 81, 86, 92, 93, 94, 100, 105, 107, 109, 113, 115, 120, 122, 123, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 132, 134, 135, 136, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 154, 155, and 157, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$165,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$300,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may exchange the present site for a new site without additional cost or expense therefor to the Government, and erect the said building thereon;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "value," in line 2 of the amendment, insert ", not exceeding $175,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 10, line 12, of the bill strike out the word "fifty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the amendment after the word "therein," in line 4 of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "United States post-office and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., from $278,881.38 to $328,881.38;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert

"United States post-office at Kalamazoo, Mich., from $78,236.74 to $128,236.74;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "from," in line 2 of the amendment, strike out the words "fifty-eight thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$71,807;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "drawn," in line 7 of the amendment, strike out the words "by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in section 5, page 25, after line 12 in the bill, the following: "United States post-office at Moberly, Mo., $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in section 5, page 25, after line 16 in the bill, the following: "United States post-office at Columbia, Mo., $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$125,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "fifty" in the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "and ten" in the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$165,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$125,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in section 5, page 25, after line 10 in the bill, the following: "United States post-office and other governmental offices at Crookston, Minn., $4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "eighty" in the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in section 1, page 4, after line 11 in the bill, the following: "United States post-office and court-house at Scranton, Pa., from $273,190.85 to $363,190.85;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert as a paragraph the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not purchase a site in either of said cities until satisfied that the price therefor will permit the execution of all the provisions of this section in each of said cities within said limit of cost for site and building, respectively."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the site selected shall consist of not less than an entire block or square of ground in said city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the site selected shall consist of not less than an entire block or square of ground in said city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following: "United States post-office and custom-house at Traverse City, Mich., $6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "United States," in line 1 of the amendment, insert the words "post-office and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the words proposed to be stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment and insert after the word "company," in line 16, page 27 of the bill, the following: ", and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia upon petition of said company to inquire into, hear, and determine the amount of the actual cost and expense to the company for the removal of its tracks from E street by reason of the provisions herein contained, and to enter judgment against the United States and the District of Columbia jointly, in such sum as may be so ascertained as aforesaid, and either party shall have the right of appeal from such judgment as in other cases;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 28, line 2 of the bill, after the word "he," insert the following: "and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia acting jointly;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

'That 'An act to provide for enlarging and improving the United States Government building at Macon, Ga., and to appropriate $58,000 therefor, approved March 2, 1899,' is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the post-office and court-house buildings at Macon, Ga., to be extended and enlarged so as to provide necessary accommodations for the post-office, courts, and other branches of the Government service, and to purchase additional ground on Third and Mulberry streets, in his discretion, for this purpose, and that the total cost of all said improvements, changes, and repairs, including the purchase price of such additional ground, shall not exceed the sum of $156,000: Provided, That the limit of cost of such additional land shall not exceed $31,000.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert "and seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$675,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment, after the word "settlements," strike out the words "is hereby appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be paid from the amount herein authorized;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in line 19, page 42, after the word "at," the following: "Honolulu and Hilo, Territory of Hawaii; Albuquerque, New Mexico; and" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 160, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment strike out the words "have prepared" and insert in lieu thereof the word "prepare;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change section 25 to section 24, and in line 1 of the amendment, after the word "constructed," insert the words ", enlarged, or extended;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change section 24 to section 25; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 164, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change section 25 to section 26; and the Senate agree to the same.

CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
F. E. WARREN,
J. L. RAWLINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

DAVID H. MERCER,
CHARLES W. GILLET,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I have a statement here which I wish to have printed in connection with the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement referred to will be printed, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Net authorization by H. R. 14018 as passed by the House	$15,820,450
Net authorization by H. R. 14018 as amended by Senate committee	$19,391,150
Net authorization by H. R. 14018 as passed by the Senate	$19,889,150
Net authorization by H. R. 14018 as reported from conference committee	$19,425,450
Number of amendments made by the Senate	164
Senate receded from	39
House concurred in	82
Amendments were	43

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

STATUE OF COUNT DE ROCHAMBEAU.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to introduce a joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent that it may now be put upon its passage. It is a resolution providing for the printing of the proceedings in regard to the unveiling of the statue of Count de Rochambeau.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will yield to morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold the introduction of the joint resolution until that order of business is reached?

Mr. HOAR. I understood that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] had yielded, but that there was no regular order of morning business to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts introduces a joint resolution, the title of which will be read.

Mr. BERRY. Has the regular morning business been received, the introduction of bills, etc.?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Irregularly that order is being executed.

Mr. BERRY. I want to know what disposition was made of the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] which was offered yesterday? I inquire whether anything has been done in regard to it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that that matter has not yet come up. The joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts will now be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 107) to provide for the printing of the proceedings at the unveiling of the statue of the Count de Rochambeau was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That there be printed and bound in the form such as is customary in the case of eulogies 20,000 copies of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of the Count de Rochambeau, of which 6,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 12,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 to be delivered to the ambassador of the Republic of France for such distribution as he shall think fit, the remaining 1,000, of which 200 shall be bound in full morocco, to be distributed, under the direction of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, to the guests invited from the French Republic and the speakers who took part in said celebration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USELESS PAPERS IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Ordnance submitting an additional list of papers not needed or useful in the transaction of public business and having no permanent value or interest; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Destruction of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed.

THE GATHMANN GUN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting further information from the president of the Gathmann Torpedo Gun Company in connection with the report of the joint board of officers of the Army and Navy appointed to make comparative tests between the Gathmann torpedo gun and the 12-inch Army service rifle, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, certain information relative to quarters rented by the War Department, giving the location, area of floor space occupied, and the annual rental thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, certain information relative to quarters rented by the Department of Justice, giving the location, area of floor space occupied, and the annual rental thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless objection be raised, the Chair will receive routine morning business, beginning with petitions and memorials.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Indians of the Cherokee Nation, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the allotment of their lands; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of E. E. Sturtevant Post, No. 2, Department of New Hampshire, Grand Army of the Republic, of Concord, N. H., and a petition of John G. Foster Post, No. 7, Department of New Hampshire, Grand Army of the Republic, of Nashua, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men in the Army and Navy of the United States when 50 years of age and over, and to increase the pensions of widows of soldiers to $12 per month; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the board of aldermen of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the compensation of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Associated Board of Trade of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men of the Life-Saving Service, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RAWLINS presented a petition of sundry oil-land owners of Price, Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the manner of location of and doing annual or assessment work or labor upon placer locations for oil and hydrocarbons; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE presented a petition of Local Union No. 140, Amalgamated Wood Workers' International Union, of Shelbyville, Ind., praying for the repeal of the duty on beef, veal, mutton, and pork; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Harrow Post, No. 491, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, of Mount Vernon, Ind., praying for the passage of a per diem service pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by a mass meeting of sundry miners of Clinton, Ind., favoring the enactment of legislation limiting the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Prospect Lodge, No. 162, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Elkhart, and of Ashley Lodge, No. 586, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Ashley, in the State of Indiana, praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Charles Billings Lodge, No. 262, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Michigan City, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 949) for the relief of Charles H. Robinson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 621) for the relief of Daniel Cherry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3508) granting an increase of pension to James M. Thomas, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TURNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3493) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Rose, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13278) granting an increase of pension to Levi H. Collins, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5094) for the relief of the persons who sustained damage by the explosion of an ammunition chest of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, July 16, 1894;

A bill (H. R. 2494) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department;

A bill (H. R. 8769) for the relief of S. J. Bayard Schindel; and

A bill (H. R. 10279) to pay the claim of Stephen B. Halsey.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5140) granting an increase of pension to Dudley Cary, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5719) granting an increase of pension to Sidney V. Lund; and

A bill (S. 4709) granting a pension to Nelson W. Wade.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1980) granting a pension to William D. Stites, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BARD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5212) granting to the State of California 640 acres of land in lieu of section 16, township 7 south, range 8 east, San Bernardino meridian, State of California, now occupied by the Torres band or village of Mission Indians, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SIMON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5774) granting a pension to Asa E. Sampson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7079) granting an increase of pension to Franklin Snyder; and

A bill (H. R. 12420) granting a pension to Wesley Brummett.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7687) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Washburn, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5186) granting a pension to John Conter;

A bill (H. R. 5273) granting an increase of pension to James Van Zant;

A bill (H. R. 6080) granting an increase of pension to William G. De Garis; and

A bill (H. R. 10752) granting a pension to Harriet T. Milburn.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4623) granting an increase of pension to Lewis F. Ross, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 13450) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hunt;

A bill (H. R. 14241) granting an increase of pension to Peter Dugan;

A bill (H. R. 14146) granting an increase of pension to John Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 14184) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Fogg;

A bill (H. R. 11252) granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Gowdey;

A bill (H. R. 11052) granting a pension to Nelson Johnson; and

A bill (H. R. 2430) granting a pension to Lizana D. Streeter.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5836) granting an increase of pension to Jessie Nesbit Smith, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. BURTON), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5045) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Moore, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

JOHN JACKSON.

Mr. TALIAFERRO, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 1125) entitled "A bill for the relief of John Jackson," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

USE OF PUBLIC PRINTING BUILDING.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14189) to permit the occupancy of the public printing building by the Grand Army of the Republic, to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Public Printer and the engineer officer in charge of the construction of the new public printing office building to permit duly accredited members of the Grand Army of the Republic to occupy the new public printing office building for sleeping purposes only from the 5th day of October, 1902, to the 13th day of October, 1902, both days inclusive; the officers of the Grand Army of the Republic or members thereof to furnish the same for sleeping purposes only at their own expense and properly police and protect the same and leave the building in as perfect state of cleanliness and repair as when they took it; the occupancy to be under the control and supervision of the Public Printer and the engineer officer in charge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 6007) for the relief of the heirs at law of Isaac Johnson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HEITFELD introduced a bill (S. 6008) granting an increase of pension to David Vickers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RAWLINS introduced a bill (S. 6009) granting a pension to Philander C. Burch; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 6010) for the relief of the estate of Jacob Lyons, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (S. 6011) for the relief of Nye & Schneider Company; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6012) granting a pension to Hattie Blanche Sears; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 6013) for the relief of the Atlantic Works; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced a bill (S. 6014) for the relief of B. S. Johnson, administrator of the estate of Jacob Johnson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 6015) granting an increase of pension to Clara M. Gihon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PETTUS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $14,443.93 to pay the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company a balance for transportation, as ascertained by the findings of the Court of Claims, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments, and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS M. CHARLES.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate in connection with a bill (S. 215, first session Fifty-sixth Congress) for the relief of Francis M. Charles be withdrawn in accordance with clause 1, Rule XXX, of the rules of the Senate.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I yielded for the introduction of morning business, which I understand is now concluded. I therefore ask that the consideration of the unfinished business, which was temporarily laid aside, may be resumed.

Mr. WELLINGTON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will yield to me for a moment, I desire to say that I yesterday made a motion which involves a question before the Senate, and I ask that that motion may now go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HOAR. I wish to move an amendment to that motion. I wish to speak on it at length, and it will be impossible to do so in the morning hour, as it is a subject that ought to be fully dealt with. I should like to have my amendment read now, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Then I think the matter should take the ordinary course.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I understand the motion yesterday submitted by me would properly come up to-day. However, I do not want to interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Maryland that the matter go over until to-morrow, retaining the same place it had to-day, because I do not think it is fair that the recess, which has been taken for the grave reason which we all understand, should affect the right of any Senator in regard to business. I shall not, however, be willing to have the matter disposed of to-morrow or at any time in a brief morning hour. I wish to discuss it with thoroughness. I should like to have the amendment I proposed read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. May I ask whether the Senator from Massachusetts will be content to have his proposed amendment now read and printed, and then let the matter go over on the motion of the Senator from Maryland without prejudice until to-morrow morning?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, that it go over without prejudice until to-morrow morning; but I shall insist on having time for a full discussion of the matter whenever it is taken up.

Mr. WELLINGTON. That will be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to report to the Senate its opinion upon House joint resolution 41, and, further, to report an amendment to said resolution to be incorporated therewith, if it should be adopted by the Senate, providing that Congress shall make all suitable regulations for the election of Senators, including such laws as shall provide for a full and free vote and an honest ascertainment of the result; and that such elections shall be held under national authority, and also that the qualifications for voting at such elections shall be prescribed by Congress; and, further, that the committee report to the Senate its opinion as to the propriety of so amending said resolution, if it shall be enacted; and, further, its opinion as to the wisdom of passing said resolve so amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion of the Senator from Maryland and the proposed substitute will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts again read.

Mr. LODGE. It has just been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks that the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts be again read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution proposed by Mr. HOAR as a substitute for the motion of Mr. WELLINGTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Maryland and the proposed substitute for it will go over.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I now ask that the unfinished business, which was temporarily laid aside, may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I desire to move, on behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Philippines, the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk, in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment has already been read and printed, I think. Does the Senator want in read again?

Mr. RAWLINS. It is substantially the same, with a slight change in it, as the amendment heretofore offered.

Mr. LODGE. Let the proposed amendment be printed in the RECORD as now offered.

Mr. RAWLINS. Very well; let it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] will be printed in the RECORD.

The proposed amendment is as follows:

Amendment, in the nature of a substitute, proposed by Mr. RAWLINS, on behalf of the minority, to the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 2. That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a government, and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain and for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under the authority thereof, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That ninety days after the President of the United States shall have proclaimed that all armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago the United States Philippine Commission shall make and promulgate rules and regulations for the holding of an election in the provinces of said archipelago for members of a convention, which convention when organized shall proceed to the adoption of a constitution for the government of said archipelago. That all male inhabitants of said archipelago 21 years of age and over who speak and write either the English or Spanish languages or any of the native languages of the said archipelago, and who shall have resided therein for one year, shall be qualified to vote for members of the convention, and any person so qualified as an elector shall be qualified to become a member of said convention. The members of the said convention shall number 300, and shall be apportioned by the United States Philippine Commission among the several provinces of said archipelago so that the distribution shall be in proportion to their population as near as may be; and when the said apportionment has been determined upon, the said Commission shall by proclamation order an election of the members for said convention, to be held throughout the said archipelago at such time as shall be fixed by the said Commission, which election shall be held not more than one year from the date of the proclamation by the President of the United States hereinbefore provided for, and ample time shall be given before said election to circulate said proclamation throughout said archipelago and arrange for the holding of the said election.

SEC. 4. That the members of the convention thus elected shall meet at the city of Manila on a day to be fixed by the said United States Philippine Commission not more than ninety days subsequent to the day of election, the time for which meeting shall be stated in the proclamation calling attention to the election aforesaid; and after organization the said convention shall proceed to form a constitution and organize such government as they may deem best adapted to promote the welfare and secure the peace and happiness of the inhabitants of said islands: Provided, That said convention shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States:

First. That there shall belong to the United States and continue to be the property thereof such lands and waters as the President of the United States shall designate to the said convention, and agreed to by it, for naval, military, and coaling stations and terminal facilities for submarine cables, the same to continue under the control and sovereignty of the United States.

Second. To carry into effect the treaty obligations of the United States with the Kingdom of Spain, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights and property acquired under the authority of the United States.

Third. That no inhabitant of said archipelago shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her adherence to the United States.

SEC. 5. That when the constitution and government s..all be formed for and by the people of said archipelago in compliance with the provisions of this act, the said United States Philippine Commission shall certify the fact to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said constitution and ordinances, whereupon it shall be the duty of the President to issue his proclamation declaring the independence of the people of said archipelago, and that they constitute an independent state and nation.

SEC. 6. That the President of the United States is hereby requested to negotiate an agreement between the United States, the said Philippine Archipelago, and Great Britain, Germany, France, and such other powers as he may deem best, providing for its perpetual neutrality and inviolability from all foreign interference, and also for equal opportunities of trade to foreign countries with said archipelago.

SEC. 7. That immediately after the President shall have proclaimed that all armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago, he is requested to proclaim full amnesty to all the inhabitants thereof for or on account of political offenses and the bearing of arms against the United States, and all Filipinos or inhabitants of said archipelago who have been deported shall be returned to the place from whence they were so deported: Provided, That such amnesty shall not apply to any who have violated the rules of civilized warfare or were guilty of murder or torture. That the latter, if any, shall be afforded a speedy trial for their offenses in the civil courts of said archipelago and be punished or acquitted, as the facts and law may warrant.

SEC. 8. That within sixty days from the election of officers under the constitution to be formed by the said Philippine Archipelago and the inauguration of said officers the President shall cause the armed forces of the United States to be withdrawn from said archipelago as speedily as may be, except such forces as may be maintained in such parts thereof as have been retained by the United States for naval, military, and coaling stations and terminal facilities for cables; and the President of the United States and the Secretary of War shall make all needful regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to promote the welfare and establish the independence of the Philippine Islands."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me for a moment, when this bill was first reported to the Senate I presented a number of amendments of various provisions of the bill reported by the majority. I did this because in criticisms which I made of the bill, if the amendments which I suggested and which I presented to the Senate for consideration had been adopted, several of the criticisms and objections which I made to the bill would have been obviated.

I simply rise now to state that as those amendments were designed to perfect the bill, and as they do not involve a difference in the matter of principle or policy particularly between the majority and the minority, and, as I well know that none of those amendments can be adopted unless they be accepted by the majority of the Committee on the Philippines, I simply desire to state that I shall not press any of those amendments. I proposed them, in fact, merely as suggestions for the consideration of the committee. If they had been accepted by the majority of the committee that would have obviated a number of the criticisms which I made upon the bill, especially upon those provisions relating to the judiciary. It seemed to me that the regulation of appeals and the jurisdiction of the courts mentioned in the bill are very inadequate and imperfect; and the amendments which I offered were, in my opinion, designed to cure those imperfections. I simply now invite attention to them merely for the purpose of having them considered, if so desired, by the majority of the committee. If they do not see fit to accept them I shall not move their adoption.

The amendment which I have now presented on behalf of the minority of the committee is the only proposition that is presented by the minority of the committee which involves the question of principle or policy upon which we differ in relation to this great question.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope that Senators on the other side are now ready to continue the debate, as I am naturally very anxious to go on with the general debate and finish it at the earliest moment. I would ask the Senator from Utah if any Senator on that side is now ready to proceed with the debate?

Mr. RAWLINS. There is no one on this side at present ready to proceed with the debate.

Mr. LODGE. If no one is ready to proceed with the debate, I ask that an agreement may be made as to the time for taking a vote.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before that is done, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines if he is prepared to give us some idea about the scope of the inquiry now being conducted by the Committee on the Philippines and when that inquiry will be closed?

Mr. LODGE. On that point I can give only my personal opinion. There has been no vote taken by the committee; but I have supposed from the list now in my hands of witnesses whom the committee has voted to call that the inquiry would continue as long as the Senate was in session.

Mr. CULBERSON. Unaffected by the disposition of the government bill?

Mr. LODGE. Entirely unaffected by the disposition of the bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. What suggestion has the Senator to make as to a time for a vote?

Mr. LODGE. Yesterday when we were discussing this matter Tuesday was spoken of. I shall be glad if we can agree to take a vote on the bill and pending amendments at 4 o'clock on Tuesday next.

Mr. RAWLINS. What doos the Senator say in regard to debate upon the amendments?

Mr. LODGE. My idea, as I said yesterday when we were discussing this matter, is that one day should be given to half-hour debate, and the next day, the day on which we vote, to fifteen-minute debate, for the purpose of considering amendments and giving opportunity to Senators who wish to address themselves to particular features of the bill to do so. I am not at all set on any arrangement of that kind.

Mr. RAWLINS. The general debate to close Saturday?

Mr. LODGE. Saturday of this week.

Mr. RAWLINS. If it be desired, would there be any objection to devoting the entire time from now until Saturday to the consideration of this bill, provided Senators should desire to occupy the time?

Mr. LODGE. From now until Saturday?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Devote the entire time?

Mr. RAWLINS. With the exception of Friday.

Mr. LODGE. That would be my understanding, of course.

Mr. BERRY. Not to interfere with conference reports.

Mr. LODGE. Conference reports are privileged. With that exception I hope the agreement would cover an understanding that all the time should be given to this bill——

Mr. ALDRICH. If required?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if required. I trust no objection will be made to the request.

Mr. RAWLINS. And, if required, that we meet at 11 o'clock?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. So far as I know, there is no objection to the proposition.

Mr. CARMACK. What am I to understand—that the general debate is to close on Saturday?

Mr. LODGE. That was the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, to which I am happy to agree, if he prefers it.

Mr. CARMACK. I understand that there will be fifteen-minute speeches——

Mr. LODGE. On Tuesday; and a half-hour limit on Monday.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee why we can not now take up these amendments, to which I am inclined to think the committee are going to agree, and dispose of them?

Mr. LODGE. This afternoon?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I should be very glad to do it. I want to offer some amendments about which I have not consulted the majority of the committee; some I am sure the committee will agree to, and I can offer those this afternoon.

Mr. TELLER. From what the chairman said I suppose some of them are practically formal; for instance, reducing the quantity of land from 160 to 40 acres.

Mr. LODGE. That is one.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to see those disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. I will dispose of those this afternoon. I do not suppose there is any opposition to them.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will do that.

Mr. LODGE. I will.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere in any way, but to facilitate the final vote upon this bill. However, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts in charge of the bill that there ought to be two full days for the consideration of amendments.

Mr. LODGE. That was my offer.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the Senator to propose a vote at 4 o'clock. Now, I know there are some amendments which ought to be considered by the committee that have not been considered, and I think they would be agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In committee meeting?

Mr. ALLISON. In committee; and I think that would facilitate the final action as respects the bill.

Now, I should like the Senator to allow certain amendments to be debated briefly—not a half hour. I would suggest, unless there is some special reason for a half hour on Monday, that it be made a shorter debate—a fifteen-minute debate.

Mr. LODGE. The suggestion of the Senator from Iowa is that we apply the fifteen-minute rule on Monday and Tuesday for the consideration of amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that would be better.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. TELLER. I believe that would be better.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CARMACK. How is that—a half-hour debate on Monday?

Mr. BERRY. No; fifteen-minute debate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. RAWLINS. Fifteen minutes instead of a half hour.

Mr. ALLISON. I also suggest to the Senator that we meet at 11 o'clock on Saturday.

Mr. LODGE. And that we meet at 11 o'clock on both of those days.

Mr. ALDRICH. And on Saturday?

Mr. LODGE. And on Saturday.

Mr. DUBOIS. And on Thursday.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, then; if I may restate the request, it is that we meet on Thursday, Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday at 11 o'clock; that general debate close on Saturday——

Mr. CULLOM. That we shall adjourn over Friday.

Mr. LODGE. I said Thursday, Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday.

Mr. CULLOM. I know the Senator did, but he did not say there would be no session on Friday.

Mr. LODGE. It is understood we are not to sit on Friday. The request is that the Senate meet on Thursday, Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday at 11 o'clock; that the general debate close on Saturday; that on Monday and Tuesday the debate shall be under the fifteen-minute rule, and that the vote be taken on the bill and all pending amendments offered or to be offered on Tuesday at 4 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. Without further debate.

Mr. LODGE. Without further debate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, there is not a Senator on this floor, I believe, who wishes to shorten this session and to shorten the debate on the grave subjects that are left, including this one, as much as I do. I am staying here now at some personal inconvenience on account of this particular measure. But it seems to me there are two things we ought to understand, if we can, before unanimous consent is given. Of course with respect to no bill can you tell what the Senate will do with amendments that may be proposed, and you can not help the bringing in at a late hour of amendments that are of a good deal of importance. You have to run the risk of dealing with them briefly. But I think we ought to know the attitude of the two sides. We ought to know in general in what shape the majority of the committee wish to leave the bill to be presented to the Senate to vote on, or to have such modifications as they have determined to make proposed now before we agree to fixing a time for a vote. Then we ought to have what I understand we have just got, the final proposition of the minority in general, so far as they are at present advised, as to how they wish to leave the substitute which they propose. We ought not to cut off general debate on those two measures, the main scheme of each side, by an agreement of this kind until we know that.

That is one consideration, and the other is this: I should like to know when my honorable friend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is expected to speak. The announcement was that he was to speak at length on Monday.

Mr. LODGE. It was generally supposed that the Senator from Wisconsin would speak to-morrow. The Senator from Wisconsin, I know, will not allow any speech of his to stand in the way of getting an agreement for a vote on this bill, and I am authorized to say that for him.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody on this floor would desire to lose the pleasure of hearing any contribution which the Senator from Wisconsin might make to any debate, I believe. Certainly I would not. But it may be that the very able and interesting Senator may say something in his speech to reply to which will require a little more than fifteen minutes. Indeed, the proposition is that the fifteen minutes' debate is to be devoted to amendments. I should like to know, if I may, what the present plan is as to the time when the Senator from Wisconsin will speak.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wisconsin stated yesterday, it then being supposed that Senators on the other side would wish to occupy to-day, that he would go on Thursday morning.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. That is all right so far as that is concerned.

Mr. LODGE. If we have to wait and hear what may be the reply to the Senator from Wisconsin and then the reply to that, of course an agreement is out of the question.

Mr. HOAR. I say it is settled by my colleague's announcement that he expects to speak to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. He expects to speak to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. He does not expect, in other words, to have the general debate terminate the moment his speech does?

Mr. LODGE. On the contrary, we are to meet on Saturday, and there will be ample opportunity for that.

Mr. HOAR. That is all right. My question was put because the announcement was made yesterday that the Senator from Wisconsin would speak on Monday.

Now, in regard to the other matter. I do not speak of detail or of such things as may occur to anybody, but I should like to know, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said he would like to know, whether the majority of the committee will be prepared pretty soon or are prepared to-day to make known, for the information of the Senate, the amendments to the bill which they have already determined upon, so that they will not come in at the last moment.

Mr. LODGE. We stand on the bill, in a general way, substantially as it is. The amendments go to questions of detail, just as the minority bill represents, in a general way, the views of the minority. The general views of the two sides of the committee are presented in those two measures. The modifications which the committee will propose are modifications of detail, like the reduction made in the amount of land of which the Senator from Colorado spoke.

Mr. HOAR. Not involving the assertion of any general principle of authority or policy?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know at this time of any intention on the part of the majority to make any general change in the general features of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the senior Senator from Massachusetts will not require the committee to say in advance what amendments they propose to offer.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator did not listen to my statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I listened to the statement——

Mr. HOAR. Let me repeat it, and then we will see whether or not the Senator wishes to criticise it. I said I thought so far as the committee had agreed on any amendment to the bill they should now make known the purpose to move the amendment, not referring, however, to amendments of details. I said I did not expect that they would be precluded if any new view came to them hereafter from suggesting it. In other words, I said we ought to have before the Senate now, if we can, before we commit ourselves, an understanding of the general policy proposed by the two sides. That is all I say. Now, if there is anything in that which does not suit the Senator from Iowa, I am sorry.

Mr. ALLISON. It suits me very well. But I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say we were to offer no amendments affecting any principle.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that. I said "general principles."

Mr. ALLISON. Then I mistook the statement.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator did. I ought to say that I am entirely contented with my colleague's statement on that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will make no further observations.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair to submit the proposition for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will undertake to submit the proposition. It is that the Senate shall meet on Thursday and Saturday of the present week, and Monday and Tuesday of next week, at 11 o'clock; that the general debate on the pending bill shall close on Saturday; that the debate on Monday and Tuesday shall be under the fifteen-minute rule, and that the vote on the bill and amendments pending and to be offered shall be taken at 4 o'clock on Tuesday, without further debate.

Mr. RAWLINS. One other suggestion is made that the entire time on the days mentioned be devoted to the bill.

Mr. BERRY. Not to interfere with conference reports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts include that?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts includes the condition that the entire time on the four days named shall be devoted to the bill, not, however, to interfere with conference reports.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose nobody wants to talk?

Mr. TELLER. I wish to include in that an arrangement as to the disposition of the time when the fifteen-minute rule shall be in operation. I do not want to say that it should be divided between the parties, but I wish to have it provided that the Chair shall not make a list of Senators, but that Senators shall take their chance, according to the old custom of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I think the time ought to be equally divided, as we did before.

Mr. TELLER. I am quite willing to leave it to the Chair, if there is no list.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want a list of Senators, so that when a Senator rises the Chair looks over at some other Senator in his seat and recognizes him instead of recognizing the Senator who is on the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator from Colorado is entirely right. I agree with him entirely.

Mr. TELLER. If we can have the old method which prevailed in the Senate, when Senators took the chance of obtaining recognition by the Chair, I am content to have the time evenly divided or equitably divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I now——

Mr. HOAR. Before the matter of the amendments is taken up, I ask leave to occupy two or three minutes of the time of the Senate.

In addressing the Senate the other day on this bill, Mr. President, I stated, I think in a discussion with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], but of that I will not be sure, for I have not looked at the RECORD to see, the circumstances which attended the making known to the people of the Philippine Islands of the original proclamation of President McKinley, which General Otis altered in what I deem a very material fashion. The effect of that proclamation, in my judgment, was to bring on this war. It was, in my judgment, a declaration of war between the two people as nations.

I stated that while General Otis saw that the various phrases—"sovereignty" and "submission" and so on—used by the President would tend to bring on war, and for that reason took the liberty of suppressing them, General Miller, at Iloilo, received the proclamation and was eager or desirous for a fight, and that he made the proclamation known, and that Aguinaldo received it as a declaration of war and instantly issued his proclamation that if that were insisted upon he and his people would fight.

I made the statement as to General Miller's purpose on the authority of reports which I have not had time to look up, but as to which my recollection is pretty distinct and which I will look up and bring to the attention of the Senate a little later, and upon the authority of letters from General Miller to his commanding officer, urging that he be permitted to attack Iloilo at once, on the ground that the strength of the men whom he called the insurgents was constantly increasing, and that the sooner that capture was made the easier and better.

I have received a letter from General Miller, and I desire that it shall be read. I have not the least question of General Miller's absolute sincerity in this letter, and that his feeling was exactly what he states. I should like to have the letter read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

2110 R STREET NW., WASHINGTON, D. C., May 27, 1902.

Hon. Senator HOAR.

DEAR SIR: I have just read in the New York Tribune certain remarks reported to have been made by you yesterday in Philippine debate, in which you used my name as follows: "But General Miller, who notoriously did want an attack, produced it and Aguinaldo met it with an instant, speedy defiance." Now, dear Senator, as to my wanting to fight, and to the implied motive that I, for that reason, produced the President's proclamation, you were entirely in error. Both proclamations came to me from General Otis in the same mail, and my adjutant-general had copies of both printed in Spanish and distributed merely as a matter of routine according to orders, General Otis not having informed me that he did not want the proclamation of the President issued.

As to wanting to fight, you must have been misinformed, as it was equally notorious at Iloilo that I made every endeavor with the leaders of the insurgents to accept the sovereignty of the United States peaceably, telling them evidently we had been thrown together this way through no intentions of our own, but by those of Divine providence. We ought not fight each other about it; advised them that they should accept the sovereignty of the United States, and that later the Congress of the United States would grant them all conditions nearly that they could desire, as set forth in the President's proclamation; if one Congress did not grant them to try the next, and the next, that finally their reasonable desires would be granted. I was on most agreeable social relations with all the leaders and all the people whom I met and repeatedly said to them that my Government would greatly regret the necessity of appealing to arms and the shedding of one drop of blood between our peoples. They knew I was in earnest and agreed to all I said, always ending, "We must abide by the orders from the central government."

Later, when I saw ships being loaded with hemp and sugar and they collecting customs I advised taking the city to stop that.

Yours, respectfully,

M. P. MILLER,
Brigadier-General, United States Army.

Mr. HOAR. That is evidently the letter of a sincere and honest gentleman. Nobody can read it or hear it without being satisfied that whatever General Miller says he did or thought is exactly what he did or thought. I wish to make that very plain. And yet it is clear that, although General Miller's motive for desiring to resort to arms then, if it were necessary, was not to prevent the Filipinos from getting their independence, but, on the contrary, he urged them to trust Congress, and if one Congress did not give them what they wanted to try again and again until they got it. He evidently seemed to think that what he calls the justice of Congress would do just what I think the justice of Congress will do some of these days. And so, unquestionably, he must be absolutely acquitted of any suggestion that he published this original order for the purpose of bringing on hostilities, and I wish, if I have said anything inconsistent with that, absolutely to withdraw and disclaim it.

Yet it is still true that General Miller desired, unless the Filipino people submitted, to have the attack made then. He said he wanted to stop them from introducing cargoes and collecting customs at Iloilo, which was their capital city, as they regarded it. He wanted it at once stopped, and, unless I am mistaken in my memory, he said also in his letter, which is in the report of the War Department, that he thought we had better make the attack then, because the rebels, as he called them, or the insurgents, the resisting power, were becoming stronger and stronger every day. So I can not see that there is any doubt that General Miller wanted the fight to begin unless Aguinaldo and his people submitted, although I am absolutely satisfied that he did not publish this proclamation with any such purpose or design.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to amend the bill in section 10, on page 6, line 23, after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-eight," by a formal amendment simply covering military property. I move to insert:

Except such land or other property as shall be designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 12, on page 7, line 19, I move to strike out "one hundred and sixty" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Not exceeding 40 acres, or its equivalent in hectares.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 12, on page 8, line 4, I move the same amendment, striking out the words "one hundred and sixty" and inserting "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 16, page 8, section 13, I move the same amendment, striking out "one hundred and sixty" and inserting "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 14, on page 9, line 4, I move the same amendment, striking out the words "one hundred and sixty" and inserting "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 68, on page 41, line 23, after the word "President," I move to insert the words "and the Congress;" so as to read:

With the consent and approval of the President and the Congress of the United States.

That is to limit the issuance of municipal bonds by municipalities outside of Manila.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 2, page 42, section 68, after the words "par value" and before the bracket, I move to insert:

in gold coin of the United States.

That corresponds with the other provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 72, on page 43, line 19, after the words "par value" and before the bracket, I move the same amendment, inserting the words "in gold coin of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Those are all the amendments I have to offer in behalf of the committee at the present time. There are one or two others that the majority of the committee are considering.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee for just a moment to the fact that those are amendments I had proposed in the amendment I offered the other night, but in addition I had proposed to strike out all of section 13 after the word "person," in the seventeenth line, striking out these words:

nor more than 5,000 acres to any corporation or association of persons.

Mr. LODGE. That is the limitation on corporation holdings?

Mr. TELLER. Yes. What does the Senator say about it?

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator that the question of the amount of land that corporations can hold is being considered by the majority members of the committee. I can not tell him yet what decision they will reach.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will agree to strike out that clause. I regard it as an exceedingly dangerous and objectionable feature in the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it the Senator's proposition to strike out all of section 13?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no; but to strike out in section 13 the words "nor more than 5,000 acres to any corporation or association of persons." I want to get that clause out, and then if it is necessary to offer an amendment which shall prevent them from granting anything to corporations I should like to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I did not intend to participate in the general debate upon this bill, but to content myself with the opportunity that would be afforded under the fifteen-minute limit of debate. However, as no Senator on the other side desires to proceed this afternoon, I will husband the time which I intended to take by making some observations now upon the pending measure. What I have to say will be confined to the measure under consideration and nothing else, for nothing else, to my mind, is important.

Mr. President, we have come at last to the parting of the ways. After journeying in this Philippine matter now for more than four years, the time has come when we must determine our future course. If there is to be a change it can not be decided upon too soon. If the present course is to be persisted in, it can not be too clearly pointed out or definitely understood. And after having chosen our course, whatever it may be, it is important that we pursue it with stability and without questioning.

The Committee on the Philippines present to the Senate two propositions, the bill of the majority and the substitute of the minority. These two propositions fairly represent the divergent views of the committee, and I presume of the country, as to the future government of the Philippine Islands, and we are called upon to determine which course shall be taken. It is important, therefore, at the outset to clearly understand the two proposed policies and the direction in which they lead.

The bill of the majority, in general terms, looks to the temporary, if not the permanent, occupation by the United States of the Philippine Archipelago. It proposes to establish therein what is denominated in the bill "A civil government for the Philippine Islands," under and by virtue of American sovereignty. The leading features of the bill are as follows:

There is to be appointed for the "government of the Philippine Islands" a governor, vice-governor, members of the Commission, the heads of executive departments, a chief justice of the supreme court and associate justices, all to be selected by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; a census of the inhabitants of the islands is to be taken at an early day, which shall embrace all needful information as to the conditions, character, and attainments of the people, the result of which shall be reported to the President of the United States; the Commission shall also report, in connection with the returns of such census, whether all or any portion of the Philippine people are "capable, fit, and ready for the establishment of permanent popular representative government;" additional municipal and provincial governments are to be established "with popular representative government" so far and as rapidly as "communities in such civil divisions are capable, fit, and ready for the same."

The Government is authorized to "improve the harbors and navigable waters of the archipelago;" construct and maintain "warehouses, light-houses, signal stations, and like instruments of commerce;" all "property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain are placed under control of the government of the Philippine Islands," to be administered for the benefit of their inhabitants.

The "government of the Philippine Islands" is also authorized to make rules for the leasing, sale, and disposition of public lands, "other than the timber or mineral lands," but such regulations shall not go into effect or have the force of law "until they receive the approval of the President of the United States, by and through the Secretary of War," and they shall also be submitted to Congress for amendment or disapproval; the government is authorized to make rules and regulations prescribing the terms and conditions to enable persons to perfect their title to public lands, not exceeding 160 acres, who, prior to the transfer of sovereignty, from Spain to the United States, had fulfilled all or some of the conditions required by Spanish laws, and the President of the United States is authorized to issue patents therefor; the government is authorized to lease, let, and demise to "actual occupants and settlers and others," for a term of not more than five years, such parts and portions of the public domain, not exceeding 160 acres, other than timber and mineral lands, as may be deemed wise; in the leasing, demising, or letting of any part of the public domain preference shall be given to actual occupants and settlers, and "all moneys obtained from such leasing shall be covered into the insular treasury, to be used only for insular purposes;" no timber, trees, forests, or forest products on lands leased or demised "shall be cut, destroyed, removed, or appropriated, except by special permission of said government."

No timber lands forming a part of the public domain shall be sold or leased, but said government shall have the right and is empowered to issue licenses to cut timber under forestry regulations of the islands.

It is further provided that in all cases public lands in the islands valuable for minerals shall be reserved from sale except as otherwise expressly directed; but all valuable mineral deposits in public lands "are free and open to exploration and purchase, and the land in which they are found to occupation and purchase by citizens of the United States, natives of the Philippine Islands, and persons who have, under and by virtue of the treaty of Paris, acquired the political rights of natives of the islands," and the laws and regulations touching mineral lands shall conform, so far as applicable, to the general laws of the United States on that subject; and land districts and a mining bureau are to be established in the islands.

The government of the Philippine Islands is also authorized "to acquire, receive, hold, maintain, and convey title to real and personal property, and may acquire real estate for public uses by the exercise of the right of eminent domain;" and under this provision it is expressly empowered to acquire such lands, easements, and appurtenances as on the 13th day of August, 1898, were owned or held by associations, corporations, communities, religious orders, or private individuals in such large tracts or parcels as in the opinion of the Commission injuriously affect the welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands;" and to provide the necessary funds for the purchase of such lands the government of the Philippine Islands is empowered to borrow money and issue bonds therefor upon the usual terms and conditions; and the lands so acquired shall constitute a part of the public property of the "government of the Philippine Islands," and may be disposed of by such government on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, the proceeds to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of principal and interest.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission—he seems to be reading the bill from beginning to end, going through the different sections—the section he is on now, if I remember correctly, authorizes the Philippine Commission to permit the municipality of the city of Manila to issue $4,000,000 of bonds and any other city or town to issue bonds, and those bonds are to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent, payable semiannually. The bill further provides that these bonds are nontaxable by the Government of the United States; and it also provides that the bonds issued by the city of Manila and the other cities in the Philippine Islands are nontaxable by any State in this Union, or by any municipality. Now, as I understand it, if the city of Manila shall issue $4,000,000 of bonds and some syndicate in Georgia or the Senator's State or New York were to buy those bonds, they would be nontaxable by the city of New York or any municipality or State where they were held. I desire to ask the Senator if he can point to a single instance where the Government of the United States has ever authorized a city or town within any of its territory to issue bonds that are nontaxable by another State or another municipality?

Mr. BURROWS. I will say in reply to the Senator from Georgia that the provisions to which he refers are not contained in the section which I was reading.

Mr. CLAY. It is in section 72, I think, or section 76.

Mr. BURROWS. It is in a section to which I shall refer in a few moments. The section I was reading is the one which authorizes the acquirement of lands belonging to religious orders and corporations and the issuing of bonds for the purpose of raising the necessary funds to provide for their purchase.

The Supreme Court of the United States is given jurisdiction in certain important cases with power to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands.

Section 68 is the one to which the Senator from Georgia called my attention, and is as follows:

> That for the purpose of providing funds to construct sewers, to furnish adequate sewer and drainage facilities, to secure a sufficient supply of water, and to provide all kinds of municipal betterments and improvements in municipalities, the government of the Philippine Islands, under such limitations, terms, and conditions as it may prescribe, with the consent and approval of the President of the United States, may permit any municipality of said islands to incur indebtedness, borrow money, etc.

Mr. CLAY. And if the Senator will read further he will find that they are nontaxable by a State or municipality.

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly; I am aware of that provision, but I am not stopping to discuss the merits of the several provisions of the measure, my only purpose being to show what the bill is, and in what manner and to what extent it asserts the sovereignty of the United States.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator if he thinks that Congress ought to authorize any city in its territory to issue city bonds that can not be taxed by any city or State in the Union where they are held. I grant you that when we issue Government bonds, they are nontaxable by the States or by any city in a State; but when Congress authorizes a city to issue bonds, does the Senator think Congress ought to provide that a syndicate owning those bonds in any State or municipality shall not be taxed?

Mr. BURROWS. Now the Senator is discussing the merits of the proposition. I am not doing that now. My purpose, as I said before, is simply to show the scope of the bill. When we come to the fifteen-minute debate, if the question made by the Senator comes up, it will then be proper to consider that question and I will be pleased to discuss it with the Senator.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator permit me a moment? If it will not disturb him I should like to ask my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] whether as a matter of law these bonds, issued pursuant to Federal authority under that section, do not become in some sense a Federal instrumentality to carry out a Federal policy, as much so as though they had the great seal of the United States upon them? If that is so, Mr. President, then the same principle by which a United States bond would be made nontaxable would apply to this issue of bonds.

Mr. CLAY. Now, when the Government——

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. CLAY. Certainly, with pleasure. I started to answer the question.

Mr. BURROWS. This debate is exceedingly interesting, but I do not wish to be diverted from the one purpose I had in view at this time, a succinct statement of the leading features of the committee's bill. The merits or demerits of these provisions I do not now propose to discuss.

Mr. CLAY. I want it to appear, then, that the Senator declined to yield. I do not want it to appear that the Senator from Wisconsin asked me a question and I refused to answer it. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BURROWS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are other suggestions to be made in this connection, if the Senator pleases, if we are going into it.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator must see where it will lead if we are now to enter upon a discussion of the merits of the various propositions contained in the bill, and if persisted in I will be unable to conclude within the time I should feel warranted in occupying.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was about to say to the Senator from Michigan that the only reason why I do not make one or two other suggestions in addition to the one made by my friend, the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], was because I did not think the Senator from Michigan desired the logical sequence of his statement to be broken into.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not desire to have a discussion of any of these side issues now. All these matters can and will be considered later under the fifteen-minute debate, and I trust Senators will forego their consideration until they properly arise.

Mr. President, the bill of the majority also provides for establishing a mint at the city of Manila for coinage purposes, and for a general system of currency adapted to the commercial necessities of the people; and finally the Philippine government is authorized to grant franchises, privileges, and concessions for the construction and operation of works of public utility and service, subject always to amendment, alteration, or repeal by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I have now accomplished the only purpose I had in the beginning—to place before the Senate the policy of the Government in dealing with the Philippines, as outlined in the pending measure.

It will be seen that the bill of the majority provides a most elaborate system of civil administration for the government of the Philippine Islands, which in its practical operation it is hoped and believed will develop the material resources of the islands, advance the industrial interests of their inhabitants, and promote the civilization, peace, and prosperity of the whole people. All this, it is frankly admitted, is to be done under American sovereignty, and so far as this measure is concerned without promise or expressed purpose, for the present, at least, of surrendering that sovereignty or abandoning the control of the islands.

The proposition of the minority, as frankly stated, points in another direction, and in the express terms of the substitute, to the "relinquishment of all claims of sovereignty over, or title to the Philippine Islands;" to the calling of a convention of the various peoples and tribes in the islands for the purpose of forming a constitution "for and by the people," which when formulated that fact shall be certified to the President of the United States, whose duty it shall be, in the language of the substitute, "to issue his proclamation declaring the independence of the people of the archipelago; and that they constitute an independant state and nation; and that within sixty days from the election and inauguration of the officers provided for by such constitution, the President shall cause the armed forces of the United States to be withdrawn from the archipelago."

This proposition of the minority calls a halt in our course, and commands our forces, civil and military, to "mark time," while the proposed convention deliberates, taking no thought for the development of the islands; no thought for the establishment of industries; no thought for the betterment and uplifting of the people under the beneficent sway of American sovereignty; but is intent only upon the abandonment of the islands and consigning them to an uncertain, and I confidently believe, disastrous future.

That I may not do the minority an injustice in thus characterizing their policy, I beg to insert in this connection a copy of the proposed substitute:

Amendment, in the nature of a substitute, intended to be proposed by Mr. RAWLINS to the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 2. That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a government, and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain and for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under the authority thereof, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That ninety days after the President of the United States shall have proclaimed that all armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago the United States Philippine Commission shall make and promulgate rules and regulations for the holding of an election in the provinces of said archipelago for members of a convention, which convention when organized shall proceed to the adoption of a constitution for the government of said archipelago. That all male inhabitants of said archipelago 21 years of age and over who speak and write either the English or Spanish languages or any of the native languages of the said archipelago, and who shall have resided therein for one year, shall be qualified to vote for members of the convention, and any person so qualified as an elector shall be qualified to become a member of said convention. The members of the said convention shall number three hundred, and shall be apportioned by the United States Philippine Commission among the several provinces of said archipelago so that the distribution shall be in proportion to their population as near as may be; and when the said apportionment has been determined upon, the said Commission shall by proclamation order an election of the members for said convention, to be held throughout the said archipelago at such time as shall be fixed by the said Commission, which election shall be held not more than one year from the date of the proclamation by the President of the United States hereinbefore provided for, and ample time shall be given before said election to circulate said proclamation throughout said archipelago and arrange for the holding of the said election.

SEC. 4. That the members of the convention thus elected shall meet at the city of Manila on a day to be fixed by the said United States Philippine Commission not more than ninety days subsequent to the day of election, the time for which meeting shall be stated in the proclamation calling attention to the election aforesaid; and after organization the said convention shall proceed to form a constitution and organize such government as they may deem best adapted to promote the welfare and secure the peace and happiness of the inhabitants of said islands: Provided, That said convention shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States:

First. That there shall belong to the United States and continue to be the property thereof such lands and waters as the President of the United States shall designate to the said convention for naval, military, and coaling stations and terminal facilities for submarine cables, the same to continue under the control and sovereignty of the United States.

Second. To carry into effect the treaty obligations of the United States with the Kingdom of Spain, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights and property acquired under the authority of the United States.

Third. That no inhabitant of said archipelago shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her adherence to the United States.

SEC. 5. That when the constitution and government shall be formed for and by the people of said archipelago in compliance with the provisions of this act, the said United States Philippine Commission shall certify the fact to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said constitution and ordinances, whereupon it shall be the duty of the President to issue his proclamation declaring the independence of the people of said archipelago, and that they constitute an independent state and nation.

SEC. 6. That the President of the United States is hereby requested to negotiate an agreement between the United States, the said Philippine Archipelago, and Great Britain, Germany, France, and such other powers as he may deem best, providing for its perpetual neutrality and inviolability from all foreign interference, and also for equal opportunities of trade to foreign countries with said archipelago.

SEC. 7. That immediately after the President shall have proclaimed that all armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago, he is requested to proclaim full amnesty to all the inhabitants thereof for or on account of political offenses and the bearing of arms against the United States, and all Filipinos or inhabitants of said archipelago who have been deported shall be returned to the place from whence they were so deported: Provided, That such amnesty shall not apply to any who have violated the rules of civilized warfare or were guilty of murder or torture. That the latter, if any, shall be afforded a speedy trial for their offenses in the civil courts of said archipelago, and be punished or acquitted, as the facts and law may warrant.

SEC. 8. That within sixty days from the election of officers under the constitution to be formed by the said Philippine Archipelago and the inauguration of said officers the President shall cause the armed forces of the United States to be withdrawn from said archipelago as speedily as may be, except such forces as may be maintained in such parts thereof as have been retained by the United States for naval, military, and coaling stations and terminal facilities for cables; and the President of the United States and the Secretary of War shall make all needful regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to promote the welfare and establish the independence of the Philippine Islands."

Mr. President, these are, in substance, the two measures before the Senate; and they fairly present, as I have said, the conflicting opinions of the Senate and the American people upon this great question. Which course shall be pursued is the vital and all-absorbing issue, and all other questions are incidental and insignificant as compared with this.

If the water cure has been administered to some persons in arms against the Government, that is no reason why we should abandon the islands or surrender our sovereignty.

Mr. President, I do not propose to consider or trace the various steps which led up to our occupancy of the Philippine Islands, over which the United States is to-day asserting its sovereignty. Nor will I stop now to inquire who fired the first shot or who is responsible for the inauguration of the conflict. These questions belong to the past and to history, and their consideration at this time can not, in my judgment, contribute in the slightest degree to the solution of the problem immediately confronting the American people.

We are in the Philippines, and what shall be our future policy in relation to their government is the sole question before the Senate. Shall we continue our present course, or shall we "about face" and abandon it for that course suggested by the minority?

And, first, let me say that the bill of the majority is in line with the avowed policy of the Government toward the Philippine people from the beginning—from our first occupation of the islands until this hour. It is not a hastily formed plan or an untried experiment. It is only the continuation and consummation of that policy in which there has been no variableness or shadow of turning. That policy is set forth by the Philippine Commission on page 5 of their report, which I will ask to have embodied in my remarks without reading.

The extract referred to is as follows:

1. The supremacy of the United States must and will be enforced throughout every part of the archipelago, and those who resist it can accomplish no end other than their own ruin.

2. The most ample liberty of self-government will be granted to the Philippine people which is reconcilable with the maintenance of a wise, just, stable, effective, and economical administration of public affairs, and compatible with the sovereign and international rights and obligations of the United States.

3. The civil rights of the Philippine people will be guaranteed and protected to the fullest extent, religious freedom assured, and all persons shall have an equal standing before the law.

4. Honor, justice, and friendship forbid the use of the Philippine people or islands as an object or means of exploitation. The purpose of the American Government is the welfare and advancement of the Philippine people.

5. There shall be guaranteed to the Philippine people an honest and effective civil service, in which, to the fullest extent practicable, natives shall be employed.

6. The collection and application of taxes and revenues will be put upon a sound, honest, and economical basis. Public funds, raised justly and collected honestly, will be applied only in defraying the regular and proper expenses incurred by and for the establishment and maintenance of the Philippine government, and for such general improvements as public interests may demand. Local funds, collected for local purposes, shall not be diverted to other ends. With such a prudent and honest fiscal administration, it is believed that the needs of the government will in a short time become compatible with a considerable reduction in taxation.

7. A pure, speedy, and effective administration of justice will be established, whereby the evils of delay, corruption, and exploitation will be effectually eradicated.

8. The construction of roads, railroads, and other means of communication and transportation, as well as other public works of manifest advantage to the Philippine people, will be promoted.

9. Domestic and foreign trade and commerce, agriculture, and other industrial pursuits, and the general development of the country in the interest of its inhabitants, will be constant objects of solicitude and fostering care.

10. Effective provision will be made for the establishment of elementary schools in which the children of the people shall be educated. Appropriate facilities will be provided for higher education.

11. Reforms in all departments of the government, in all branches of the public service, and in all corporations closely touching the common life of the people must be undertaken without delay and effected, conformably to right and justice, in a way that will satisfy the well-founded demands and the highest sentiments and aspirations of the Philippine people.

Mr. BURROWS. I also ask leave to print as a part of my remarks an extract from the report of the Taft Commission, found on page 148 of their report, giving the conclusions of that body, and showing that the bill of the majority is in line with and carries out in the main the suggestions of the Commission and the policy of the United States.

The extract referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS.

The Commission recommends—

1. That Congress make appropriations to construct posts or garrisons for the army outside of the towns, so that they shall not be quartered in the towns.

2. That Congress be requested to confirm the legislation of the Commission already enacted, and vest by Congressional enactment in the civil governor, and Commission, and their successors to be appointed by the President, the authority heretofore exercised by them under the instructions of the President, with the limitations therein contained, until January 1, 1904; and that provision be made in such legislation for a government to begin on January 1, 1904, and to be composed of a governor and the heads of four executive departments, to be appointed by the President; of an executive council, to consist of the governor and the four heads of departments, and four others, to be appointed by the President (the executive council to consist both of Americans and Filipinos), and of a popular assembly of not exceeding 30 representatives, to be elected from districts to be determined after a census of the Filipino population in the islands; that in such government the members of the popular assembly shall serve for a term of two years, and the popular assembly shall be limited to an annual session of three months, from the 1st of January to the 1st of April, except as this may be extended by call of the governor for a definite period in extra session; that the power of the popular assembly shall be that of a coordinate branch of the legislature, except that in the case of appropriation bills, if the popular assembly shall fail to vote the appropriations required by law during its regular session of three months the right to vote such necessary appropriations shall vest in the executive council; that the governor shall have the power to veto the legislation of the two chambers unless the same shall be again passed by a two-thirds vote of both houses; that Congress shall have full power to abrogate all legislation, and that by a joint vote of the popular assembly and the executive council two delegates, who shall be residents of the islands, shall be elected to represent the interests of these islands and the Filipino people before Congress and the Executive at Washington, their expenses and salaries to be paid from the insular treasury.

3. That the Commission be authorized to issue bonds of the insular government with which to buy up the agricultural holdings and other property of the religious orders, to purchase the same, and to sell lands thus acquired, preferably to the present tenants on easy payments, and be required to use the proceeds of the sales as a sinking fund with which to meet the bonds issued.

4. That an appeal be granted from the supreme court of the islands to the Supreme Court of the United States in the San José College case, and in all cases between the insular government and the Catholic Church, or any of its dependencies, in respect to the ownership or administration of trust or other property in the Philippine Islands.

* * * * *

6. That the Commission be given power to itself issue bonds for the city of Manila, or to authorize the municipal board to do so in an amount not exceeding $4,000,000, sufficient to make needed improvements in the water supply and the sewerage and drainage systems.

7. That the Commission be given power to grant street-railway, electric-light, telephone, and other municipal franchises in the towns of the islands, subject to the confirmation of the President.

8. That the Commission be given authority to pass a general public-land law, making provision for the acquisition of homestead rights, the perfecting of titles of those who have in good faith settled upon public lands and improved the same, and public auction sales of the public lands at a fixed minimum price per acre in tracts of comparatively large extent, and upon such other conditions as the Commission may impose; and that this authority shall include the right of the Commission to grant to the pueblos commons from the public lands.

9. That the Commission be authorized to continue the present regulations of the cutting of timber, with such modifications as experience may show to be wise.

10. That the Commission be authorized to pass a mining law having a general resemblance to the United States mining laws, with such modifications as the local conditions require.

11. That the Commission be given power to pass a general incorporation law for the conducting of legitimate businesses by corporations.

12. That the Commission be given special authority to issue charters to commercial railroads, with power to make donations of lands, or guarantee the interest on the investments, or both; such grants to be subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

13. That Congress enact a general coinage law providing for the establishment of a gold standard, with local silver currency, and shall confer power upon the Commission, by a gold reserve and otherwise, to maintain the parity between the gold standard and the local currency, as indicated in the body of the report.

14. That Congress shall enact a general banking law for the islands, providing for the establishment of national banks in the islands, with branches in various parts of the islands and in the United States; for the establishment of branches in these islands of national banks located in the United States; for the carrying on and supervision of other banks not national, and for the establishment of mortgage land banks; all as outlined in the body of this report.

15. That Congress shall enact a law authorizing the Commission to appropriate the Spanish and insurrectionary seized funds now in the treasury of the islands to the making of a school fund or for the use of the provinces in which such funds were captured.

* * * * * * *

17. That Congress shall enact a law appropriating a sum sufficient to reimburse the insular treasury for the amount expended in the purchase and fitting of certain Spanish gunboats turned over to the Navy and now used by that Department.

WM. H. TAFT.
DEAN C. WORCESTER.
LUKE E. WRIGHT.
HENRY C. IDE.
BERNARD MOSES.

NOTE.—The three Filipino commissioners were not installed in office until the 1st of September, 1901, and as the period covered by this report is from the 1st of December, 1900, until the 1st of October, 1901, it was agreed between the commissioners that it would be more just to make this report as the report of the original Commission rather than that of the Commission as at present constituted. The three Filipino commissioners, however, having read this report, agreed in the recommendations as to the form of a permanent central civil government to be established.

Mr. BURROWS. The bill before us is in furtherance of that end, an end to be attained, let me say, not by the harsh instrumentality of war alone, but by the gentler means of civil administration. Much has been said of the harshness of military rule, and I have been surprised that the minority, in view of their criticisms, should so persistently resist the efforts of the majority and of the Government to relieve the people of military control and put in its place civil administration.

The purpose of this Government from the beginning has been, so soon and so far as our sovereignty was established in the islands, to subordinate military rule to civil control, to employ the military only when necessary, and to establish civil authority whenever and wherever possible.

This was President McKinley's policy in the beginning, as announced in his message to Congress in December, 1899. I quote from that document:

As long as the insurrection continues the military arm must necessarily be supreme. But there is no reason why steps should not be taken from time to time to inaugurate governments essentially popular in their form as fast as territory is held and controlled by our troops. To this end I am considering the advisability of the return of the Commission, or such of the members thereof as can be secured, to aid the existing authorities and facilitate this work throughout the islands. I have believed that reconstruction should not begin by the establishment of one central civil government for all the islands, with its seat at Manila, but rather that the work should be commenced by building up from the bottom, first establishing municipal governments and then provincial governments, a central government at last to follow.

In execution of that purpose, it will be remembered that a second commission was appointed, with Judge Taft at its head, who entered upon the work of establishing civil government in the Philippine Islands under instructions from the President of the United States; which instructions set forth so clearly the purposes of the Government in this regard that I beg to quote therefrom. The President said:

It is probable that the transfer of authority from military commanders to civil officers will be gradual and will occupy a considerable period. Its successful accomplishment and the maintenance of peace and order in the meantime will require the most perfect cooperation between the civil and military authorities in the island, and both should be directed during the transition period by the same executive department.

Without hampering them by too specific instructions, they should in general be, after making themselves familiar with the conditions and needs of the country, enjoined to devote their attention in the first instance to the establishment of municipal governments, in which the natives of the islands, both in the cities and in the rural communities, shall be afforded the opportunity to manage their own local affairs to the fullest extent of which they are capable, and subject to the least degree of supervision and control which a careful study of their capacities and observation of the workings of native control show to be consistent with the maintenance of law, order, and loyalty.

The next subject in order of importance should be the organization of government in the larger administrative divisions corresponding to counties, departments, or provinces in which the common interests of many or several municipalities falling within the same tribal lines or the same natural geographical limits may best be subserved by a common administration. Whenever the Commission is of the opinion that the condition of affairs in the islands is such that the central administration may safely be transferred from military to civil control they will report that conclusion to you, with their recommendations as to the form of central government to be established for the purpose of taking over the control.

And further:

Beginning with the 1st day of September, 1900, the authority to exercise, subject to my approval, through the Secretary of War, that part of the power of government in the Philippine Islands which is of a legislative nature is to be transferred from the military governor of the islands to this Commission, to be thereafter exercised by them in the place and stead of the military governor. * * *

That in all cases the municipal officers, who administer the local affairs of the people, are to be selected by the people, and that wherever officers of more extended jurisdiction are to be selected in any way, natives of the islands are to be preferred, and if they can be found competent and willing to perform the duties, they are to receive the offices in preference to any others. * * *

It will be necessary to fill some offices for the present with Americans, which after a time may well be filled by natives of the islands. * * *

It will be the duty of the Commission to promote and extend, and, as they find occasion, to improve the system of education already inaugurated by the military authorities. In doing this they should regard as of first importance the extension of a system of primary education which shall be free to all, and which shall tend to fit the people for the duties of citizenship and for the ordinary avocations of a civilized community. * * *

Let me supplement this with what Governor Taft said before our Committee on the Philippine Islands. I quote from page 57 of the hearings:

I have studied, of course, the instructions issued by President McKinley with a great deal of care, and have watched their operation in the development of the government of those islands, and perhaps it is my intimacy with them and my interest in their operation that make me say that I think they constitute one of the greatest state papers ever issued in operating as they were intended to operate and in bringing about a state of affairs that they intended to bring about; and their operation was this: There was insurrection in the country. How far that insurrection attracted the sympathy of all the people is of course a mere matter of opinion, upon which there will always be a substantial difference. That there were two parties, however—those who favored the exclusion of American sovereignty altogether, and a substantial party who favored the government which we are now establishing—is undoubtedly true; and that there was a large body of ignorant people who were entirely indifferent, provided peace could be established and they could be protected from oppression and violence and assault, and who had very few political ideas at all, is also true.

Senator BEVERIDGE. This third division is the great body of all?

Governor TAFT. Yes; ignorant people.

Now, the problem there was on the one hand to suppress the insurrection, and that had to be done with the Army. On the other hand, it was to teach the people that our purpose was not to continue a military government, but by object lessons to show them what civil government was by legislation and by putting it into force.

Now, here was a dual government. There was the military arm on the one hand and there was the civil arm on the other, and the effect of those instructions—you can see it operate every day—was to bring the Filipino—and I do not except anybody in that statement; I do not even except the insurrectos—to bring the people into more friendly relations with the civil government than with the military government.

The conduct of a dual form of government of that sort was of course difficult. The instructions were framed so that they have worked. But the coming into the minds of the people a consciousness of the existence of power in the civil government and its effect on them, and the gradually placing more and more power in the civil government, which the instructions contemplated, have had a marvelous effect in showing the people what our purpose was.

War is hard; war is rough; war is cruel; and when the death and the suffering that were caused to many Filipinos were known to their brethren, it is not reasonable to expect that they should love the instrument by which that punishment was inflicted. And that speaks the greatness of these instructions, that accompanying the necessary instrument in suppressing that insurrection was another instrument, the civil government, winning, almost by contrast, you might say, the affection and confidence of the Filipino people. The hand that drew those instructions followed a brain that understood human nature, and the working out of them in the short two years is a vindication of that judgment.

But, on behalf of the Commission, I think I may say that we have had chiefly in mind always the good of the Filipino people; that we have been attempting to gain their confidence, to make them feel that we are anxious to give them the best government possible, and to secure them in the enjoyment of such rights as will enable them to progress and achieve contentment and prosperity.

Gentlemen who think that that is an impossibility—and included amongst such classes are the men whom I have mentioned—disagree with us. Whatever the cause, I assert without hesitation on my part that the Philippine people as a people sympathize with the Commission in its efforts, welcome us to every part of the islands, and have confidence in our attempt to bring good to them.

This letter of President McKinley's to which I have referred, and concerning which Governor Taft has spoken, was the chart by which we have thus far directed our course in this venturesome and, I grant you, perilous voyage. This policy of subordinating military to civil rule was further clearly and tersely set forth by the able Secretary of War in his report for the year 1901, from which I desire to make a single quotation.

The policy contemplated—

Says the Secretary—

The policy contemplated in the instructions of April 7, and followed by the War Department, has been to steadily press forward, as rapidly as it could be done safely and thoroughly, the gradual substitution of government through civil agents for government through military agents, so that the administration of the military officer shall be continually narrowed, and that of the civil officer continually enlarged, until the time comes when the army can, without impairing the peace and order of the country, be relegated to the same relation toward the government which it occupies in the United States. In this way we have avoided the premature abandonment of any power necessary to enforce the authority of the United States, and at the same time have held open to the people of every community the opportunity to escape from the stringency of military rule by uniting with us in effective measures to bring about peaceful conditions in the territory which they inhabit.

This, Mr. President, has been the wise and humane policy of the Government from the beginning. In the forceful words of the Secretary of War—

The administration of the military officer shall be continually narrowed, and that of the civil officer continually enlarged, until the time comes when the army can, without impairing the peace and order of the country, be relegated to the same relation toward the government which it occupies in the United States.

And now, Mr. President, I desire to submit, and in this connection, a chronological statement of the various acts taken by the executive branch of the Government for the establishment of general, provincial, and municipal civil government in the Philippines; to show at a glance how steadily and how rapidly we have advanced to the consummation of our purpose to supplant military rule and establish peace and order under civil control.

CHRONOLOGICAL STATEMENT OF STEPS TAKEN BY THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF GENERAL, PROVINCIAL, AND MUNICIPAL CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

1899.

January 20.—Jacob Gould Schurman, of New York; Maj. Gen. Elwell S. Otis, of the United States Army; Rear-Admiral George Dewey, of the United States Navy; Charles Denby, of Indiana; Dean C. Worcester, of Michigan, appointed by the President as Commissioners to the Philippines.

January 21.—Secretary of State transmitted copy of instructions of the President, dated January 20, 1899, to the above-named Commissioners.

March 4.—Commissioners Schurman and Worcester arrived at Manila.

April 2.—Commissioner Denby arrived at Manila.

April 4.—Proclamation of the Commission to the people of the Philippine Islands.

1900.

March 16.—Hon. William H. Taft of Ohio, Hon. Dean C. Worcester of Michigan, Hon. Luke E. Wright of Tennessee, Hon. Henry C. Ide of Vermont, and Hon. Bernard Moses of California, appointed Commissioners to the Philippine Islands.

April 7.—Instructions of the President to the "Taft Commission."

June 3.—Taft Commission arrived at Manila.

September 1.—Commission began its legislative and executive duties under the instructions of the President.

September 19.—(No. 5.) An act for the establishment and maintenance of an efficient and honest civil service in the Philippine Islands.

September 26.—(No. 6.) An act prescribing the order of procedure by the Commission in the enactment of laws.

(No. 7.) An act for the establishment of a bureau of statistics for the Philippine Islands.

October 3.—(No. 12.) An act prescribing the method to be adopted by the insular treasurer in keeping and rendering accounts of his receipts and disbursements.

October 10.—(No. 16.) An act for the reorganization of the forestry bureau of the Philippine Islands.

(No. 17.) An act for the reorganization of the mining bureau of the Philippine Islands.

(No. 20.) An act to reorganize the office of the auditor of the Philippine Islands.

October 17.—(No. 24.) An act establishing a court of first instance for the province of Bohol.

October 24.—(No. 28.) An act establishing a court of first instance for the provinces of La Union and Benguet.

(No. 33.) An act abolishing the office of the captain of the port at every port in the Philippine Islands except Manila and transferring the duties of such office to the proper collector or inspector of customs.

October 29.—(No. 36.) An act regulating the system of keeping accounts of public revenues and the returns thereof, and repealing certain orders and circulars relating to those subjects.

October 31.—(No. 40.) An act prescribing the method to be adopted in making requisitions for funds from the insular treasury, and repealing portions of Executive order of May 8, 1899.

November 12.—(No. 44.) An act providing for the service of process in the provinces where civil courts have not been organized.

November 22.—(No. 48.) An act providing for the establishment of local civil governments in the townships of the province of Benguet.

November 23.—(No. 49.) An act providing for the establishment of a civil government for the province of Benguet.

November 23.—(No. 52.) An act providing for examinations of banking institutions in the Philippine Islands and for reports by their officers.

December 12.—(No. 58.) An act authorizing the establishment of local police in cities and towns of the Philippine Islands and appropriating one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000), money of the United States, for their maintenance.

December 14.—(No. 59.) An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors within the city of Manila and its attached barrios.

December 21.—(No. 62.) An act authorizing the provost-marshal-general to establish police and health regulations in the nature of municipal ordinances for the city of Manila.

1901.

January 9.—(No. 70.) An act providing for the organization of three companies of police for the city of Manila and neighboring towns.

January 16.—(No. 73.) An act providing for the examination and licensing of applicants for the positions of master, mate, and patron of seagoing vessels.

January 21.—(No. 74.) An act establishing a department of public instruction in the Philippine Islands and appropriating $40,000 for the organization and maintenance of a normal and a trade school in Manila, and $15,000 for the organization and maintenance of an agricultural school in the island of Negros for the year 1901.

January 31.—(No. 82.) A general act for the organization of municipal governments in the Philippine Islands.

February 6.—(No. 83.) A general act for the organization of provincial governments in the Philippine Islands.

Acts extending the provisions of the provincial-government act to the provinces of—

February 13.—(No. 85.) Pampanga.
February 16.—(No. 86.) Pangasinan.
February 18.—(No. 87.) Tarlac.
February 27.—(No. 88.) Bulacan.

February 28.—(No. 90.) An act reciting an Executive order of the President of the United States amending the Executive order of May 8, 1899, creating the office of auditor for the islands, of deputy auditor for the islands, and chief clerk of the auditor for the islands of the Philippine Archipelago, and enacting, with the concurrence and approval of the Secretary of War first had, the rules and instructions relative to the accounting system of the military government of the United States in the islands of the Philippine Archipelago.

March 2.—(No. 92.) An act extending the provisions of the provincial-government act to the province of Bataan.

March 9.—(No. 98.) An act to regulate commerce in the Philippine Islands.

Acts extending the provisions of the "provincial-government act" to the provinces of—

March 12.—(No. 103.) Tayabas.
March 16.—(No. 104.) Romblon.
March 18.—(No. 105.) Masbate.
April 11.—(No. 113.) Iloilo.
April 13.—(No. 114.) Antique.
April 15.—(No. 115.) Capiz.

April 18.—(No. 116.) Cebu, and incorporating the pueblo of San Nicolas in the municipality of Cebu.

April 20.—(No. 117.) Bohol.
April 20.—(No. 119.) Negros Occidental; also the Municipal Code to the same province.
April 20.—(No. 120.) Oriental Negros; also the Municipal Code to the same province.
April 22.—(No. 121.) Leyte.
April 26.—(No. 122.) Albay.
April 27.—(No. 123.) Ambos Camarines.
April 30.—(No. 124.) Sorsogon.
May 1.—(No. 125.) Marinduque.
May 2.—(No. 126.) Batangas.
May 15.—(No. 127.) Surigao.
May 15.—(No. 128.) Misamis.

May 22.—(No. 131.) An act providing for the establishment of a weather bureau for the Philippine Islands and appropriating $8,066.50 (in money of the United States) for the purchase of meteorological instruments and apparatus and the installation of the same.

May 22.—(No. 132.) An act to amend the Municipal Code, No. 82.
May 22.—(No. 133.) An act to amend the provincial-government act, No. 83.
June 11.—(No. 136.) An act providing for the organization of courts in the Philippine Islands.

Acts extending the provisions of the provincial-government act to the provinces of—

(No. 137.) Rizal.
(No. 138.) Cavite.
(No. 139.) Nueva Ecija.

June 12.—(No. 140.) An act defining the judicial districts of the Philippine Islands, prescribing the salaries of the judges thereof, and the times when and the places where terms of courts of the first instance shall be held in the several districts.

June 18.—(No. 141.) An act to amend the provincial-government act, No. 83, and the act amendatory thereof, No. 133.

June 18.—(No. 142.) An act to amend act No. 104, entitled "An act extending the provisions of the provincial-government act to the province of Romblon, as therein defined."

June 21.—Hon. William H. Taft appointed civil governor of the Philippine Islands.

June 21.—(No. 145.) An act authorizing the appointment of disbursing clerks in the various civil departments, bureaus, and offices, prescribing the duties of disbursing clerks, and fixing their compensation as such.

June 21.—(No. 146.) An act creating the office of insular purchasing agent for the government of the Philippine Archipelago, defining the duties of such officer, and making an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of carrying said act into effect.

June 26.—(No. 151.) An act fixing the compensation of the clerk of the court of first instance for each province.

June 27.—(No. 152.) An act providing for the lawful custody of courthouses and the public property therein, and for the appointment of stenographers, typewriters, interpreters, and translators, when necessary.

July 1.—(No. 156.) An act providing for the establishment of government laboratories for the Philippine Islands.

July 1.—(No. 157.) An act providing for the establishment of a board of health for the Philippine Islands.

July 4.—Inauguration of civil governor.

July 13.—(No. 164.) An act amending act No. 157, entitled "An act providing for the establishment of a board of health for the Philippine Islands."

July 16.—(No. 166.) An act creating a special court for the trial of certain actions, appellate and original, pending in courts of the island of Negros on and before the 16th day of June, 1901.

July 17.—(No. 173.) An act restoring the provinces of Batangas, Cebu, and Bohol to the executive control of the military governor.

July 18.—(No. 175.) An act providing for the organization and government of an insular constabulary and for the inspection of the municipal police.

July 25.—(No. 181.) An act amending that portion of act No. 102 which relates to the organization of the postal service, and for other purposes.

July 31.—(No. 183.) An act to incorporate the city of Manila.

August 7.—Charter of Manila went into effect.

August 7.—(No. 190.) An act providing a code of procedure in civil actions and special proceedings in the Philippine Islands.

August 12.—(No. 195.) An act to amend act No. 90 so as to transfer the duties of military governor respecting the expenditures of Philippine funds to civil governor.

Acts extending the provisions of the provincial-government act and its amendments to the provinces of—

August 15.—(No. 203.) La Union.

August 16.—(No. 205.) Ilocos Sur.

August 19.—(No. 206.) Abra.

August 20.—(No. 207.) Ilocos Norte.

August 22.—(No. 209.) Cagayan.

August 24.—(No. 210.) Isabela.

August 28.—(No. 211.) Zambales.

August 31.—(No. 212.) An act extending the time on which act No. 190, providing a code of procedure in civil actions and special proceedings in the Philippine Islands, shall take effect from the 1st day of September to the 1st day of October, 1901.

August 31.—(No. 214.) An act amending the Manila charter.

August 31.—(No. 215.) An act establishing and regulating accountability for public property in the Philippine Archipelago.

September 1.—Dr. T. H. Pardo de Tavera, Señor Benito Legarda, and Señor José Luzuriaga (native Filipinos) became members of the Philippine Commission.

September 2.—(No. 218.) An act creating a bureau of public lands.

September 6.—(No. 222.) An act providing for the organization of the departments of the interior, of commerce and police, of finance and justice, and of public instruction.

September 6.—(No. 223.) An act amending the provincial-government act, No. 83, as amended by act No. 133.

September 17.—(No. 230.) An act to revise and amend the tariff laws of the Philippine Archipelago.

September 24.—(No. 238.) An act fixing the limits of Cavite Harbor, vesting the admiral of the United States Navy in command of the Asiatic Station with police jurisdiction thereof, and providing rules and regulations for governing vessels anchoring therein.

October 2.—(No. 253.) An act creating a bureau of non-Christian tribes for the Philippine Islands.

October 2.—(No. 254.) An act organizing the office of the insular purchasing agent.

October 8.—(No. 261.) An act creating a bureau of agriculture.

October 17.—(No. 266.) An act creating the bureau of coast guard and transportation.

October 17.—(No. 267.) An act amending in several particulars act No. 183, entitled "An act to incorporate the city of Manila."

October 18.—(No. 268.) An act creating a bureau of architecture and construction of public buildings.

October 21.—(No. 273.) An act creating a bureau of archives.

October 29.—(No. 284.) An act establishing in Manila an insular museum of ethnology, natural history, and commerce, and appropriating $8,000, in money of the United States, for maintaining the same and for paying the expenses of collecting, caring for, and preserving the objects illustrating the ethnology of the Philippine Islands.

October 29.—Hon. Luke E. Wright appointed vice-governor.

November 7.—(No. 296.) An act creating a bureau of public printing.

November 12.—Vice-Governor Wright cabled that 765 towns had been organized under the provisions of the Municipal Code.

November 27.—(No. 309.) An act amending act No. 82, entitled "The Municipal Code," and act No. 225, amendatory thereof.

December 2.—(No. 307.) An act providing for the establishment of provincial boards of health and fixing their powers and duties.

(No. 308.) An act providing for the establishment of municipal boards of health and fixing their powers and duties.

December 4.—(No. 310.) An act regulating the practice of medicine and surgery in the Philippine Islands.

December 10.—(No. 315.) An act creating a bureau of cold storage and ice plant, and providing the method of conducting said plant and the personnel and salaries of the employees thereof.

December 20.—(No. 322.) An act repealing so much of act No. 173 as applies to the province of Cebu, and restoring that province to the executive control of the civil governor.

December 31.—(No. 325.) An act providing for the reorganization of the office of the attorney-general and for an increase in the salary of the judge for the third judicial district of the Philippine Islands, and amending acts 136, 140, and 300.

1902.

January 25.—(No. 336.) An act amending act No. 83, entitled "A general act for the organization of provincial governments in the Philippine Islands," and act No. 320, amendatory thereof.

January 28.—(No. 337.) An act providing for the organization of a provincial government in the province of Nueva Vizcaya.

January 29.—(No. 341.) An act amending act No. 183, entitled "An act to incorporate the city of Manila," and acts Nos. 214, 267, 313, and 323, amendatory thereof, by fixing new boundaries for the city of Manila.

February 6.—(No. 355.) An act to constitute the customs service of the Philippine Archipelago and to provide for the administration thereof.

February 20.—(No. 360.) An act for the reorganization of the office of the United States Philippine Commission.

March 3.—(No. 365.) An act repealing so much of act No. 173 as applies to the province of Bohol, and restoring that province to the executive control of the civil governor.

March 3.—(No. 367.) An act to reorganize the personnel of the Philippine customs service.

Mr. BURROWS. In this connection I submit a chronological statement showing the provincial governments already established, the islands or groups of islands in which they are located, their dependent islands, and their approximate areas and populations, exhibiting the extent of territory over which civil government has been established and the population of the islands brought under control of civil government.

Chronological statement showing provincial governments established by acts of the Philippine Commission; also the islands or group of islands in which they are located, their dependent islands, and their approximate areas and population May 15, 1902.

Provinces.	Island or group.	Date of act.	Area.[a]	Number of dependent islands.	Population.[a]
		1900.	Sq. m.
Benguet	Luzon	Nov. 23	900		15,175
		1901.
Pampanga	do	Feb. 13	2,200		223,923
Pangasinan	do	Feb. 16	1,316		302,178
Tarlac	do	Feb. 18	1,295		89,339
Bulacan	do	Feb. 27	841		230,221
Bataan	do	Mar. 2	436	1	50,761
Tayabas	do	Mar. 12	2,334	8	109,780
Romblon	Visayas	Mar. 16	515	32	55,389
Masbate (Masbate)	do	Mar. 18	1,815	46	23,069
Iloilo (Panay)	do	Apr. 11	2,102	80	462,444
Antique (Panay)	do	Apr. 13	1,340	6	115,434
Capiz (Panay)	do	Apr. 15	1,661	30	224,000
Cebu	do	Apr. 18	1,782	29	518,022
Bohol	do	Apr. 20	1,614	59	260,000
Negros Occidental	do	Apr. 20	3,112	14	231,512
Negros Oriental	do	Apr. 20	1,742	3	140,498
Leyte	do	Apr. 22	4,214	40	270,491
Albay	Luzon	Apr. 26	1,711	21	228,139
Ambos Camarines	do	Apr. 27	3,161	83	194,022
Sorsogon	do	Apr. 30	675	16	98,650
Marinduque	Visayas	May 1	681	13	48,000
Batangas[b]	Luzon	May 2	1,108	28	311,180
Surigao	Mindanao	May 15	13,201	83	85,125
Misamis	do	May 15	5,879	5	126,942
Rizal	Luzon	June 11	1,048	3	246,940
Cavite	do	June 11	610	7	134,569
Nueva Ecija	do	June 11	3,840		156,610
La Union	do	Aug. 15	867		110,164
Ilocos Sur	do	Aug. 16	491	2	215,792
Abra	do	Aug. 19	1,904		57,285
Ilocos Norte	do	Aug. 20	1,265	4	163,349
Cagayan	do	Aug. 22	5,291	46	96,867
Isabela	do	Aug. 24	5,395	2	48,302
Zambales	do	Aug. 28	2,210	76	87,295
		1902.
Nueva Vizcaya	do	Jan. 28.	1,075		60,628

[a] Approximate.

[b] Restored to executive control of military governor July 17, 1901.

Mr. BURROWS. I will also submit certain memoranda taken from official sources showing the provinces, districts, and islands in the Philippine Archipelago in which conditions have been such as not to require military interference since American occupation; also a table showing the date of the last engagement, skirmish, or affair in the several provinces, districts, and islands where there have been military operations.

AMERICAN SUBDIVISIONS.

Since American occupation in the Philippines the island of Luzon has been divided into 27 provinces, in 22 of which provincial government has been established, and in 5 only is a military government now maintained.

LATEST MILITARY OPERATIONS.

Statement showing the date of the last skirmish in each of the several provinces or islands in the Philippines, in which there has been military operations, as shown by the reports received in the Adjutant-General's Office.

Province or island.	Date.	Province or island.	Date.
Masbate Island	Oct. 12, 1900	Nueva Ecija Province	May 19, 1901
Cagayan Province	Nov. 15, 1900	Paragua Island	June 25, 1901
Pangasinan Province	Nov. 28, 1900	Panay Island	July 1, 1901
Catanduanes Island	Jan. 8, 1901	Albay Province	July 4, 1901
Burias Island	Feb. 4, 1901	Camarines Sur	Aug. 15, 1901
Surigao Province	Feb. 20, 1901	Negros Island	Sept. 5, 1901
Marinduque Island	Feb. 22, 1901	Cebu Island	Oct. 30, 1901
Tarlac Province	Mar. 11, 1901	Sorsogon Province	Do.
Zambales Province	Mar. 17, 1901	Camarines Norte	Nov. 27, 1901
Benguet Province	Mar. 25, 1901	Morong Province	Nov. 29, 1901
Manila Province	Mar. 29, 1901	Ilocos Norte Province	Dec. 21, 1901
Union Province	Apr. 2, 1901	Bohol Province	Dec. 24, 1901
Lepanto Province	Apr. 3, 1901	Mindoro Island	Jan. 15, 1902
Bataan Province	Apr. 5, 1901	Cavite Province	Feb. 1, 1902
Pampanga Province	Do.	Leyte Island	Feb. 10, 1902
Ilocos Sur Province	Apr. 14, 1901	Laguna Province	Feb. 14, 1902
Bulacan Province	Apr. 24, 1901	Tayabas Province	Feb. 15, 1902
Abra Province	Apr. 27, 1901	Samar Island	Feb. 22, 1902
Infanta Province	May 5, 1901	Cotabato Province	Mar. 15, 1902
Isabela Province	Do.	Batangas Province	Apr. 16, 1902
Nueva Vizcaya Province	May 19, 1901	Misamis Province	May 3, 1902

The Adjutant-General, in referring to the above list, states:

"The engagements should be known as skirmishes, not even 'affairs,' possibly scouting parties' attacks would be better; any military phrase gives too much dignity—these of late date have been neither skirmishes, engagements, nor affairs."

PROVINCES NEVER IN INSURRECTION.

The following list comprises the provinces, districts, and islands in which there have been no military operations since American occupancy, as there has never existed any insurrection requiring aid of the military:

Amburayan, Apayaos, Balabac, Baras, Basilan, Batanes, Binatangan, Bongao, Bontoc, Butuan, Cabugoan, Calamianes, Cayapa, Concepcion, Corregidor, Dapitan, Davao, Itaves, Iligan, Lanao, Levac, Malabang, Matti,

Principe, Quiangan, Reina Regente, Romblon, Sarangani Bay and Islands, Siasi, Sulu, Tataan, Tiagan, Tucuran, Zamboanga, Rizal.[1]

Mr. BURROWS. The Senate Committee on Philippine Affairs was instructed by the Senate to investigate existing conditions in respect of both civil and military affairs in the archipelago. In carrying out those instructions the committee called for and received the reports of the governors of the several provinces into which the islands are divided. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] presented a synopsis of these reports to the Senate and they need not, therefore, be reproduced. I call attention, however, to the fact that these governors are generally natives of the islands, and were elected to their offices by the inhabitants of the provinces over which they preside. The showing made by these reports ought to be convincing proof of the success of our efforts to establish civil government, and exceedingly gratifying to every loyal American who desires to promote the general welfare of the people of the Philippines.

The following is a syllabus of these reports:

Abra.—Conditions peaceful, people prosperous, education excellent.

Albay.—Peaceful, prosperous, work plenty, crops and schools good.

Ambos Camarines.—Absolute peace, people content, good schools.

Antique.—No acts of hostility for over a year; people contented.

Bataan.—Peaceful, prosperous, schools popular, well attended.

Benguet.—Everything peaceful; sentiment favorable to Americans.

Bulacan.—Sublimely peaceful; people appreciate conditions.

Batangas.—No report from governor.

Bohol.—Conditions have been varied, becoming pacified fast.

Cagayan.—Peaceful, people busy and contented; good schools.

Capiz.—Ready to fight for peace; fine schools.

Cavite.—Peace and order prevail; civil government successful.

Cebu.—Conditions have been disturbed, becoming peaceful.

Ilocos Sur.—Completely pacified, people busy and contented.

Ilocos Norte.—General satisfaction among the natives.

Iloilo.—Could not be more satisfactory, excellent schools.

Isabela.—Peace reigns, finances strong, and conditions satisfactory.

La Union.—Uniform peace; financially, morally, otherwise strong.

Leyte.—Peace conditions satisfactory; people happy and contented.

Marinduque.—People perfectly satisfied; education flattering.

Masbate.—Peace established; people thankful for conditions.

Misamis.—Disturbed conditions; peace returning gradually.

Negros Occidental.—Era of contentment and love reigns.

Negros Oriental.—Conditions favorable, strong financially.

Nueva Ecija.—Conditions pleasant, good crops, people contented.

Nueva Vizcaya.—No report from governor.

Pampanga.—Peaceful, educated people, unexcelled conditions.

Pangasinan.—Perfect peace, great activity, good schools.

Rizal.—No report from governor.

Romblon.—Perfect tranquillity; education desired; finances good.

Sorsogon.—Peace conditions improving.

Surigao.—Perfect tranquillity, contentment, and prosperity.

Tabayas.—Governor Gardener's report only.

Tarlac.—Conditions peaceful; good crops, finances strong.

Zambales.—People express satisfaction at existing conditions.

Mr. President, such has been the progress and result of our efforts to establish civil government in the Philippine Islands and to relieve the people of military rule. When we consider the difficulties surrounding the situation, the remoteness of the islands, and the character of the inhabitants with whom we had to deal, the results attained are exceedingly gratifying and give assurance of a happy and successful termination.

As a part of this work of the Commission in the establishment of civil government on an intelligent and permanent basis, we must not overlook the fact of the inauguration and maintenance of an educational system through which we hope to lay the enduring foundations of peace, progress, and civilization. This work began in the spring of 1901 by the employment of teachers and the construction of schoolhouses in peaceful communities, and this work is still in progress and being rapidly extended.

As garrisons are withdrawn, public schools are installed in their places. During the year 1901 the advent of peaceful conditions in the Philippine Islands has been followed in close succession by the introduction of American methods of education in the hands of American instructors. In the early spring of 1901 arrangements were made for the appointment of several hundred teachers in the United States for service in the Philippine Islands, and by October 1, 1901, 743 teachers had arrived and had been distributed among the provinces as follows:

Manila	76	Nueva Ecija	15
Panay	54	Tarlac	13
Negros Occidental and Oriental	51	Sorsogon	13
Mindanao	44	Zambales	13
Cavite	40	Batangas	13
Leyte	39	Masbate	12
Bulacan	32	Bataan	12
Camarines	31	La Union	12
Pampanga	30	Benguet	11
Rizal	30	Abra	10
Tayabas	27	Bohol	8
Pangasinan	26	Isabela	8
Romblon	22	Cebu	5
Ilocos Sur	20	Marinduque	5
Ilocos Norte	19	Samar	3
Albay	15	Nueva Vizcaya	2
Cagayan	15
Laguna	15	Total	743

Governor Taft, in the hearings before the committee, says that "835 teachers were placed in 445 towns; that 245 of those towns were garrisoned and 200 were not garrisoned," and yet the teachers in the 200 towns without garrisons are as safe as in any portion of the United States, and it is gratifying to know that the common school, both American and native, is rapidly taking the place of and supplanting the United States garrisons. No more convincing proof could possibly be adduced of the triumph of civil rule and the establishment of peace. In addition to this force of American instructors, 4,000 native Filipino teachers are engaged in this educational work.

As a further evidence, Mr. President, of the substitution of civil for military rule——

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire of the Senator if the 835 teachers are in addition to the 743, or has the number decreased to 743?

Mr. BURROWS. It appears from the table just submitted that on the 1st of October, 1901, 743 teachers had arrived in the islands and were employed as instructors in the various provinces.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is that the total number?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes; at that date.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said that 743 had been employed in 1901, and then he mentioned 835 as being employed. My inquiry was whether the 835 is plus the 743.

Mr. BURROWS. The force of 743, October 1, was augmented to 835.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are more than that now.

Mr. BURROWS. Since that time a number have been added, as I have said, and the force has now increased to 1,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is correct—something over a thousand.

Mr. HOAR. Can the Senator state the number of pupils?

Mr. BURROWS. No; I can not.

Other evidence, Mr. President, of the progress of peaceful government and the substitution of civil for military rule is found in the reduction of the number of army posts and the withdrawal of United States troops from the archipelago. There has been so much said about the use of the Army in the Philippines and the necessity for its continued and possibly increased employment, that I desire to place before the Senate and the country the official record.

On the 8th day of this month (May, 1902) the War Department telegraphed to General Chaffee as follows:

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 8, 1902.

CHAFFEE, Manila:

Cable number posts and number American officers remaining in each province.

I have in my hand a copy of General Chaffee's reply to that cablegram which I will read, as follows:

EXTRACT OF CABLEGRAM RECEIVED ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

MANILA, May 10, 1902.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, Washington:

* * * With reference to your telegram of 8th, number stations occupied 253. Province Albay, 2 stations, 3 troops; Bataan, 1 station, 1 company; Batangas, 18, 9 troops, 5 companies; Bulacan, 3, 2 companies; Cagayan, 4, 6 companies; Camarines, 9, 2 troops, 6 companies; Cavite, 11, 2 troops, 6 companies; Ilocos Norte Province, Luzon, Ilocos Sur Province, Luzon, 7, 12 troops; Laguna, 25, 12 troops, 9 companies; Isabela, 8, 6 companies; Marinduque, 3, 3 companies; Masbate, 1, 2 companies; Mindoro, 6, 6 companies; Nueva Ecija, 5, 4 companies; Pampanga, 3, 3 troops; Pangasinan, 14, 1 troop, 11 companies; Principe, 1, 1 company; Rizal, 18, 6 artillery, 2 engineers, 2 signal, 10 troops, 20 companies; Romblon, 1, 1 company; Sorsogon, 5, 4 companies; Tarlac, 4, 4 companies; Tayabas, 15, 7 troops, 10 companies; Zambales, 3, 4 companies; Bohol, 1, 1 company; Busuanga, 1, 1 company; Capul, 1, detachment; Cebu, 4, 1 engineer, 1 signal, 5 companies; Mindanao, 21, 1 artillery, 1 engineer, 8 troops, 22 companies; Negros, 3, 2 companies; Panay, 6, 4 troops, 4 companies; Paragua, 2, 1 company; Samar, 37, 4 troops, 31 companies; Siassi, 1, 1 company; Tawi-tawi, 1, 1 company. Sixth, Ninth, Nineteenth Infantry not included; assembling Manila for shipment United States of America.

CHAFFEE.

Based upon this reply of General Chaffee, I present a table which shows at a glance the stations occupied and American troops serving in each province in the Philippine Islands May 31, 1901, and May 10, 1902.

[1] Rizal is a new province containing a portion of the territory formerly included in the province of Manila.

Stations occupied and American troops serving in each province in the Philippine Islands, May 31, 1901, and May 10, 1902.

Province.	May 31, 1901.		May 10, 1902.
	Number of stations.	Number of companies.	Number of stations.	Number of companies.
Abra	12	9
Albay	9	7	2	3
Batangas	13	15	18	14
Bataan	7	4	1	1
Benguet	1	1
Bongao (island)	1	1
Bohol (island)	5	4	1	1
Bulacan	19	10	3	2
Busuanga			1	1
Camarines	23	14	9	8
Capul			1	Det.
Cagayan	16	6	4	6
Catanduanes (island)	2	1
Cavite	11	12	11	8
Cebu (island)	14	10	4	7
Corregidor (island)	1	1
Ilocos Norte, Luzon	16	11	7	12
Ilocos Sur, Luzon	16	18
Isabela	14	6	8	6
Jolo (island)	1	3
Laguna	20	20	35	21
Lepanto	1	1
Leyte (island)	2	1
Marinduque (island)	4	6	3	3
Masbate (island)	1	2	1	2
Mindanao (island)	15	19	21	32
Mindoro			6	6
Morong	4	2
Negros (island)	33	8	3	2
Nueva Ecija	18	21	5	4
Nueva Vizcaya	5	2
Pampanga	14	12	3	3
Pangasinan	26	27	14	12
Panay (island)	51	18	6	3
Paragua (island)	1	1	2	1
Principe	1	1	1	1
Rizal	14	71	18	40
Romblon (island)	1	1	1	1
Samar (island)	6	8	37	35
Siassi (island)	1	2	1	1
Sorsogon	5	3	5	4
Tarlac	12	13	4	4
Tawi-tawi			1	1
Tayabas	19	11	15	17
Union	13	12
Zambales	21	13	3	4
Total	469	408	245	271

NOTE.—The province of Rizal includes the city of Manila.

From this table it appears that on the 31st day of May, 1901, there were 469 military stations in the Philippine Islands, and on the 10th of May, 1902, there were only 245 stations or posts, a reduction, as it will be seen, in a single year of 224 stations.

Let me state further in this connection that of these 245 posts existing to-day, 55 are in the disturbed provinces of Samar and Batangas, leaving but 190 military posts outside these provinces to keep the peace and preserve order in the entire archipelago.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And these are being very rapidly supplanted by native constabulary.

Mr. BURROWS. Yes. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. These remaining posts are greater in number to-day than they would be if there were facilities for housing and caring for troops at central points.

The reduction of our military force in the Philippine Islands during the last four years has been no less remarkable than the diminution of the number of posts. It appears from the official reports of the War Department that the whole number of troops serving in the Philippine Islands since the 30th of June, 1898 (the date of our first landing in Manila), to May 1, 1902, was 4,006 officers and 122,787 men.

The maximum strength, as appears by official reports in the Philippine Islands at any one time, including officers and men, was in the month of December, 1900, when it aggregated 69,420. Since that date there has been a gradual but steady retirement of our force as civil rule has been extended, and I will insert here a table showing the progressive reduction of our forces in the archipelago during last year.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are only 33,000 there to-day.

Mr. BURROWS. The official table I present discloses the facts.

1901.

January	67,393
February	61,924
March	55,781
April	57,940
May	55,155
June	50,074
July	49,227
August	47,354
September	43,283
October	43,145
November	43,251
December	37,072

1902.

January	36,944
February (latest report)	33,830

The estimated strength of troops there at present is about 32,000, including Hospital Corps, and exclusive of Philippine scouts.

In this connection it should be noted that orders have already been issued by the Secretary of War for the further withdrawal of troops from the Philippines, and it is safe to say that by the time Congress shall next assemble in regular session the military forces in the Philippines will be reduced to 18,000, or possibly 15,000, men.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question in this connection?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if there is as yet any disciplined and armed force of Filipinos in the service of our Government; if, from the friendly persons whom we understand to be there in such large numbers, any force has been armed and officered by Filipinos?

Mr. BURROWS. I will say in answer that we have provided for a constabulary force.

Mr. HOAR. I am not speaking of constables. I am speaking of soldiers.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know that we have any considerable force of enlisted natives in the military service.

Mr. HOAR. Is there as yet any body of Filipinos enlisted, armed, and disciplined, with Filipino officers, trusted with sword or gun; and if so, what is the number of such soldiers?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Michigan permit me?

Mr. BURROWS. I will yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the exception of the last word, "soldiers," there is. There is a force which we have recruited with great care, consisting exclusively so far as the rank and file are concerned of Filipinos, which is armed, uniformed, and drilled.

Mr. HOAR. And disciplined?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Armed and uniformed and disciplined by American officers. My recollection upon the particular point I am going to mention now is not accurate, but I think the third-class inspectors, so called, are Filipinos.

Mr. HOAR. As to the number?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As to the total number, the total of the armed and disciplined constabulary——

Mr. HOAR. No; I mean Filipinos.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am speaking of Filipinos, just as the Senator from Massachusetts speaks of Filipinos.

Mr. HOAR. I am not asking about constables.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You used the word "soldiers."

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The situation is that there is now, and rapidly increasing up to the maximum number of 5,000 men, an armed, uniformed, disciplined, drilled force of Filipinos under the control of American officers called inspectors.

Mr. BURROWS. I think——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I put the question to the Senator from Michigan and not to anyone else. While I am quite delighted to have an answer from any gentleman who has investigated it, it does not help me to say there is something else there than about which I inquired.

I think it would be a very interesting thing, in regard to our knowledge of the real reconciliation, to know whether or not we can have a regiment of armed, disciplined, Filipino soldiers, officered by Filipinos—whether that time has yet come. It does not help the answer to that question to get up and talk about constabulary and about men governed by American inspectors. They are not a body of men who can combine. After the war, when we had disturbed times in the South, during reconstruction, they would not, in certain places, allow the negroes to form military companies. That is power. Now, if men are on your side——

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator pardon me——

Mr. HOAR. And if you trust them with power, we want to know it.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the Senator has his answer.

Mr. HOAR. It has not been made. There has not been any answer made to my question—not the slightest.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. We have had in the Army, not in the constabulary at all, as high as 8,000 Filipino troops. I think I have the figures correct. Some of the generals before our committee were questioned in regard to it and testified to the loyalty of those troops. General Hughes said that the percentage——

Mr. HOAR. I do not mean Macabebes, but Filipinos.

Mr. LODGE. Macabebes are Filipinos. They are Christianized Filipinos of the same race exactly.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, well.

Mr. LODGE. They are of precisely the same race as the others. There is no difference between them.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One moment. Not only Macabebes but others. We had at one time as many as 5,000 Macabebes. We had other enlisted Filipinos in other islands where there are no Macabebes at all. In General Hughes's division we had Filipinos enlisted, Visayans, and the General stated, whom I asked about their fidelity—said that the percentage of desertion among them was less than among the American troops, notwithstanding the fact that desertion among the American troops in those distant islands was exceedingly small. He stated that they were very loyal and very faithful and did very good work.

Mr. HOAR. That is an answer.

Mr. BURROWS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts, who has given his colleague the information as to the number of enlisted natives. It, however, in no way affected the statement I was making that the United States has steadily withdrawn its military force, and it will be still further reduced so that by the 1st of next December or the 1st of January, 1903, the military forces of the United States in the islands will not exceed 18,000 and probably not more than 15,000.

It will thus be seen that the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands have been almost entirely relieved of the severities of military rule and are in the full enjoyment of a large measure of civil liberty and peaceful government—larger than they ever before enjoyed during four hundred years of Spanish rule.

Mr. President, at this point with the work of pacification and the establishment of orderly government so nearly accomplished, it is proposed to abandon this policy and commit the fate of these islands to their native inhabitants. They are to be permitted to undertake the experiment of establishing an independent government. The difficulty, in my judgment, with the proposition of the minority to give independent government to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands lies in the fact, in the first place, that they are not now capable of establishing and maintaining such a government. If I believed them capable of doing so, I would for one unhesitatingly accord it to them. I hate a tyrant, whether an individual or a nation, and I commiserate a slave, whether a man or a people.

I was profoundly impressed, as was the Senate and the country, with the recent utterances of the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts, whose words will not soon be forgotten; and, indeed, it will be a sad day for the Republic when such patriotic sentiments find no responsive chord in the hearts of the American people. And I believe if the time shall ever come when a majority of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands shall desire and be able to establish an independent and stable government insuring protection to life, liberty, and property, and the performance of international obligations, the American people will gladly accord to them the full measure of national independence.

In support of the proposition that the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands are not now capable of self-government, I desire to quote some authorities which ought to come home to the Senate and the country with convincing force.

It is idle to talk and speculate about a free, independent, and stable government with a people who are not capable of forming or maintaining it. I desire to read from the report of the Taft Commission, a commission which has been on the ground, and which certainly ought to know as much about the subject as we do. I read from the report, at page 82:

> While the peoples of the Philippine Islands ardently desire a full measure of rights and liberties, they do not, in the opinion of the Commission, generally desire independence. Hundreds of witnesses testified on this subject to the Commission and its individual members, and, though they represented all possible varieties of opinion—many of them being in sympathy with the insurgents—they were uniform in their testimony that, in view of the ignorance and political inexperience of the masses of the people, the multiplicity of languages, the divergencies of culture and mode of life, and the obstacles to intercommunication, an independent sovereign Philippine state was at the present time neither possible nor desirable, even if its poverty and internal weakness and lack of coherence would not invite, and the dissatisfaction of aliens entail, the intervention of foreign powers, with the inevitable result of the division of the archipelago among them and the disappearance forever of the dream and hope of a united and self-governing Philippine commonwealth. The Philippine Islands, even the most patriotic declare, can not at the present time stand alone. They need the tutelage and protection of the United States.

The first Commission concluded their report on this subject (on page 120) by saying, among other things:

> The Filipinos are wholly unprepared for independence, and if independence were given to them they could not maintain it.

The second or Taft Commission in their first report, dated November 30, 1900, say in speaking of the investigation made by the Commission (p. 15):

> Many witnesses were examined as to the form of government best adapted to these islands and satisfactory to the people. All the evidence taken, no matter what the bias of the witness, showed that the masses of the people are ignorant, credulous, and childlike, and that under any government the electoral franchise must be much limited, because the large majority will not, for a long time, be capable of intelligently exercising it.

And on page 17 they add—

> From all the information we can get it seems clear that a great majority of the people long for peace and are entirely willing to accept the establishment of a government under the supremacy of the United States.

In the second report of the Taft Commission, so called, dated October 15, 1901, pages 19 and 20, they state, referring to this subject:

> The theory upon which the Commission is proceeding is that the only possible method of instructing the Filipino people in methods of free institutions and self-government is to make a government partly of Americans and partly of Filipinos, giving the Americans the ultimate control for some time to come. In our last report we pointed out that the great body of the people were ignorant, superstitious, and at present incapable of understanding any government but that of absolutism.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Meantime it is necessary by practical lessons and actual experience to eliminate from the minds of the more intelligent part of the community who form the electorate those ideas of absolutism in government and to impress the conception of a limitation upon power which is now so difficult for them to understand.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> As the government proceeds, this association in actual government will certainly form a nucleus of Filipinos, earnest, intelligent, patriotic, who will become familiar with practical free government and civil liberty. This saving remnant will grow as the years go on, and in it will be the hope of this people.
>
> How long, it is asked, must this education be continued before real results will be accomplished? Of course it is impossible to tell. Certainly a generation—perhaps two generations—will be needed.

These are the deliberately formed and expressed opinions of both commissions sent to the Philippine Islands with instructions to inquire into the conditions of their people.

And now let me supplement the conclusion of the Commission with some testimony taken by the Commission while on the ground and in the islands as to the capacity of these people for self-government.

The first Philippine Commission, under instructions from the President, heard the testimony of numerous witnesses, and among other subjects took evidence on the question of the ability of the Filipinos to conduct self-government. I submit a few extracts from that testimony.

Señor Cayetano S. Arellano is a prominent lawyer in the Philippines, born in Manila, and is at present chief justice of the supreme court of the islands. He ought to know as much about it as we do. To him President Schurman propounded this question:

> Q. Can't we give these people a local self-government?
>
> A. In my poor opinion, no. We do not believe them capable of themselves forming a governmanent of themselves, an autonomous government. That is my opinion.
>
> By Colonel DENBY:
>
> Q. What reforms do you think the people desire, and what do you think would be advisable?
>
> A. They desired, for example, to have a representative in the Cortes in Madrid; they desired, furthermore, a part in the administrative government of the islands and the enjoyment of liberty, of which they were deprived. The question of independence was not then raised among them and not until just now—of late.
>
> By President SCHURMAN:
>
> Q. Please state whether they are capable of governing their pueblos without any intervention on the part of the general government at Manila. There are pueblos, there are provinces, and there is the general government at Manila. I am beginning with pueblos, large and small, and I ask you whether the people are capable of governing them without any intervention on the part of the government at Manila?
>
> A. No.
>
> Q. Do you think the provinces are capable of governing themselves without any intervention from the federal government at Manila?
>
> A. To a certain extent, yes. In certain provinces, as, for example, Pampanga, the people are sufficiently enlightened to govern themselves in a certain manner; but independent general government, no.

Enrique Lopez, a physician, who was born and has always resided in the Philippines, testified as follows:

> Q. Please state briefly the scheme of government which you recommend for the Philippine Islands.
>
> A. I have seen in many of the proclamations the word "autonomy." Autonomy is a word that covers a great deal of ground; it is a word of a very large scope. The American Commission undoubtedly has the greatest desire to give proper liberties to the people, and I wish to present my plan to you. If it is not exactly what the Commission desires, of course there will be various changes in it—modifications, but that is for the Commission and not for me to meddle with. The plan is to have five governors, under the sovereignty of America. The governor-general should be an American, and the sovereignty undoubtedly should be in the United States, without speaking of the army or navy, or anything else.
>
> Q. The political sovereignty?
>
> A. My plan is to have five ministers. A minister of the treasury, of internal affairs—five different ministers of the general government, and they are to be Filipinos partly, Filipinos according to the amplitude of the autonomy. According as the Commission decides, the number of employees, Filipinos and Americans, would be raised.

Señor Pablo Antonio Martinez, a lawyer, who has resided in Manila for twelve years, testified:

> Q. Do you think the Philippine people capable of self-government?
>
> A. I do not believe they are at present.

Q. Do you think they are capable of governing their own pueblos?
A. No, sir.

By Colonel DENBY:

Q. Don't you think that there could be elected to a legislature to hold its sessions in these islands enough intelligent men to pass local laws?
A. How large an assembly? I can answer your question if you will name me the number.
Q. Say 100 for all the islands.
A. I think they might be found by a careful search.

Adolph Von Bosch, a Belgian merchant, who has resided in the Philippines about ten years, testified:

Q. Are they favorable to the Americans, the people?
A. The ordinary people, yes. The workmen, the lower classes and middle classes, those who have interests there, are certainly most decidedly in favor of the Americans. The leading military men and those who call themselves the governors are decidedly not.
Q. The military men are against the Americans?
A. Yes.
Q. Because they have something to lose?
A. Yes; they would lose their positions. It is, according to my view, only a matter of interest which dictates their conduct.
Q. I suppose the great majority of people, then, favor the Americans?
A. Oh, yes; the entire mass——
Q. Eighty or 90 per cent?
A. Put it down at 60.
Q. You think safely 60 per cent?
A. Sixty per cent. I don't think the lower classes have any idea—they have no idea at all about it; no fixed idea.
Q. They have not?
A. But I am sure if they get an American government——
Q. That is to say, they want a good government?
A. Yes; they want a good government. They want to be fairly treated.
Q. Would the Vicols be capable of governing themselves?
A. I don't think so.
Q. Would the Tagalogs?
A. There are some Tagalogs who would be, but it would be a small minority. They would not have sufficient men to form a government.
Q. But the Tagalogs would be fit to occupy subordinate places in the government?
A. Yes; and even of the Vicols there would be—there are some very good men who occupied civil positions under the Spanish Government.
Q. But you think it would be necessary to have Americans at the head?
A. Yes; no government could last for six months under Tagalog rule, according to my opinion.

Angel Fabie, a native Filipino, and formerly captain of a port by appointment from Aguinaldo, and his secretary of marine, says:

Q. Are the people capable of governing themselves?
A. No, sir; they are not educated. They are not educated people, but by and by, when they are more educated after the American fashion, they will be able to govern themselves, and the people will be peaceable and orderly.
Q. And how much American intervention is necessary here to govern them now?
A. I don't know; but, in my opinion, they will be better under American supervision they will be better off with more American officials.

A. Kuensle, a Swiss merchant, importer, who had resided in Manila for fifteen years, referring to the matter of self-government, said:

By General MACARTHUR:

Q. From that you would infer they are not capable of self-government?
A. Certainly not. They would have big fights among themselves.

By President SCHURMAN:

Q. Could they govern themselves in the provinces?
A. No; never. Those who would govern would simply squeeze the people, and after a while dissatisfaction and internal squabbles would come on. They are certainly unfit for self-government.
Q. Are they capable of education in that line?
A. Certainly. I believe there are few natives so intelligent as the Filipinos; but a very small percentage have any education so far. It might be a possibility some thirty or forty years from now for them to know what self-government means.
Q. Have they ever had any example of good government here?
A. No; it has gone from bad to worse.
Q. So that they will need both example and experience?
A. Yes, sir.

Señor Benito Legarda, a resident of Manila, and at one time vice-president of the Filipino congress, so called, referring to the money paid and agreed to be paid to Aguinaldo at the time he left the Philippines for Hongkong, says—I need not read that portion of his testimony, as it relates to another subject:

Q. Did they have at any time during the course of that revolution the idea of fighting for their independence?
A. No; I never heard this word "independence" spoken, nor do I think that they are capable of understanding it even up to this time.

Señor Manuel Xerez, a Filipino, born in Manila, by profession a physician, commenting on the ability of the Filipinos to maintain a government, says:

Q. Do you believe that these people, at this time, are capable of establishing and maintaining a republican form of government, or do you think it better to wait for some years of probation?
A. I think it is too soon at present.
Q. Would you advise that for some time the government should be administered by persons appointed by the United States and that by degrees a republican form of government elected by the people should be established, or would you advise that a republican form of government should be established immediately?
A. I think it should be a mixed government; that the subordinate positions in towns and in provinces could be filled by Filipinos, but always under the supervision of another, who should be an American.
Q. Then do you think, after a given number of years, this government might be turned over to the Filipinos to run themselves?
A. Not in a few years. It would require some time, for it would be necessary to change a great many evil practices here. I think that the Filipinos will need the direction of the Americans for many years. They are educated very much in the Spanish way, and it is necessary to get the Spanish ways eradicated little by little.

This is a part and but a small portion of the testimony of prominent men formerly connected with the Aguinaldo government, who tell us that those people are not capable of self-government.

Therefore, Mr. President, to surrender our sovereignty now over the islands, as proposed by the minority, would, I believe, result most disastrously to the inhabitants and involve the future of the archipelago in revolution and ruin.

AMERICAN PROTECTORATE.

It will hardly do, with these conditions, to talk about Philippine independence under an American protectorate. We would hardly assume to answer for the acts of a people unfitted for government, over whose conduct we would have no control.

President McKinley, speaking upon this question, as you remember, in his annual message to Congress December 5, 1899, said:

The future government of the Philippines rests with the Congress of the United States. Few graver responsibilities have ever been confided to us. If we accept them in a spirit worthy of our race and our traditions, a great opportunity comes with them. The islands lie under the shelter of our flag. They are ours by every title of law and equity. They can not be abandoned. If we desert them, we leave them at once to anarchy and finally to barbarism. We fling them, a golden apple of discord, among the rival powers, no one of which could permit another to seize them unquestioned. Their rich plains and valleys would be the scene of endless strife and bloodshed. The advent of Dewey's fleet in Manila Bay instead of being, as we hope, the dawn of a new day of freedom and progress, will have been the beginning of an era of misery and violence worse than any which has darkened their unhappy past.

The suggestion has been made that we could renounce our authority over the islands and, giving them independence, could retain a protectorate over them. This proposition will not be found, I am sure, worthy of your serious attention. Such an arrangement would involve at the outset a cruel breach of faith. It would place the peaceable and loyal majority, who ask nothing better than to accept our authority, at the mercy of the minority of armed insurgents. It would make us responsible for the acts of the insurgent leaders and give us no power to control them. It would charge us with the task of protecting them against each other and defending them against any foreign power with which they chose to quarrel. In short, it would take from the Congress of the United States the power of declaring war and vest that tremendous prerogative in the Tagal leader of the hour.

What says the Commission upon this subject? Let me read a word from the report of the first or Schurman Commission upon this point—independence with an American protectorate:

The idea of a protectorate entertained by the insurgent leaders, under which they should enjoy all the powers of an independent sovereign government, and the Americans should assume all obligations to foreign nations for their good use of those powers, would create an impossible situation for the United States. Internal dominion and external responsibility must go hand in hand. Under the chimerical scheme of protection cherished by Aguinaldo, if a foreigner lost his life or property through a miscarriage of justice in a Philippine court or in consequence of a governor's failure to suppress a riot, then the United States would be responsible for indemnity to the foreigner's government, though without possessing the power of punishing the offenders, of preventing such maladministration, or of protecting itself against similar occurrences in the future. Nor could the liability to foreign nations be reduced without permitting them directly to seek redress, and such a course would, it is to be feared, speedily lead to the appropriation of the Philippine Islands by the great powers, who would not need to seek far for pretenses for intervention.

But, Mr. President, the latest and I may say the most convincing evidence upon the propriety of turning the islands over to their inhabitants to establish for themselves such a government as they may choose we find in the testimony given before our committee this very year.

EFFECT OF AMERICAN WITHDRAWAL.

Senator MCCOMAS asked this question:

What would happen to them if we withdrew in this fashion?
Governor TAFT. The personal hostility between leading Filipinos at times has been so great as to lead to bloody measures. How far they would be carried here I have no idea. That is conjectural.
I should like to say, if I may, although I had not expected to come to this part of the discussion now, that it is a very logical and reasonable proposition on its face to say, Will not the insurrection come to an end; will not there be general peace and tranquillity if you promise to give these people independence when they shall be fitted for it? That proposition, put in that way, seems to have a great deal of force.

That is the wrong paper. The paper I wanted to read is as follows——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, as he is making a very interesting argument, I should like to hear Governor Taft's answer to that qestion.

Mr. BURROWS. I shall read it in a moment, on another point, but it is not on the point I am now discussing.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. BURROWS. Upon the point of their capacity for self-government the governor was asked in relation to that provision of the minority bill which declares "that the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government." I read from page 327 of the hearings before our committee:

Senator MCCOMAS. I was going to ask how long that would take?
Governor TAFT. I doubt if the people can establish a stable government. I assume that this is without the aid of American guidance and control. If it is with the aid of American guidance and control, then the time taken must be indefinitely in the future.
Senator MCCOMAS. Generations, probably?
Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.
Senator MCCOMAS. That was to be my next question—how many years we must continue to occupy and govern the archipelago until the people had established a stable government. You have said many generations.

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir; I think if it means what it may be inferred to mean, it means that the generals of the insurrecto forces shall call together a number of delegates and shall go through the form of making a government, and then when that government has its offices filled at once the transfer of sovereignty shall take place.

There would result after that—it might last six months, it might last a year—but there would result anarchy and interference with the rights of individuals and interference with the rights of vested interests in which foreign governments are concerned, which would require the United States at once to step back and begin over the work which it had been doing, and it would find itself where it was two years ago.

I make that statement, first, on the experience of the Aguinaldo government. For eight months Aguinaldo had a government in Luzon. It consisted of the congress at Malolos, the members of which were appointed by him, many of them distinguished lawyers and educated men from Manila largely.

Thereupon he appointed governors for various provinces, and the outrages that were committed by those governors in the conduct of government and the collection of taxes, the corruption which existed through the territory over which he had control, leave no doubt as to what the result would be, that a similar government would be established—and I assume that is what this substitute means—within a short period of time, and would be followed by the withdrawal of American sovereignty.

Secondly, the local control which the educated people of each province have over the ignorant people there would enable disappointed politicians in any particular province to set up a little force by itself, and that inevitably, in the course of one or two years, would produce the state of anarchy of which I have spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think, in this connection, we having withdrawn and a state of anarchy having arisen, it would probably lead to the partition of the islands among other powers?

Governor TAFT. It is a question of opinion as to the interest which foreigners take in the islands. They are called among foreigners whom I know in Manila the gems of the Orient. The interest that Japan has taken in the islands the records of the military department will show. The interest that other governments would take in the islands may be judged of by reference to the foreign capital invested there. The Germans have a great deal of capital. The English have a good deal.

Again, on page 341, Governor Taft says:

I wish to impress the fact that were the government turned over to those who profess to be the leaders in the insurrection to-day, among the irreconcilables or intransigentes, though not in arms, the idea of civil liberty would be the last idea which would be practically carried into effect.

Senator ALLISON. That is, liberty regulated by law?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir. The tendency of all governments under them would be toward absolutism, an oligarchy which would mean that the presidente of the village would control absolutely the village; the governor would control the province, and the head of the government would control the governors. The idea of elevation and protection to that indifferent mass of 90 per cent would be possibly professed, but would fall far short of actual realization; and, therefore, offering to them independence now is offering to them—that is, to the 90 per cent of the people to whom I have referred—a condition of things which would be as far from enjoyment of free institutions as it is possible to imagine.

But, Mr. President, although they are not capable of self-government at present, it is said, Why not fix a time now and declare the date when the United States will surrender its sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and permit their inhabitants to establish their own government in their own way and receive recognition as a separate and independent nationality? Why not now declare that at some time in the future we will leave the islands to the government of their own people?

Mr. President, to my mind the answer to that question is simple and complete.

In the first place it is impossible now to determine that date with any degree of certainty; and in the second place if it were possible, such a declaration would thwart the very purpose the advocates of such a proposition have in view—the establishment of a stable and independent government. It would arrest all development, breed innumerable dissensions, ferment discord within and invite assaults from without, and end in the absorption and division of the archipelago among the naval powers of the world and crush the last hope of independent government for the Filipino people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I simply wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Governor Taft testified before the committee when asked that very question that such a declaration would prevent that very thing.

Mr. BURROWS. I was about to allude to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BURROWS. I am very glad the Senator from Indiana called my attention to it, but before referring to that I wish to call attention to what the first Commission say upon this very question of the inexpediency of fixing a time when the United States will surrender its sovereignty over these islands:

It is, of course, a quite different proposal to relinquish sovereignty over the Philippine Islands as soon as the Filipinos are capable of governing themselves. So far as such a policy rests upon conceptions of American duty, convenience, or expediency, it does not fall to this Commission to consider it. But, from the point of view of the Philippines, it is proper and, indeed, imperative to observe that, in the opinion of the Commission, the consideration of that proposal must be qualified by two conditions: First, it is impossible, even approximately, to fix a time for the withdrawal of American sovereignty over the archipelago, as no one can foresee when the diverse peoples of the Philippine Islands may be molded together into a nationality capable of exercising all the functions of independent self-government. They are certainly incapable of such a work to-day; whether in one or more generations they can be trained to it only the future can disclose; and, second, if American sovereignty over the archipelago should ever be relinquished, if all American authority over the people should ever cease and determine, then the United States should renounce all obligations to foreign nations for the good conduct of the Filipinos. Undoubtedly the raising of the American flag in the Philippine Islands has entailed great responsibilities upon us; but to guarantee external protection while renouncing internal dominion is no way of escaping from them; on the contrary, while you pull down the flag you only pile up difficulties.

Let me now quote briefly from the testimony of Governor Taft before our committee, which the Senator from Massachusetts desired I should read, bearing upon the advisability of making a promise as to the future independence of the Philippine people.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator, before he proceeds to that point, if he will kindly answer the question, Where does the proposition which he is now attacking, of fixing a time, come from? I have not heard one as far as I know.

Mr. BURROWS. It has come repeatedly in the course of the debate from the opponents of this measure. In the course of the discussion it has been frequently asserted that it would be wise to declare when the people of the islands could expect the relinquishment of American sovereignty, and the fact that we have not done so has been the subject of severe animadversion.

Mr. HOAR. I dislike to put my recollection against that of the Senator. It has so happened, unless I am oblivious quite, that I never heard a statement to that effect.

Mr. BURROWS. My recollection is that I have heard it frequently.

Mr. HOAR. The proposition, as I understand it, and as far as I know from the beginning—I do not mean that I know personally about it, but I know generally—is that you were bound to say what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has said very frankly in his speech, with which I was much pleased, that if they were fit for a government of their own they were entitled to it on American principles. My contention has been that such a declaration would have removed the war and this whole business. Now, has anybody said that a time should be fixed?

Mr. BURROWS. I have heard it repeatedly.

Mr. HOAR. I never heard it in my life.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few moments longer. Governor Taft in testifying upon this point confirmed what I say, that such a declaration at this time would be most unfortunate. I quote Governor Taft, as follows:

The condition of the people of the Philippine Islands to-day is such that the extension of the constitutional restrictions which apply in a State would very much interfere with the establishment of a stable and successful government.

A government ought to be established under American guidance which shall form a stable government, by which and under which the Filipinos shall gradually improve their knowledge of what is individual liberty and what is a constitutional government, and subsequently the time will come when the United States and the Filipino people together can agree upon what their relations shall be.

Whether a colony—I mean a quasi-independent colony, as Australia and Canada are to England—an independent state, or a State of the Union, is a question so far in the future, dependent upon the success of the operation of the stable government, that I have not myself reached a conclusion on the subject.

QUESTION OF STATEHOOD.

Senator CARMACK. You think, then, it is an open question whether the people of the Philippine Islands—islands populated with eight or ten million Asiatics—should be admitted to the full rights of American citizenship or whether or not an archipelago so populated should be admitted to statehood in the Union? You think it is an open question?

Governor TAFT. I think it is a question that I would not answer two or three generations before it will arise. I think the great evil to-day is the discussion of something that is utterly impossible of settlement to-day. The thing the Filipino people need to-day is a stable government under the guidance of American control, teaching them what individual liberty is and training them to a knowledge of self-government, and when they have that, the question of what relations shall then exist between the islands and this country may be settled between them and the citizens of the United States.

But to attempt to decide in advance something that it is utterly impossible wisely to decide now, it seems to me, with deference to those who differ with me, very unreasonable.

Senator CARMACK. I was speaking of it from the standpoint of the people of the United States, as to whether you thought it was a question of possibility——

Governor TAFT. What the people of the United States may think, or what they ought to think, fifty or a hundred years from now I do not venture to say.

Senator PATTERSON. It is a century problem?

Governor TAFT. It is quite possible, as we say in our report, that it may take a generation, or two generations; but no matter how long it is, it is, in my judgment, the duty of the United States to continue a government there which shall teach those people individual liberty, which shall lift them to a point of civilization of which I believe they are capable, and which shall make them rise to call the name of the United States blessed.

I have thought over this subject a great deal; we have become intensely interested in the problem, and of course motives, the charge of which we can not avoid, are given to us in reaching such a conclusion; but if I ever was convinced of anything in my life it is that the problem which the United States there has is a great problem worthy of its solution, and which, when solved by establishing a stable government there under the guidance of American control, will redound to the honor and the benefit of this country, and I am proud to have to do with that work.

Senator CARMACK. You say the great trouble in all this matter has been that we are thinking about what may happen a generation or two generations from now. If the possession of the Philippine Islands by the United States involves the possibility of an archipelago 7,000 miles away, inhabited by people of an Asiatic race, becoming a State of the Union fifty or a hundred years from now, do you not think it is a question which deserves consideration now? Do you not think we ought to consider what may happen fifty years from now?

Governor TAFT. No, sir; and I will say why. Nothing that can to-day be said to the Filipino people in the nature of a promise as to the form of government which may take place after an established stable government shall be formed could be otherwise than misleading to them and confusing in establishing that government.

It would at once begin the agitation among those who desire that separation to have that separation, because, in their opinion, they are fitted for it at once. It would drive away from the support of the stable government that conservative element who are strongly in favor of American guidance and control, because they would anticipate an early change.

They would think they would early be left without the support which the presence of the American Government necessarily gives, and the promise of something in the future, instead of helping to establish, would render unstable any government which was attempted to be established.

* * * * * * * *

My proposition is that it is the duty of the United States to establish there a government suited to the present possibilities of the people, which shall gradually change, conferring more and more right upon the people to govern themselves, thus educating them in self-government, until their knowledge of government, their knowledge of individual liberty shall be such that further action may taken either by giving them statehood or by making them a quasi-independent government like Canada and Australia, or if they desire it, by independence.

My point, and the point I insist upon, if I may be pardoned for using that expression, is that the discussion to-day of independence, of statehood, of a colonial form of government, in the sense of a permanent relation of colony to mother country, is altogether aside from the questions which are now presented.

Those are, and those concern, the establishment of a firm and stable government in which the Filipino people shall learn self-government by exercising it partially.

* * * * * * * *

Senator MCCOMAS. What would happen to them if we withdrew in this fashion?

Governor TAFT. The personal hostility between leading Filipinos at times has been so great as to lead to bloody measures. How far they would be carried here I have no idea. That is conjectural.

I should like to say, if I may, although I had not expected to come to this part of the discussion now, that it is a very logical and reasonable proposition on its face to say, Will not the insurrection come to an end; will not there be general peace and tranquillity if you promise to give these people independence when they shall be fitted for it? That proposition, put in that way, seems to have a great deal of force.

Practically the effect of such a promise would be exactly the opposite from that which the argument presupposes. The promise to give them independence when they are fit for it would be accepted by them as a promise to give them independence certainly during the lifetime of the present generation. It would at once bring into a discussion of every issue the question whether now were not the people ready for independence. It would drive out capital; prevent capital from coming there; and upon the investment of capital, the building of railroads, the enlargement of vision of the Filipino people, much of our hope of progress must depend.

In addition to that, by reason of the constant agitation as to the granting of this independence in a year or two years or three years or a decade, it would at once discourage the sincere efforts of the educated Filipinos who are with us to-day in building up a stable government. For these reasons I think such a promise as that would be a great mistake.

Senator MCCOMAS. Could you, in deciding the question of leaving the sovereignty of the islands, determine now, from your several years' experience there, to which inhabitants you would leave it, with their rivalries and confusion of tongues?

Governor TAFT. Of course, if you left the islands to anybody you would leave them, I assume, to some sort of a committee or parliament, appointed or selected, who would be dominated probably by those whose violent methods have continued the guerrilla warfare; and that such a body could be created by proclamation within a reasonable time I have no doubt. But that it would not constitute a stable government; that it would give rise to anarchy and division between the tribes and between individuals of power and force, I have no doubt.

And so, Mr. President, we have the testimony of Governor Taft, that great jurist and administrator, fresh from the field of his labors in these islands, confirming the unwisdom of surrendering our sovereignty and abandoning these islands.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, so I repeat now, "we have come to the parting of the ways." The responsibility is upon us, and it can not be avoided or postponed. Upon the choice of this hour depends, I believe, the honor of the Republic and the future well-being of the Filipino people.

In my judgment the course proposed by the majority as outlined by their bill is the only safe and honorable way for this nation to take, committing the future to the enlightened judgment of those who are to come after us.

And let us trust that by pursuing this course with steadfastness and courage there will ultimately be realized the hope of the dead President, that "all the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands will come to look back with gratitude to the day when God gave victory to American arms at Manila, and set their land under the sovereignty and the protection of the people of the United States."

APPENDIX.

SYNOPSIS OF REPORTS OF GOVERNORS OF PROVINCES IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS SUBMITTED TO THE CIVIL GOVERNOR OF THE PHILIPPINES, AS PRINTED IN THE HEARINGS BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON THE PHILIPPINES BETWEEN JANUARY 1, 1902, AND THE PRESENT DATE, MAY 8, 1902.

ABRA PROVINCE.

On pages 429 to 433 and pages 212 and 461 to 470 of the hearings are found reports of W. H. C. Bowen, United States Army, governor of Abra Province, wherein he says:

There is a feeling of confidence and good-fellowship throughout the province. The people are hard-working, and peace and quiet reigns throughout all sections. They need and request industrial schools, especially men to teach the proper method of curing tobacco, which will be the wealth of the province. The people are contented, comparatively prosperous, and happy. The general conditions are good, and will remain so until some hot-head springs up, who, for personal reasons and private ends, may attempt to stir up strife. No people are perfect, but these people of Abra approach it as far as lies in their power.

It makes mention of one English teacher attempting to impart knowledge to 200 native children. After eight months of teaching two young men, owing to their efficiency in the English language, were appointed teachers of English, and at the end of the school year the superintendent expects to recommend at least four more for such positions.

ALBAY PROVINCE.

On pages 197 and 198 of the hearings is the report of Arlington U. Betts, provincial governor of Albay Province, wherein he says:

At present perfect peace prevails throughout the province. The constabulary have been and are doing excellent work, and their services have been highly commented upon by the military officers of this province. Both the military and civil officers are in perfect accord, there being no friction whatever.

I am informed by leading citizens that there never was a time in the history of the province when it was in so prosperous a condition as it is at present, and every man in the province who desires to work has plenty to do. The wages at present being paid are greater than they have ever been. The sale of hemp is bringing an enormous amount of money into the province, and the government has no difficulty in collecting its taxes, which give ample revenue to conduct the government on a very liberal basis. Public buildings, highways, and bridges are being put in repair and new ones erected.

Some idea of the enormous business being done can be had in the fact that in the town of Legaspi alone over $1,000,000 changes hands every thirty days. Schools have been established in all the pueblos, most of them having American instructors, and the progress they are making is exceptionally gratifying.

Governor Betts at the time of his appointment as governor was a captain in the Forty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, which regiment has subsequently been mustered out of service, and he has continued to occupy the position. At the recent election he was elected to succeed himself as governor for the ensuing term, and his election has been confirmed by the Commission.

AMBOS CAMARINES PROVINCE.

On pages 474 to 484 of the hearings is found the report of Thomas Ross, governor of Ambos Camarines Province, in which he says:

Absolute peace prevails in all sections. It is certain that there is not an armed insurgent within the borders of this province, and the people are loyally supporting the government. It has for some time been evident to me, and the opinion has been strengthened by my recent tours of this province, that the people are for permanent peace and have full confidence in the civil government now in force in the archipelago. Very little is said in this locality as to the desire of the people as to the future form of government, the unanimous sentiment appearing to be to await the progress of events with full confidence in the honor and justice of the American Government and people, believing that the future will be properly provided for, and that their rights and interests will be properly guarded.

He adds:

A good start has been made in educational work; 32 American teachers have arrived, and all towns without teachers are persistently calling for them, and 20 more can be employed in this province advantageously.

Thomas Ross was appointed governor by the Philippine Commission, and was thereafter elected by the people to succeed himself for the ensuing term, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

ANTIQUE PROVINCE.

On pages 486 to 492 of the hearings is found a report of Capt. W. A. Holbrook, provincial governor of the province of Antique, wherein he says:

There are 114,000 to 125,000 people in the province. Since March 22, 1901, when General Fullon, with 34 officers and 255 enlisted men, surrendered, there has not been a single act of hostility against the Americans. These people were allowed to take the oath of allegiance and return to their respective homes. The inhabitants of this province greeted the Commission with triumphal arches when they came to organize civil government.

Courts of first instance and justice have been organized.

Some minerals are found in the province, and generally the people are successful and contented.

Leandro Fullon, the former General Fullon above referred to, has been elected to and accepted the position of provincial governor under United States authority, and his election has been confirmed by the Commission.

BATAAN PROVINCE.

On pages 497 and 498 of the hearings is found a report of J. H. Goldman, provincial governor of Bataan Province, who states that—

Local governments have been established in all the municipalities, and they are conducted in an active, judicious, and praiseworthy manner. There has not been a single abuse or breach of trust committed by any official since the establishment of civil government in the province.

The municipal funds are in a good condition. All the towns are accumulating money, much of which is being used in constructing schoolhouses and other improvements. English is being taught in all the towns of the province. Public schools are aided and encouraged by the people, and, with a single exception, the attendance is larger than the teachers can instruct with good results.

Governor Goldman closes by adding:

In my opinion, the province is free from any taint of insurrection and will always remain so.

BENGUET PROVINCE.

On page 361 of the hearings is a telegraphic report from Governor William F. Pack, of Benguet Province, dated Baguio, December 26, 1901, wherein he states:

Everything peaceful in this province. Just returned from tour over end province. Myself and Spanish secretary only white men in the party. No danger. This promising. Sentiment favorable to Americans.

BULACAN PROVINCE.

On page 191 of the hearings appears the report of José Serapio, governor of Bulacan Province, who says:

The province of Bulacan, under my charge, presents, politically considered, a sublime idea of its sincere gratitude and loyalty to the Government of the United States of America in the Philippine Archipelago. I am justified in this statement by that very revolutionary spirit shown by the province in past times, and the readiness with which the inhabitants recognized the laudable intentions of the Government of the great North American nation in regard to this country and the urgent need for becoming thoroughly penetrated with the transcendent importance of peace, being convinced that only under peace can the welfare and uplifting of the Philippines under American rule be effected.

He also says:

The province is enjoying unbroken peace, and its inhabitants, contented beyond measure with the establishment of civil rule in the Philippines, are doing all they can to strengthen that peace, thus showing their appreciation of the Government which now so wisely rules the destinies of this country.

Jose Serapio is a native Filipino, appointed provincial governor by the Philippine Commission.

MISCELLANEOUS.

As to the provinces of Rizal and Nueva Viscayas, no report from any officer appears in this record.

From the province of Tabayas the report of Governor Gardener has been considered elsewhere and a report from him called for as to statements made therein.

As to the provinces of Bohol, Cebu, Misámis, and Sorsogon, full reports are made, showing the disturbances which have occurred therein, with but little general information otherwise.

From the province of Batangas there is no report from the governor, the secretary submitting a general report only.

CAGAYAN PROVINCE.

On pages 361 and 362 of the hearings is a report of M. Gonzaga, governor of Cagayan Province, wherein he says:

Such is the general state of peace and tranquillity in the province, the inhabitants are busy with their usual occupations, which are mostly agricultural. A sincere proof of the affection and good will of the people toward the constituted government is their desire to learn English. In the municipalities which have American teachers the schools are assiduously visited by the children and grown-up people, not only of the pueblo, but of the neighboring pueblos which have no American teachers, and the latter are begging the superintendent of instruction to provide such teachers.

M. Gonzaga is a native Filipino, appointed governor by the Philippine Commission, subsequently reelected by the people for the ensuing term, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

CAPIZ PROVINCE.

On pages 210 and 211 and pages 1499 and 1512 of the hearings is found a report from S. Jugo Vidal, governor, and other officials of the province of Capiz, wherein he says:

So pronounced is the public spirit for the preservation of order and the maintenance of civil institutions that at the beginning of October last, shortly after the unhappy event at Balangiga, island of Samar, some bad patriots with perverse intentions spread a rumor that an outbreak was about to occur in this province, the result was that all the pueblos universally were vigilant in their desire to maintain peace and disposed to sacrifice themselves in the interest of order, as was reported by the presidentes of the pueblos in replying to recommendations made by this government.

Public instruction is giving very favorable results from the appointment of American teachers, and already the number of children who begin to speak English is quite large, and all of them are anxious to become acquainted with the modern American methods of instruction.

S. Jugo Vidal is a native Filipino and was appointed provincial governor by the Philippine Commission, and was subsequently elected to that position for the ensuing term by the vote of the people, and his election has been confirmed by the Commission.

CAVITE PROVINCE.

On page 199 of the hearings is found a report from Mariano Trias, provincial governor of the province of Cavite, who says:

I can assure you of the peace and order of my province, and that the civil authorities with the constabulary forces will be sufficient to maintain and preserve them.

From information gathered from a trip through the provinces organizing the municipalities, he adds:

I feel that I ought to entertain no doubt of the desire for peace by all the inhabitants.

Mariano Trias is a native Filipino; was appointed provincial governor of this province by the Philippine Commission; subsequently reelected to that position for the ensuing term by the people, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

Mariano Trias was a prominent Filipino, and at one time secretary of the treasury under the insurgent government. He was subsequently a general in active service in southern Luzon.

ILOCOS SUR PROVINCE.

On pages 193 and 194 of the hearings is found a report from M. Crisologe, provincial governor of Ilocos Sur Province, wherein he says:

Since the surrender of General Tinio with all his forces and of Father Aglipay with his men in May last this province has been completely pacified and all the pueblos enjoyed the tranquillity and personal security of normal times before the outbreak of the insurrection against Spain. As a consequence Americans and natives can visit all parts of the province with entire freedom and safety. The people are peacefully following their customary vocations to the extent that no one any longer remembers the war save through newspaper reports of engagements and skirmishes.

M. Crisologo is a native Filipino, appointed governor of this province by the Philippine Commission, subsequently elected to that position by the people, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

ILOCOS NORTE PROVINCE.

On pages 459 and 460 of the hearings is a report of Aguedo Agbayani, governor of Ilocos Norte Province, wherein he says:

The establishment of a provincial government in Ilocos Norte has caused a feeling of general satisfaction among the inhabitants, who have seen in it a favorable change in their political situation. Their conviction was furthermore confirmed by the organization of the municipalities of the province, to all of which the benefit of the new régime was extended.

Aguedo Agbayani is a native Filipino, and appointed governor of this province by the Philippine Commission.

PROVINCE OF ILOILO.

On pages 943 to 948 of the hearings is shown the report by Martin F. Delgato, governor, and other officers of Iloilo Province. The governor says:

The relations of this provincial government with the pueblos could not be more satisfactory than they are. Each of them in its own sphere is trying to do its duty.

It is true they have been compelled to suspend two presidentes (mayor), and he adds:

These are isolated cases and will serve as a caution to others, for this government is determined to enforce obedience to the law and either by admonitions or by punishments to wipe out forever from these pueblos every vestige of the past evil administration. There are schools in 51 pueblos, with an attendance of about 8,000 children. The kind welcome accorded the American teachers is demonstrated by the keen desire of the inhabitants to acquire and speak the English language, and it is desirable that there be stationed at least one teacher of English in each pueblo, so as to facilitate the diffusion of that language throughout the province.

Martin F. Delgato is a native Filipino, and was appointed governor by the Philippine Commission. He was subsequently reelected governor by the people to succeed himself for the ensuing term, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

ISABELA PROVINCE.

On pages 1512 to 1526 of the hearings is found a report of Capt. William H. Johnston, provincial governor of the province of Isabela, who says:

No bands of armed insurgents or ladrones have been reported within the province since the provincial government was organized. I have gone without escort from one end of the province to the other, and the provincial treasurer has made several journeys collecting taxes equally without escort. I consider that portion of the province settled by Christian tribes as perfectly tranquilized as any State of the Union. Financially the province is in a very satisfactory condition. Over $14,000 gold was collected as taxes, and they have met their obligations with a surplus.

In concluding his report, he says:

The people of this province seem to yield sincerely to American sovereignty and to have no regret over the fall of the dictatorship of the Tagalo tyrants. They boast that they took no part in the insurrection until the advent of some Tagalo officers from the Malolos government, who compelled the enrollment of home guards. They are proud to claim that no Filipino of this province ever fought in any other province, and that they surrendered bodily as soon as the presence of sufficient troops of the United States insured stable government.

LA UNION PROVINCE.

On pages 929 to 943, inclusive, are found reports of Joaquin Ortega, governor, and other officers of La Union Province, wherein the governor says:

There are 123,152 inhabitants. To demonstrate conclusively the existence in this province of uniform peace and tranquillity, he mentions two facts which alone furnish, as he says, incontestible and incontrovertible evidence of the truth. First, that since the month of February, 1900, not a single shot has been fired in combat within the jurisdiction of this province, nor has there been a report which would indicate in the vaguest way the existence of insurgents or enemies to the public order. On the 16th of August, 1901, when civil government first went into operation, 106 prisoners, then confined in the jails, were set free, and since that time, with a population as above stated, the average number of prisoners confined within the province has been but 22, and says: "Could more eloquent and irrefutable proofs be furnished than the two facts just cited, in particular the circumstances, that there are only 22 prisoners confined in the province, to demonstrate that peace and tranquillity shine forth in all their splendor in this Ilocano country."

All the municipalities have been organized and are in a prosperous condition. The provincial treasury shows a balance of $10,000 in gold at the end of the year, with all outstanding warrants paid. The value of the private property is estimated for taxation purposes at $7,770,481, and the value of municipal property in the province at $616,081. There are at present 118 municipal schools, with an attendance of 8,785 children of both sexes.

There are 14 American teachers, and the enthusiasm of the children in learning the English language is proved beyond question by the perseverance and steadiness they display while in attendance at school.

Joaquin Ortega is a native Filipino, and was appointed governor by the Philippine Commission. He was subsequently reelected governor by the people of the province to succeed himself for the ensuing term, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

PROVINCE OF LEYTE.

On pages 203 to 210 of the hearings is to be found the reports of Governor J. H. Grant and other officers of the province of Leyte, wherein the following is stated by those officers:

The peace conditions of this province are fairly satisfactory. There are some few marauders, but they will soon be disposed of. The people generally are anxious for civil government, and the officials elected in the various towns are developing, as a general rule, a very high degree of intelligence in the performance of their respective duties. That the great majority of the people are happy and contented with their present condition is evidenced by the renewed activity displayed in all branches of industry. Agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing industries are taking on new life throughout the province, while the people are rebuilding their towns and homes and are erecting in many instances substantial and comfortable buildings instead of nipa shacks. One of the most gratifying and encouraging indications as demonstrating their appreciation of our institutions is the intense interest manifested among the masses to acquire a knowledge of the English language. During the current year the municipalities of this province have expended about 10,000 pesos in the construction and equipment of schoolhouses. There are at present 36 American teachers on duty in the province, all of whom are doing excellent work. The treasury shows tax collections from January 1 to December 1, 1901, to have been $36,126.07 in gold.

MARINDUQUE PROVINCE.

On pages 1485 to 1495 of the hearings is found the report of Ricardo Paras, provincial governor of Marinduque Province, who says:

Every day our people better understand the importance of the mission which the liberal government of America has intrusted to them. They are afforded opportunities for observing clearly the purified justice and liberty which, linked together, palpitate in the text of every law, and have become convinced of the truth that under the present system of government only persons whose capacity and integrity render them the most worthy should fill official positions. Flattering results may be predicted for the future.

Speaking of educational matters, he says:

So many pupils presented themselves for enrollment that they were compelled to request additional teachers, and the results of the teaching in said schools under American methods are very flattering and promise at no distant date to help on materially the regeneration of the province.

It is impossible to praise sufficiently the zeal and interest displayed by the general superintendent of public instruction in developing his plans for the diffusion of the best possible kind of education in the Philippines.

Commerce is flourishing as never before.

Ricardo Paras is a native Filipino, and was appointed governor of this province by the Philippine Commission, was subsequently reelected by vote of the people, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

MASBATE PROVINCE.

On pages 257–258, 360, and 213 are found the reports of Bonifacio Serrano, provincial governor of Masbate Province, wherein he says:

Peace is so completely established in the province that there is not so much as a gang of robbers in the whole territory. The provincial government and the municipalities are doing their work with regularity, and the people are deeply thankful for the benefits derived from the civil régime. Agriculture and commerce are prosperous. The people have a strong desire to learn the English language and are calling for more teachers.

Bonifacio Serrano is a native Filipino, appointed governor of Masbate Province by the Philippine Commission, has been reelected for another term by the people, and his election has been confirmed by the Commission.

NUEVA ECIJA PROVINCE.

On pages 500 to 514 of the hearings can be found the report of J. F. Kreps, provincial governor, and other officials of Nueva Ecija Province, wherein the governor says:

The relations between the civil and military authorities have always been the most pleasant, and the province and its government owe great thanks to the latter for the encouragement and material aid received. Two of the pueblos were terrorized by robber bands, but they have been captured and the province is now quiet. It is worthy of note that the most prominent of the ladrone leaders were captured and brought in by the natives themselves. They have good crops. The interest of the people in local government is growing.

The provincial treasury is in a fair condition, showing a cash balance of $7,816 in gold at the end of the fiscal year.

Captain Kreps was at the time of his appointment an officer of the Twenty-second United States Infantry. His secretary was a Filipino named Epifanio de los Santos. The latter has recently been elected to succeed Captain Kreps as provincial governor, and his election has been ratified by the Commission.

OCCIDENTAL NEGROS PROVINCE.

On pages 435 to 441 is found a report of Leandro Locsin, civil governor of the province of Occidental Negros, who says:

Civil government was established nine months ago, and although this is a short period in which to appreciate the character of the political epoch, one sees already among the people the first signs of an era of contentment and love for a régime which has been so long desired which can not fail to lay for the future the stable foundations of a radical and deeply autonomous constitution.

There are 257,000 inhabitants in this province. Public instruction is receiving attention and enthusiasm by the people. The classes in English are well attended, and this province has sent more of its sons to the colleges and universities of the United States than any other province in the Visayas, thanks to the decided protection of the first military governor here, the always well-remembered General Smith.

Public order is now well assured.

Leandro Locsin is a native Filipino, and was appointed governor of this province by the Philippine Commission. He was elected by the people for the ensuing term, and his election has been confirmed by the Commission.

ORIENTAL NEGROS PROVINCE.

On pages 351 to 358 of the hearings is found a report from Demetrio Larena, provincial governor of the province of Oriental Negros, who says:

The disposition of the pueblos toward the new régime under American sovereignty is on the whole favorable.

He shows the province to have a cash balance in its treasury of $17,732 gold after paying all expenses of the year; that the 24 municipalities are all organized. There has been some difficulty in obtaining men of sufficient intelligence to properly administer the affairs of the municipalities, but that condition is improving.

Demetrio Larena is a native Filipino and was appointed governor of this province by the Philippine Commission.

PAMPANGA PROVINCE.

On page 191 of the hearings appears the report of C. Joven, governor of Pampanga Province, wherein he says:

This province is in the most peaceful condition. Many of the natives are highly educated, and since the introduction of United States public schools a great improvement is noticed among the lower classes. I believe that this province is in better condition than ever before, and under the present system of government will continue to improve, as affording an opportunity and inspiration to develop its resources.

C. Joven is a native Filipino, and was appointed governor by the Philippine Commission.

PANGASINAN PROVINCE.

On pages 484–486 of the hearings is found a report of P. Sison, governor of Pangasinan Province, wherein he says:

During the year 1901 the inhabitants of the province have enjoyed and are enjoying perfect peace.

Pueblos have all been organized and much improvement has been carried on with the greatest activity. The schools are well attended, assessments are collected with great regularity, their rice crop is plentiful, and municipalities are repairing and constructing new public buildings. He adds:

Under the present civil régime, the general conditions of the province are daily improving, as well as the private interests of the inhabitants.

P. Sison is a native Filipino, appointed governor by the Philippine Commission.

ROMBLON PROVINCE.

On page 360 of the printed proceedings of the hearings on the Philippine Islands appears a telegraphic report from Francisco Sanz, governor of Romblon Province, wherein he says:

The province enjoys perfect tranquillity and is going ahead on the road to progress and knowledge.

On pages 1496, 1497, and 1498 he further adds—

That there are 20 American teachers and 25 native teachers; that every pueblo has its own schoolhouse for both sexes; they are all in fine condition, and are sustained by their respective municipalities; in addition to full day schools, they hold evening schools three times a week for adults; that the capital of the province has introduced waterworks for general and municipal use, and suggests schools of a higher grade may be established there, and asks that they have cable communication with the outside world.

Francisco Sanz is a native Filipino, and was first appointed governor of this province by the Philippine Commission, and thereafter elected by a vote of the people and his election confirmed by order of the Philippine Commission.

SURIGAO PROVINCE.

On pages 1495 and 1496 and pages 493 to 498 of the hearings is found a report of Prudencio Garcia, provincial governor of Surigao Province, wherein he says:

Perfect tranquillity exists in the province. The inhabitants are very obedient toward the constituted authorities. All the pueblos have been organizing into municipalities, and have their courts. Gold mines are under exploitation. A large amount of hemp is being produced. There are 93,000 inhabitants who are contented and prosperous.

Prudencio Garcia is a native Filipino, and was appointed governor by the Philippine Commission.

TARLAC PROVINCE.

On page 193 of the hearings appears the report of Wallis O. Clark, governor of Tarlac Province, wherein he says:

There has been no interruption of the province since its organization under provincial-government act. On my recent visit through the province I heard expressions of the desire for peace, which were earnest and sincere. Crops are good, taxes are collected without difficulty, and the province's income exceeds its expenditures. Instruction in English is somewhat impeded by vacations required for planting and harvesting.

Governor Clark is a captain of the Twelfth Infantry, United States Army.

ZAMBALES PROVINCE.

On pages 470 to 474 of the hearings is found the report of Potenciano Lisaca, governor of Zambales, wherein he says:

The people highly appreciate the advantages of the new civil government established by the Philippine Commission—

And especially refers to the fact that—they know that the pueblos govern themselves through the representatives whom they elect from among their own people. They see with the greatest satisfaction that the funds which they contribute, in the measure of their forces, toward the payment of the public expenses are never diverted from their legitimate object. They remark that, luckily for the province, the provincial officers are no longer what they used to be in former times—those who tyrannized the unfortunate inhabitants, disposing of their persons and of their property in an arbitrary and cruel manner, whereas the new officials work for the happiness and the welfare of the province, and faithfully perform the duties of their respective offices; that individual rights are now respected in the courts, and that justice is not bartered like merchandise and sold to the highest bidder.

Potenciano Lisaca is a native Filipino, appointed governor by the Philippine Commission, subsequently reelected by the people, and his election has been confirmed by the Philippine Commission.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if no other Senator is going to address the Senate on this bill this afternoon, I should like to take the floor on it and proceed in the morning.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are three or four little bills which have been waiting here on the Calendar which I should like to have considered, if the Senator has no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection. I will take the floor on this bill, and then give way to Senators for other business.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator to yield to me a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Does he yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

SHIP FOSCOLIA.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, and considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 173) "A bill for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo," the same matter having been included in the omnibus claims bill (H. R. 8587) approved by the President May 27, 1902.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the report read?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the report of the committee of conference will be printed in the RECORD and will lie over until to-morrow.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, 7, 8, 10, 14, 17, 18, 31, 36, 37, 38, 59, 60, 62, 70, 79, 80, 82, 92, 98, 101, 105, 116, 119, 120, 121, 128, 131, 147, 149, 150, 151, 154, 155, 157, 158, 160, 164, 166, 169, 176, 177, 178, 183, 184, 186, 188, 189, 190, 194, 195, 196, 198, 201, 202, 205, 206, and 207.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 13, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 33, 34, 39, 40, 42, 43, 45, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 63, 64, 67, 68, 71, 72, 74, 76, 78, 81, 83, 84, 86, 88, 89, 91, 94, 95, 99, 100, 109, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 117, 118, 122, 123, 124, 132, 133, 134, 138, 139, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 148, 152, 153, 156, 159, 161, 165, 167, 168, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 179, 180, 182, 185, 191, 192, 193, 197, 203, and 204, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the first line of said amendment, after the word "Harbor," insert the words "of refuge;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

First, strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Second, strike out the words "completing the present entrance to Point Judith Pond, Rhode Island, $15,000, and the amount hitherto appropriated and unexpended is hereby made available for this purpose" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "A board of engineers shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, who shall make an examination of the said harbors of refuge at Point Judith, Block Island, and Great Salt Pond, with a view to reporting upon the relative merits of each of said harbors, what further construction or improvement, if any, is advisable in each, and the cost of such improvement or construction as may be deemed advisable. Said board shall also make an examination of Vineyard and Nantucket sounds and the east shore of Cape Cod, with a view to reporting upon the relative merits of each of said proposed localities for harbors of refuge, and the said board shall also make an examination of Point Judith Pond, with a view to determining whether it is advisable to enlarge the entrance to said pond from the ocean, and if said enlargement is, upon examination, found to be desirable, an estimate of the cost thereof shall be made. The expense of said board shall be paid from the unexpended balance remaining to the credit of the entrance to Point Judith Pond."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "New York" after the words stricken out and insert in lieu of the language stricken out "Canarsie Bay and Sag Harbor, New York, the last in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 77, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "nineteen" and insert the word "thirty-nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "continuing improvement, two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in accordance with House Document No. 122, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, with a view to obtaining a channel not less than 30 feet deep, ninety thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "heretofore" and insert in lieu thereof the word "herein;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Improving Biscayne Bay, Florida, with a view to obtaining a channel 18 feet deep from the wharves at Miami to the sea by way of the northerly line of the two lines north of Norris Cut, as described in the report submitted in House Document No. 662, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and a basin of same depth 1,600 feet long and 500 feet wide, adjacent to the wharves at Miami, $50,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary for prosecuting the project, not to exceed in the aggregate $250,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That of the work herein contemplated the Florida East Coast Railway Company shall construct at its own expense the basin adjacent to the wharves at Miami, as herein described, and the portion of the channel from such basin to the east side of the basin proposed in the report herein mentioned, said channel to be not less than 85 nor more than 100 feet in width, as shall be determined by the Secretary of War, and said basin and channel when so constructed by the railway company shall be open to the free and unobstructed use of the public: Provided further, That the amounts herein appropriated and authorized shall be expended in constructing and protecting the portion of the channel extending to the sea from the terminus of the channel to be constructed by the railway company, of such approximately uniform depth and of such width as will best serve the interests of navigation and as can be constructed with the funds herein appropriated and authorized: Provided further, That before any part of the appropriation shall be expended the said railway company shall enter into a contract with the United States satisfactory to the Secretary of War for the performing of its part of the work, and for securing in its portion of the channel and in the said basin practicable depths at least as great as are secured in the portion of the channel to be built by the United States, and for maintaining for a period of three years after the said 18-foot channel to be constructed by the Government shall have been obtained an equal depth in the basin and the channel across the bay; and said contract shall also provide that all craft resorting to Biscayne Bay for commercial purposes may use the wharves and warehouses thereon now owned or controlled or hereafter built on Biscayne Bay by the Florida East Coast Railway Company, its successors or assigns, for reasonable rates of compensation, and that proper facilities shall be given to all persons or corporations for the shipment of freight to or from said wharves on the railway tracks of the said company in Miami for like reasonable rates and upon just and reasonable conditions, and in case of disagreement such compensation and conditions shall be determined by the Secretary of War."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "and," proposed to be inserted, insert the word "including;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words inserted and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Improving Galveston channel in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 264, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $100,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $200,000 exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That the amount herein appropriated or authorized shall be expended in obtaining a channel from the outer end of the inner bar to Fifty-first street, 30 feet in depth and of such width in the respective portions thereof as shall best subserve the interests of commerce;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words inserted and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further also, That the said breakwater shall be commenced at the westerly end thereof and shall be extended eastwardly so far as the same can be completed with the money available, in one section or separate sections, as shall be most favorable for the prosecution of the work; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$135,000," insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert after each of the harbors designated, viz, Ahnapee, Port Washington, and Oconto, the word "Wisconsin;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words inserted and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Improving Oakland Harbor, Cal., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 282, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $100,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $150,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "two hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated," and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred thousand dollars, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words stricken out by the amendment insert the following: "and the right is obtained, free of charge, to deposit material dredged from said channel upon adjacent tide lands;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Reinsert the words in the House provision stricken out by the Senate and add thereto in place of the words inserted by the Senate the following: "Said board shall make its reports as above provided for to the next session of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the words inserted by the Senate the following: "Nothing herein shall be construed as permitting the taking or destruction of any structures or improvements in or near said river owned or used by private persons and corporations, public or private, without just compensation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words "is hereby authorized and directed to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "may in his discretion." Add at the end of the language inserted by the Senate the following: "And the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of engineers to examine and determine whether existing Government work in connection with the Upper Hudson improvement causes gorges and freshets between Albany and Coxsackie; to report what changes should be made, if any, provided such is the case, together with an estimate of the cost thereof;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "forty thousand dollars," and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-five thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words inserted, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Improving Anacostia River, District of Columbia, with a view to the interests of commerce and navigation, in accordance with such portions of the report submitted in House Document No. 87, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, as relates to section 1 of said river, being the portion below the Navy-Yard Bridge, $150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add to the words inserted the following: "Provided, That no part of said amount shall be expended for turning basins or areas mentioned in said report: And provided further, That not more than one-half of said appropriation shall be expended for the improvements above the city line of the city of Richmond;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to be expended in obtaining a suitable navigable channel from Wilmington to Fayetteville" and insert in lieu thereof the following: $50,000 to be expended in obtaining suitable sites for the locks and dams designated in said report;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the language proposed to be inserted omit the words "to be expended on Jekyl Creek and the Dividings;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "the whole or any part of which sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in dredging a channel to the depth of 8½ feet into the mouth of the Escambia River;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

First. Strike out the words "twenty-five thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen thousand dollars."

Second. Strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the words "fifty thousand dollars" insert "twenty-five thousand dollars;" and in lieu of the words "two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, exclusive of the amounts herein appropriated," insert the words "one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed insert the following: "In developing the proposed channel in divisions 1 and 2 to a uniform depth: Provided further, That not more than one-half of said amounts shall be expended upon division 2;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words inserted and insert in lieu thereof the following:: "Improving Trinity River, Texas, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 409, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $125,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work to prosecute the project recommended in said report, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $275,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That $350,000 of the amounts herein appropriated and authorized shall be expended to construct locks and dams upon the river between the mouth and section 1, in those places where the most serious obstructions exist, and to procure and operate snag boats and clear the river with the purpose of permitting through navigation over the portion above described; and the sum of $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended for the purpose of securing open-channel navigation in section 1 of said river, and a board of engineers shall be designated by the Secretary of War to examine section 1 of said river as described in said House document, and report upon the feasibility and advisability of expending the further sum of $250,000, with a view to securing not less than eight months' navigation annually upon the said section 1 to Dallas;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the language proposed to be inserted substitute a comma in place of the period and add the following: "of which so much as may be necessary shall be used for the completion of Lock and Dam No. 1;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "That," being the first word in the paragraph, insert the word "And;" also omit the break indicating a new paragraph immediately preceding said word; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words inserted insert the following: "Improving the Big Sandy River and Tug and Levisa forks of the same, West Virginia and Kentucky, the former in accordance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the latter in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 235, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $175,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute work upon the said projects, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $175,000, exclusive of the amounts herein or heretofore appropriated. Of the said amounts appropriated and authorized so much thereof as may be necessary shall be expended for completing the two locks and dams upon the Big Sandy River; of the balance so much thereof as may be necessary shall be used in purchasing a site for a lock and dam and the construction of a lock on each of the said forks next above their junction, and any remaining sum may be expended in raising the crest of the lock and dam at or near Louisa in the Big Sandy River;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the language proposed substitute a comma for the period and add: "so far as the same is in the interest of navigation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "For local" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Improving Ohio River, Pennsylvania: For;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 108: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words "On pages 2608 and 2609 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year ending June 30, 1901" insert "In House Document No. 336, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Flint," inserted by the amendment, strike out the words "Shiawassee and Bad rivers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and Shiawassee Rivers and Bad River;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 125: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words "the same," in the last line but one of the language proposed, insert "for so much of the same as is in the interest of navigation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

First. Insert in the fourth line of the paragraph preceding said amendment, after the words "two millions," the words "two hundred thousand."

Second. Substitute for the words stricken out by amendment numbered 123 the following: "And provided further, That of the amounts hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended the Mississippi River Commission may expend, in its discretion, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, during a period of two years, in continuing improvements at New Orleans, La., Natchez and Vidalia, Mississippi and Louisiana; Memphis, Tenn., including Wolf River, and the rectification of the Red and Atchafalaya rivers, Louisiana, an amount aggregating $200,000; and in like manner, from said amounts hereby appropriated and authorized, during a period of four years, aggregate amounts for continuing improvements as follows: At Greenville, Miss., $50,000; at Helena, Ark., $20,000; at Caruthersville, Mo., $20,000; at New Madrid, Mo., $20,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute for the word "That" at the beginning of said amendment the word "And;" omit the break before it indicating a new paragraph, and substitute for the word "heretofore" in said amendment the word "herein;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute for the words "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars" the words "one hundred thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert the words "one hundred and seventy-five" and after the proposed amendment insert: "And the Secretary of War shall cause an examination to be made of said portion of said river with a view to ascertaining whether navigation can be obtained at a reasonable cost by dredging and the removal of obstacles; also at and near Hermann, West Glasgow, Wilhites Bend, Lexington, and St. Joseph, with a view to ascertaining what improvements in these localities, if any, are necessary for navigation; Provided, That this examination shall not be construed to prevent any improvements which might otherwise be made at the localities named in this provision;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "above Lewiston," being the last two words in the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof "between Lewiston and Pittsburg Landing;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 136: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with the following amendments:

First. Strike out the word "project" where first employed in said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "report."

Second. Substitute for the words "four hundred thousand" the words "one hundred thousand."

Third. Substitute for the word "excluding" the words "exclusive of."

Fourth. Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"Provided, That before entering upon the work herein contemplated an examination shall be made by a board of engineers with a view to modifying such project in such a way as to diminish the cost thereof, and if said proposed improvement can be so modified, then said work shall be prosecuted under such modified project; otherwise the same shall be prosecuted under the existing project as set forth in the report above referred to."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Improving Columbia River between the mouth of the Willamette River and the city of Vancouver, Wash.: Continuing improvement, $2,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 140: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 140, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 162: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "necessary" insert "in the interest of navigation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of the language proposed the following: "in the interest of navigation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 181: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 181, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "survey" and insert in lieu thereof the word "reexamination," and strike out the words "and shall submit an estimate therefor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 187: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words inserted and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina, with a view to the construction of a channel not less than 16 feet in depth, upon the most advantageous route between the points named: Provided, That the examination and survey shall be made by a board of engineer officers detailed by the Secretary of War, and any report made shall include the probable cost of any private waterway that it may be to the interest of the United States to acquire in connection with the proposed improvement: Provided further, That the total expense of the examination and of any survey which may be made shall not exceed the sum of $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 199: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 199, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "Hiawassee" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Hiwassee:" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 200: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 200, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add to the language proposed the words "from its mouth to Logansport;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES McMILLAN,
S. B. ELKINS,
JAMES H. BERRY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. E. BURTON,
WALTER REEVES,
RUFUS E. LESTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 493) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia;" and

A bill (S. 4792) relative to the control of dogs in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2510) extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Oacoma, S. Dak.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 4995) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 712) granting an increase of pension to John Housiaux;

A bill (S. 1038) granting an increase of pension to Gustavus C. Pratt;

A bill (S. 1464) to establish storm-warning stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan;

A bill (S. 1797) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Russell;

A bill (S. 2168) granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Baldwin;

A bill (S. 2457) granting an increase of pension to Warren Y. Merchant;

A bill (S. 2511) granting an increase of pension to William Phillips;

A bill (S. 2535) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph;

A bill (S. 2551) granting a pension to Amelia Engel;

A bill (S. 2697) granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Baldwin;

A bill (S. 3063) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge;

A bill (S. 3551) granting an increase of pension to John P. Collier;

A bill (S. 3888) granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Hubbard;

A bill (S. 3998) granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Kimble;

A bill (S. 4240) granting an increase of pension to Calvin N. Perkins;

A bill (S. 4415) granting an increase of pension to Vesta A. Brown;

A bill (S. 4638) granting a pension to Helena Sudsburg;

A bill (S. 4642) granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery;

A bill (S. 4655) granting an increase of pension to Oliver K. Wyman;

A bill (S. 4706) granting an increase of pension to William Harrington;

A bill (S. 4712) granting an increase of pension to Eliphlet Noyes;

A bill (S. 4729) granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp;

A bill (S. 4730) granting an increase of pension to George W. Youngs;

A bill (S. 4732) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hazzard;

A bill (S. 4758) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Doane;

A bill (S. 4759) granting an increase of pension to Martha Clark;

A bill (S. 4766) granting an increase of pension to James P. McClure;

A bill (S. 4790) granting an increase of pension to Stephen A. Seavey;

A bill (S. 4829) granting an increase of pension to Nimrod Headington;

A bill (S. 4853) granting an increase of pension to Amos Moulton;

A bill (S. 4862) granting an increase of pension to James Welch;

A bill (S. 4871) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Worthen;

A bill (S. 4983) granting a pension to John W. Smoot;

A bill (S. 5106) granting an increase of pension to Horace L. Richardson;

A bill (S. 5152) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin, alias Marion M. Martin;

A bill (S. 5153) granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham;

A bill (S. 5202) granting an increase of pension to Jennie M. Wagner;

A bill (S. 5209) granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Van Eaton;

A bill (S. 5371) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan O. Thompson;

A bill (S. 5669) granting a pension to Charlotte M. Howe;

A bill (S. 5670) granting a pension to Samuel H. Chamberlin;

A bill (S. 5759) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Crooker;

A bill (H. R. 989) to authorize the Light-House Board to pay to Chamblin, Delaney & Scott the sum of $1,704.46;

A bill (H. R. 1346) granting a pension to Adelbert L. Orr;

A bill (H. R. 2857) granting an increase of pension to Frances C. Haughton;

A bill (H. R. 6330) granting an increase of pension to William D. Tanner;

A bill (H. R. 6625) granting increase of pension to Mary S. Downing;

A bill (H. R. 7397) granting a pension to Louisa White;

A bill (H. R. 9606) granting a pension to Charles Blitz;

A bill (H. R. 10144) to donate to the State of Alabama the spars of the captured battle ships Don Juan d'Austria and Almirante Oquendo;

A bill (H. R. 10782) granting a pension to Ole Steensland;

A bill (H. R. 10995) to regulate the introduction of eggs of game birds for propagation;

A bill (H. R. 12418) granting a pension to Matilda C. Clarke;

A bill (H. R. 13395) granting a pension to Arthur J. Bushnell;

A bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

A bill (H. R. 14589) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902;

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 113) authorizing the use and improvement of Governors Island, Boston Harbor; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 172) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the Morgan Memorial Association, of Winchester, Va., certain Revolutionary trophies at Allegheny Arsenal, Pittsburg, Pa.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, which is as follows:

"Provided further, That nothing contained in the foregoing sections of this act shall be construed or held to prohibit or limit the right of the Smithsonian Institution to collect in or ship from the district of Alaska animals or birds for the use of the Zoological Park in Washington, D. C."

And agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add the following:

"Provided further, That such heads and hides as may have been taken before the passage of this act may be shipped out of Alaska at any time prior to the 1st day of July, A. D. 1902."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. R. BURTON,
A. B. KITTREDGE,
PARIS GIBSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN,
A. L. BRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

LIFE-SAVING STATION ON MONOMOY ISLAND, MASSACHUSETTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, to which he calls the attention of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 4995) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 493) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia;" which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CONTROL OF DOGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4792) relative to the control of dogs in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SANTA CRUZ COUNTY (ARIZ.) BONDS.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8752) authorizing the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz County, Ariz., to issue bonds for the erection of a court-house and jail for said county.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of the county of Santa Cruz, Territory of Arizona, is hereby authorized to issue bonds on said county in the sum of $35,000 for the construction of a court-house and jail for said county and vaults for the preservation of its records.

SEC. 2. That said bonds may be in such denominations as the said board may prescribe and shall bear not more than 5 per cent interest per annum, and shall not be sold for less than their par value. Said bonds shall be made payable in thirty years, with an option on the part of the county to pay any or all of them after ten years from the date of their issue.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of paying the interest on said bonds as it becomes due and provide for a sinking fund to pay said bonds the said board of supervisors shall levy and cause to be collected, as other county taxes are levied and collected, a sufficient tax on the assessable property in said county as will meet the interest as it falls due and provide a reasonable sinking fund to pay said bonds when due.

SEC. 4. That said bonds shall be printed with interest coupons attached thereto; each coupon shall represent one year's interest on the bond, and when the interest represented in a coupon is paid the coupon shall be detached from the bond and placed by the treasurer with his other vouchers before the board of supervisors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL LANDS IN JUNEAU, ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4616) to grant title to the town of Juneau, Alaska, of land occupied for school purposes, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that certain real property now situated in the town of Juneau and district of Alaska, upon which the public-school building of the town of Juneau is now situated, and belonging to the United States of America, known as Government reservation No. 2, being all of block 23 except lots Nos. 5 and 6 in the town of Juneau, as the same appears of record on the official plat of the town-site trustee, be granted to the incorporated town of Juneau for school purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE SCHOOL INDEMNITY SELECTIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5505) adjusting certain conflicts respecting State school indemnity selections in lieu of school sections in abandoned military reservations.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that all State school indemnity selections in lieu of what are known as school sections in abandoned military reservations made pursuant to the decision of the Secretary of the Interior dated January 28, 1898, and before notice of the withdrawal of that decision was received at the local land office at which the selections were made, and which are otherwise regular and free from any prior lawful claim, shall be confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the lands in such school sections in lieu of which such confirmed selections were made shall be disposed of under the laws applicable to other lands in such abandoned military reservations, a preference right being accorded to those who have made and maintained a bona fide settlement or entry pursuant to said decision of the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL-DISTRICT BONDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9334) to amend an act to prohibit the passage of special or local laws in the Territories, to limit the Territorial indebtedness, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved July 30, 1886, entitled "An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States, to limit Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes," is hereby amended so as to authorize the issuance of bonds by school districts in Oklahoma Territory having a bona fide population of not less than 5,000 persons for erecting necessary school buildings and purchasing the ground for the same. The limitations of said act of July 30, 1886, shall not apply to such school districts: Provided, That before any bonds shall be issued the mayor and common council of the municipal corporation composing in whole or in part such school district shall cause an election to be held in such district, and said mayor and common council shall cause to be published in a newspaper of general circulation, published in said district, a notice of the time and place or places of holding such election. Such notice shall be given at least thirty days before such election.

On the question of the issuance of said bonds no person shall be qualified to vote except he be in all respects a qualified elector and owner of real or personal property subject to taxation within the school district. In case two-thirds of the qualified voters, as above described, shall vote affirmatively for the issuance of said bonds, then the mayor and common council shall certify the result to the board of education, and said board shall issue the same, and not otherwise. Said bonds shall contain all necessary provisions as to form, and such school district shall provide a proper sinking fund for the redemption of said bonds. Said bonds shall not bear a rate of interest exceeding 4 per cent, and the interest shall be paid semiannually, and none of said bonds shall be sold at less than their par value: Provided further, That no school district under this act shall issue bonds in excess of 6 per cent of the valuation according to the last preceding assessment of the school district issuing the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to reserve the right to object for a little while, if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] will pardon me. I only wish to object until I know something about the bill.

It seems to me that it is a very unwise policy as to a whole Territory to provide that a school district having a bona fide population of not less than 5,000 shall issue bonds, making that an absolute condition precedent to the validity of the bond itself, without having some authentic and final and conclusive way of determining whether it has a population of 5,000. Everybody knows the wild estimates about the population of towns, especially in a newly settled territory. People are very apt to believe that the United States census underrates the population of their particular town, and so the census is frequently very disappointing to a great many.

It seems to me instead of making the possession of a certain population a condition of the validity of a bond, which may circulate and which may become a part of the resources or property of widows or orphans or trust funds, that there should be some other provision; for instance, that the governor of the Territory should certify that this school district had this bona fide population, and make that binding.

I wish the Senator would let the bill lie over, so that we may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very willing to let the bill lie over.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to meddle with the Senator's bill, of course.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill has had very careful consideration by the Committee on Territories. A subcommittee was appointed on the bill, consisting of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] and others. Judge BURNHAM has made a very exhaustive report upon the bill. He is a lawyer of very great care and of great learning, and the technical portions of the bill I doubt not are perfect.

The policy involved is a very wise one. The bill relates to only three cities in Oklahoma; and the necessities of those cities with respect to the need of schoolhouses for the children are pressing. The facts are fully set forth in the report, which the Senator will probably find on his desk.

Mr. HOAR. This relates to conditions now existing?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. It has been held in the Departments and I think in the courts that the only authentic evidence of population is the census. The census, would, of course, relate to 1900, nearly two years ago; and I do not know whether since then there has been an increase or a decrease in population in these towns in Oklahoma.

I have no doubt that great care has been exercised by the committee; but I know I find in my committee once in a while that in some cases mistakes in phraseology occur, which immediately become obvious after suggestions have been made regarding the matter, but which escaped the attention of the committee and the subcommittee composed of able lawyers.

I think it is a very risky thing to make a bond without having some authority to settle the question of population, when the bond depends for its validity as to all customers and to all holders under all circumstances upon the fact of the amount of population.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator desires the bill to lie over, of course I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I think that will be better.

Mr. KEAN. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not think so, but I will let it go over. I wish to say that the proposition contained in the bill is not a novel one. It has been quite the usual thing in the past, and precisely the same provision has been adopted in three other instances in recent history.

Mr. HOAR. But if the policy is vicious, we ought to stop it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will consent that the bill go over; but I have another short bill from the same committee, which I should like to have considered.

Mr. KEAN. I think it is getting pretty late to enter upon the consideration of further legislation to-night.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well; I shall not ask for the consideration of the other bill at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 29, 1902, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 28, 1902.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Melvin Grigsby, of South Dakota, to be United States attorney for the district of Alaska, to be assigned to division No. 2, in the place of Joseph K. Wood, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

Thomas T. Dargie, to be postmaster at Oakland, in the county of Alameda and State of California, in place of William H. Friend. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1902.

Frank E. Cushing, to be postmaster at Red Bluff, in the county of Tehama and State of California, in place of Frank E. Cushing. Incumbent's commission expires May 28, 1902.

Giles P. Lecrenier, to be postmaster at Moodus, in the county of Middlesex and State of Connecticut, in place of Giles P. Lecrenier. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1902.

James A. Simpson, to be postmaster at Kissimmee, in the county of Osceola and State of Florida, in place of James A. Simpson. Incumbent's commission expires June 13, 1902.

Christopher E. Head, to be postmaster at Tallapoosa, in the county of Haralson and State of Georgia, in place of Christopher E. Head. Incumbent's commission expired May 24, 1902.

William Stickler, to be postmaster at Lexington, in the county of McLean and State of Illinois, in place of William Stickler. Incumbent's commission expires June 14, 1902.

David A. Courter, to be postmaster at Hinsdale, in the county of Du Page and State of Illinois, in place of David A. Courter. Incumbent's commission expired May 4, 1902.

Andrew E. Sheldon, to be postmaster at Paxton, in the county of Ford and State of Illinois, in place of Andrew E. Sheldon. Incumbent's commission expired January 10, 1902.

William Goodin, to be postmaster at Farmington, in the county of Van Buren and State of Iowa, in place of William F. Thero. Incumbent's commission expired May 5, 1902.

Thomas A. Hills, to be postmaster at Leominster, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in place of Thomas A. Hills. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1902.

Joseph A. West, to be postmaster at Provincetown, in the county of Barnstable and State of Massachusetts, in place of Joseph A. West. Incumbent's commission expired May 24, 1902.

Clinton L. Kester, to be postmaster at Marcellus, in the county of Cass and State of Michigan, in place of Clinton L. Kester. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1902.

Edward L. Bates, to be postmaster at Pentwater, in the county of Oceana and State of Michigan, in place of Edward L. Bates. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1902.

Andrew Richmond, to be postmaster at Orleans, in the county of Harlan and State of Nebraska, in place of Andrew Richmond. Incumbent's commission expires June 2, 1902.

Robert S. Fulton, to be postmaster at Germantown, in the county of Montgomery and State of Ohio, in place of Robert S. Fulton. Incumbent's commission expired May 24, 1902.

Augustus J. Eminger, to be postmaster at Miamisburg, in the county of Montgomery and State of Ohio, in place of Augustus J. Eminger. Incumbent's commission expired May 24, 1902.

Lewis O. Cooper, to be postmaster at Middleport, in the county of Meigs and State of Ohio, in place of Lewis O. Cooper. Incumbent's commission expires June 15, 1902.

Lynn G. Thomas, to be postmaster at Canton, in the county of Bradford and State of Pennsylvania, in place of Charles E. Riggs. Incumbent's commission expired May 4, 1902.

George D. Shore, to be postmaster at Sumter, in the county of Sumter and State of South Carolina, in place of Emily E. Whittemore. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1902.

Harry L. Bras, to be postmaster at Mitchell, in the county of Davison and State of South Dakota, in place of Harry C. Clark. Incumbent's commission expires June 2, 1902.

Gale Armstrong, to be postmaster at Rogersville, in the county of Hawkins and State of Tennessee, in place of Gale Armstrong. Incumbent's commission expires June 10, 1902.

Gomer S. Williams, to be postmaster at Cisco, in the county of Eastland and State of Texas, in place of Gomer S. Williams. Incumbent's commission expires June 13, 1902.

George G. Clifford, to be postmaster at San Antonio, in the county of Bexar and State of Texas, in place of George G. Clifford. Incumbent's commission expired April 5, 1902.

John Beaty, to be postmaster at Waxahachie, in the county of Ellis and State of Texas, in place of John Beaty. Incumbent's commission expires June 13, 1902.

Alexander McCormick, to be postmaster at Berryville, in the county of Clarke and State of Virginia, in place of Alexander McCormick. Incumbent's commission expires June 14, 1902.

Allen I. Harless, to be postmaster at Christiansburg, in the county of Montgomery and State of Virginia, in place of Allen I. Harless. Incumbent's commission expires June 13, 1902.

James H. Spencer, to be postmaster at Necedah, in the county of Juneau and State of Wisconsin, in place of James H. Spencer. Incumbent's commission expired May 10, 1902.

William H. Hilton, to be postmaster at Durant, in the Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory, in place of Amelia C. Butler, removed.

Olive L. Stauffer, to be postmaster at Gladbrook, in the county of Tama and State of Iowa, in place of Isaac Stauffer, deceased.

Pryce T. Jones, to be postmaster at Henderson, in the county of Vance and State of North Carolina, in place of Dollie W. Garrett, removed.

John E. Reynolds, to be postmaster at Redding, in the county of Shasta and State of California, in place of John E. Reynolds. Incumbent's commission expired May 16, 1902.

John M. Frew, to be postmaster at Soldiers Home, in the county of Los Angeles and State of California, in place of Francis I. Gardiner. Incumbent's commission expired January 10, 1902.

George Y. Downing, to be postmaster at Camp Point, in the county of Adams and State of Illinois, in place of Richard Seaton. Incumbent's commission expired January 10, 1902.

John A. Childs, to be postmaster at Evanston, in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, in place of John A. Childs. Incumbent's commission expired May 10, 1901.

Alonzo H. Williams, to be postmaster at Holton, in the county of Jackson and State of Kansas, in place of Moses M. Beck. Incumbent's commission expired May 19, 1902.

Frank E. Shoemaker, to be postmaster at Neodesha, in the county of Wilson and State of Kansas, in place of James K. Morgan. Incumbent's commission expires June 2, 1902.

Reuben K. Sawyer, to be postmaster at Wellesley, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts, in place of Reuben K. Sawyer. Incumbent's commission expired May 6, 1902.

John M. Hamilton, to be postmaster at Batavia, in the county of Genesee and State of New York, in place of John M. Hamilton. Incumbent's commission expired May 6, 1902.

W. L. Harris, to be postmaster at Charleston, in the county of Charleston and State of South Carolina, in place of George I. Cunningham. Incumbent's commission expires June 14, 1902.

Fred W. Miller, to be postmaster at Oakesdale, in the county of Whitman and State of Washington, in place of Ferdinand A. Davis. Incumbent's commission expired February 18, 1902.

Benjamin Webster, to be postmaster at Platteville, in the county of Grant and State of Wisconsin, in place of Benjamin Webster. Incumbent's commission expired May 4, 1902.

John Kellogg, to be postmaster at Reedsburg, in the county of Sauk and State of Wisconsin, in place of John Kellogg. Incumbent's commission expired May 4, 1902.

Thomas F. Addington, to be postmaster at Yukon, in the county of Canadian and Territory of Oklahoma, in place of Monroe C. Litteer, deceased.

Samuel G. Hanson, to be postmaster at Berea, in the county of Madison and State of Kentucky. Office became Presidential January 1, 1902.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn May 28, 1902.

William E. Stouffer, to be postmaster at Breckenridge, in the State of Colorado.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 28, 1902.

MARSHAL.

William M. Hanson, of Texas, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Texas, commencing July 1, 1902.

POSTMASTERS.

Edward W. Martin, to be postmaster at Hoboken, in the county of Hudson and State of New Jersey.

Abram W. Boss, to be postmaster at Flemington, in the county of Hunterdon and State of New Jersey.

E. D. Turner, to be postmaster at Delamar, in the county of Lincoln and State of Nevada.

James Brizzolara, to be postmaster at Fort Smith, in the county of Sebastian and State of Arkansas.

Elias H. Bird, to be postmaster at Plainfield, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey.

Charles Eichhorn, to be postmaster at West Hoboken, in the county of Hudson and State of New Jersey.

William O. Armbruster, to be postmaster at Weehawken, in the county of Hudson and State of New Jersey.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 28, 1902.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by the Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL, Clerk of the House, who read the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 28, 1902.

I hereby designate Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, as Speaker pro tempore for this day.

D. B. HENDERSON, Speaker.

Prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HERMAN GAUSS.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution (No. 261) from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 261, authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment to Herman Gauss of $750 for services rendered to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, have had the same under consideration, and recommend the accompanying resolution in lieu thereof.

Mr. Gauss is the detailed clerk from the Pension Bureau, under the law, and has rendered extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. This payment is usually made in the general deficiency bill, and we therefore report the following resolution favorably:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment of Herman Gauss $750 for services as acting assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The resolution was agreed to.

D. S. PORTER.

Mr. JOY, from the Committee on Accounts, also presented the following resolution, No. 262.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 262, have had the same under consideration, and recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution in lieu thereof.

Mr. Porter is the detailed clerk from the Pension Bureau, under the law, and has rendered extra and expert services to the Committee on Pensions. This payment is usually made in the general deficiency bill, and we therefore report the following resolution favorably:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment of D. S. Porter, $500, for services as acting assistant clerk to the Committee on Pensions.

The resolution was agreed to.

CLERK TO CONFERENCE MINORITY.

Mr. JOY, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution, No. 260.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 260, authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to provide for a clerk to the conference minority at $2,000 per annum instead of a messenger at $1,200 per annum, have had the same under consideration, and recommend its adoption by the House.

A messenger was originally provided for service in the room of the minority members of the House, by resolution reported from this committee in the last Congress, and adopted by the House. Provision was afterwards, and is now made by law for the salary of this messenger, and the resolution herewith reported at the request of the minority members of the House provides for a change in law so that the minority will be provided with a clerk at $2,000 per annum instead of a messenger at $1,200 per annum.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to provide for a clerk to the conference minority at $2,000 per annum instead of a messenger at $1,200 per annum.

The resolution was agreed to.

LANDS IN SEQUOIA AND OTHER NATIONAL PARKS.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14511) to authorize the relinquishment to the United States of patent, land, and claim.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in cases in which a tract of land covered by an unperfected bona fide claim or by a patent is included within the limits of the Sequoia National Park, set aside by act of Congress approved September 25, 1890, and the Yosemite and General Grant National parks, set aside by act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, the settler or owner thereof may, if he desires to do so, relinquish the tract to the Government and secure other land, outside of said parks, in accordance with the provisions of the law relating to the subject of such relinquishment of lands in the forest reservations created under section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want some explanation of this bill.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, this bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands. It was prepared by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with his last annual report, pages 154 and 155. It provides that the owners of patented lands in the national parks in California may relinquish their lands to the Government and go upon the public domain and take in lieu thereof other land open to settlement. It creates no expense to the Government and has been recommended repeatedly by different Secretaries of the Interior and by superintendents of these parks, and was prepared by the Interior Department and unanimously reported from our committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it necessary in order that the national parks shall be properly carried on that private owners should be out of them?

Mr. NEEDHAM. That is the object of the bill, for the better administration of the parks.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much is involved in it?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Something like 55,000 acres are held in private ownership in these parks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the whole of those 55,000 acres will not be exchanged; only a portion.

Mr. NEEDHAM. This is simply a privilege extended to these owners; there is nothing compulsory in it; it is simply a privilege of which they may avail themselves if they desire to do so.

Mr. LACEY. The limitation is precisely the same as in the case of forest reserves.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Exactly; this simply extends the law, so far as relinquishments are concerned, to the national parks.

Mr. MADDOX. Have the owners already cut the timber off the land?

Mr. NEEDHAM. No, sir; not to any great extent.

Mr. LACEY. Very little of the timber has been cut in these national parks.

Mr. MADDOX. Have not the parties who own this land cut the timber off?

Mr. LACEY. I think that very few of them have done so, for the reason that the lands are so inaccessible. They are away up in the heart of the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me state that the same provision exists now under the general law as to forest reserves; and we have a great number of forest reserves, including many millions of acres.

The national parks ought to be, and in fact are, on a better basis than the reserves; yet by reason of the fact that the law with relation to forest reserves has not been extended to the national parks we have private ownership now in the national parks, which should not exist there.

Mr. MADDOX. Let me state my reason for asking the question. I saw a report here the other day from the Secretary of the Interior in regard to one of these parks. It stated that some parties had gone into some of these parks and cut all of the timber off; and now they want to exchange that land with the Government and go out and locate on other timber lands in order to get the timber from those also. I simply wanted to know whether that was the fact in this instance.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I do not think that condition of things is as prevalent in the parks as in the forest reserves.

Mr. SHAFROTH. A number of applications have been made for land in forest reserves for purposes of that character. But I am opposed to any such policy. It is wrong for the Government to exchange in this way good land for bad.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it not a fact that the holdings by private parties in this national park are comparatively small and are isolated, and that the parties wish to get out of the park and to take lands on the public domain elsewhere, the result of which will be beneficial not only to the Government from having its national park as a unit, but also beneficial to these private parties? The arrangement will be mutually beneficial.

Mr. NEEDHAM. That is approximately the situation. This legislation is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FINLEY. The results of such a policy, I understand, will be beneficial both to the Government and to the private parties.

Mr. CANNON. How much land is held in these parks by private individuals?

Mr. NEEDHAM. About 55,000 acres.

Mr. CANNON. I believe there are two small parks, which are close together.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Yes, sir. This applies to the three national parks in the State of California.

Mr. CANNON. Does it provide for the purchase, or for the issue of lieu scrip?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Neither. It simply provides that these parties shall relinquish their claims to the Government and go upon the public domain and take other lands which are open to settlement. This is the same legislation which was before the gentleman's committee in connection with a proposed appropriation, and the committee advised this course.

Mr. LACEY. This bill embraces the same limitation which was put in the appropriation bill. It applies to nonmineral, surveyed land, open to settlement.

Mr. CANNON. Then lieu scrip can not be issued.

Mr. LACEY. No scrip is to be issued. An exchange is to be made. The owners of land in the forest reserves or in this park will convey their land with an abstract of title to the Government and then locate on surveyed, nonmineral public lands, open to settlement elsewhere.

Mr. McRAE. Just as in the case of a forest reserve.

Mr. LACEY. Precisely the same as a forest reserve.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Who superintends that exchange?

Mr. LACEY. The exchange is effected through the Land Office.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do they want to make the exchange?

Mr. LACEY. I will state that these parties inside who have located lands find themselves now, by virtue of the fact that the land has been placed in perpetual reservation, in such a position so that there can be no new neighbors, schoolhouses, churches, or other conveniences. In other words, settlement has been stopped, and they want to get out alongside of people where the land is open to settlement.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] that the purpose of the Government is to get control of the park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NEEDHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

SALMON CULTURE IN ALASKA.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9976) to encourage salmon culture in Alaska and for the protection of persons engaged in the production thereof, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person or persons who heretofore or hereafter may establish and maintain a hatchery for the artificial production of salmon in the district of Alaska shall be entitled to the exclusive right of all fish that such hatchery may produce in excess of the normal product of such stream for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of the stream upon which such hatchery may be located.

SEC. 2. That when the average normal product of any stream on which a hatchery may be maintained shall have been taken within 1 mile of the mouth of said stream in any one year by any party or parties, then the remaining fish produced by said hatchery shall be the property of the owner or owners of said hatchery for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of said hatchery stream, and for a further distance of 4 miles in all directions in tide water it shall be unlawful for any party or parties to take fish of the kind propagated by the hatchery for whose protection this law is enacted.

SEC. 3. That in case other streams producing salmon of the same kind as those produced by the hatchery so protected shall intervene within a distance of 5 miles, then the normal product of such intervening stream shall be included in and added to the normal product of such hatchery stream, subject to the same conditions as are provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That the provisions and immunities of this act shall apply to barren streams and lakes that shall have been stocked with fish from artificial hatcheries.

SEC. 5. That in case two or more persons shall maintain hatcheries on the same stream or stock barren lakes or streams, such persons shall be entitled to their proportionate number of adult fish so produced, and each party shall file a sworn statement of his or their output of young fry with the nearest United States commissioner each year.

SEC. 6. That native Indians may at all times take sufficient fish for food or for drying for winter use as food for themselves or families, and fishing with the rod shall be open and free for all persons.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to grant leases in accordance with the foregoing sections of this act, for a period not to exceed twenty years from the time the product of their hatcheries shall return, to all persons producing satisfactory proof of having maintained hatcheries on any of the streams of Alaska not producing, in a normal state, more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated by said hatchery; such lease subject to renewal at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That before any such lease shall be granted the party or parties making application therefor shall accompany such application with proof sufficient to establish the normal product of such stream; and no person shall be entitled to more than one hatchery lease or the privilege of stocking more than three barren lakes or streams and being protected in the product thereof. Corporations owning and operating canneries shall be entitled to one hatchery franchise for each cannery so operated, and no more. All hatcheries that may have been started and maintained on streams producing more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated prior to the passage of this act shall be entitled to all immunities of hatcheries established on streams producing not more than 10,000, as provided in this section.

SEC. 8. That all rights and privileges granted by this bill are subject to the supervision and regulation and repeal by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is too important a bill to be considered otherwise than in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection for just a few moments?

Mr. CANNON. No; I will not. I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. SULZER. Very well. I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that this bill has been very carefully prepared. It was carefully considered by the Committee on Territories and was unanimously reported from that committee. The report is elaborate, instructive, and conclusive to every member that will read it. The committee had before it representatives from Alaska, the representative of the Treasury Department, the representative of the United States Fish Commission, and they all unanimously recommended the passage of this bill. It is a good bill of great merit and should pass immediately in order to prevent the extermination of the salmon of Alaska. Unless something is done to prevent the extermination of the salmon there, these valuable fish and that great industry will be utterly destroyed within the next twenty-five or thirty years. It is very important that this bill should speedily become a law.

Every man who has looked into this matter favors this bill. It leaves the whole matter in the control of the Secretary of the Treasury and in the control of Congress. It grants no special rights, no special privileges; it simply gives to persons who, at their expense, established hatcheries in Alaska for the artificial propagation of salmon the right to catch a portion of those fish when they come back to spawn after the expiration of nine, ten, or eleven years. That is only right and fair and just. It is not alone in the interests of the men who establish these hatcheries and propagate the salmon, but it is in the interests of the people of this country, of the people of all the world who use canned salmon as a staple diet. If the gentleman now objects to this bill, it can not pass this session, and the consequence will be that the people in Alaska who are now ready to establish these hatcheries at their own expense will abandon the enterprise.

The purpose of this bill is to maintain and increase the normal product of salmon in Alaska. The destruction of the salmon fishery on the Atlantic coast demonstrates beyond any question that some steps are necessary to be taken to protect and preserve this great and valuable source of food supply on the Pacific coast or it will ultimately meet the same fate.

The provisions of the bill will give the necessary protection and encouragement to private citizens to invest their capital and labor in the work of propagating young salmon, which are absolutely needed to replenish and increase the natural supply which is now being steadily exhausted, and which unless some such action is taken by the Government will be finally exterminated. This law will not only keep up the present supply, but will enormously increase the normal supply.

The proposed law simply gives to parties a legal right to property they create from the wastes of nature at their own cost and without taking anything of value from the public domain. If they produced ten where nature produced but one, they surely should have the right to the increase. They also enrich the waters outside the protected zone by thousands of fish that will be public property.

No title in fee simple is asked, merely a lease that need not be renewed unless its continuation should seem just and proper.

The bill also provides that these leases shall be subject to repeal by Congress at any time in case the public interests may demand.

No person or corporation will have a monopoly of any stream. All have equal rights, as provided in section 5. And no individual can have more than one franchise, or corporation more than one for each cannery actually operated. The rights of Indians are more than protected, as they have free access for food purposes to the artificial product, and in common with others to the normal product. Fishing with hook and line is free to all.

Limiting hatchery franchises to small producing streams will prevent clashing of interests, as streams producing 10,000 or less of the valuable redfish are considered of small value and are seldom fished by more than one party, while the large producers, running as high as two and a half millions, are fished by several persons and corporations. Those who have already maintained hatcheries on streams producing large numbers should be protected, in all fairness.

There are thousands of streams and lakes that are barren because of falls near tide water which no fish can pass on the upward passage. By stocking these streams with young fry you reclaim a desert; yet this can be accomplished, and the commercial results of which would be enormous; to accomplish this, however, entails a considerable expense.

No policy will advance the settlement of Alaska more or as much as that provided for in this bill. Every industrious fisherman can, and many will, embark in salmon culture, and in connection with his hatchery will develop what there may be of agricultural resources that will never be utilized except in connection with some auxiliary industry. Nearly all the lands suitable for agricultural purposes are situated at the mouths of streams.

The 1 mile reserved to the propagator in many cases would not be sufficient protection, but a further reserve of 4 miles, as set forth in section 2 of the bill, from which all parties are excluded from taking fish of the kind propagated, will leave those which might be in transit free to pass on to their native streams unhindered, and if they are the product of the protected hatcheries they will go there also unhindered.

Fishing for all kinds of salmon, of a different species from those propagated, as well as other species of fish, is free and open to all.

Col. H. M. Kutchin, special agent of the Treasury Department for the Alaska salmon fisheries, says regarding this measure:

> This bill, which we are here to discuss, is fair and equitable. I think that any man who is disposed to put in his time and money and effort, as Mr. Callbreath and others have, should be protected, and I think this bill does it fairly and well, and that it does not encroach upon the rights of anybody. It does not give anybody the exclusive rights of streams. There will probably be contentions, where there are two men on a stream, as to how many fish each produced and how many of the returning fish are his, but that can not well be cared for in this particular bill. I think it is a good bill. So far as the preservation of fisheries is concerned, I think there should be a vital revision of law. There should probably be limitations as to the duration of the fishing seasons and the size of the pack.

Now, gentlemen, I trust there will be no objection to this bill now passing by unanimous consent.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that I concur with my friend from New York [Mr. SULZER] in urging the importance of early action upon this bill, so that the legislation could go to Alaska with the opening of the shipping season, to enable the men who are planting fish there to reap the benefit of that which they plant. Some men have established hatcheries, and this gives them the opportunity to reap the fruits of the hatcheries and it will encourage the establishment of more.

Mr. SULZER. That is all it does, and it is right.

Mr. LACEY. I think it is a very urgent bill, and I hope my friend from Illinois will not object.

Mr. SULZER. It leaves the whole matter, I will state again, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. It does not take one dollar from the public Treasury, and it leaves the whole matter of granting these leases for a period not exceeding twenty years to the Secretary of the Treasury; and it also leaves the matter in the power of Congress, so that Congress can amend or repeal this legislation and regulate these hatcheries in any way it sees fit. Now, just one word more. We know to-day that in almost every State in the Union the State government has at its own expense established fish hatcheries for the purpose of keeping alive the supply of game fish by artificial propagation. This is something more far reaching than that, because these men in Alaska, who have studied this question for years, who are acquainted with the habits of the salmon, and who know all about these fish, know that the young salmon go out to the ocean from the place where they are born, and after nine, or ten, or eleven years come back to spawn to the very place where they were born. And then they die. These men know that, and they are willing to invest their own money, their own time, and their own labor in this enterprise, and all that they ask is to get a lease from the Government and have the Government in some way protect them in their rights. There should be no objection to this bill, and I hope there will not be.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN].

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, being a member of the Committee on Territories, the committee which considered and reported this bill to the House, and also living on the coast of the State of Washington, so near to Alaska, the region affected by this proposed legislation, I feel it to be my duty to say a few words in support of this bill called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The sole object of the bill now before us for consideration is the encouragement of the artificial culture or propagation of salmon in Alaska. The remarks of some gentlemen on this floor give the impression that they fear that the provisions of this bill would in some way give to some persons or concerns a partial or total monopoly of the salmon industry in Alaska. First, let me say, if such a condition were to be created under this bill, no one would oppose it more earnestly than I.

To thoroughly understand the provisions of this bill and their practical operation, if enacted into law, it is necessary to know something of the nature and habits of the Alaska salmon. The mature salmon (a fish nine or ten years old) seeks some stream flowing into salt water, and at some suitable place in this stream spawns and dies. The Alaska salmon spawns but once and then dies. The spawn are deposited in the small stream. Here the young salmon live for eight or ten months. They then disappear from the stream; they go out to sea and remain from seven to ten years, or until they have attained their full growth. They then return—and this is the peculiar and rather marvelous chapter of fish history—they then return to the same identical stream in which they were spawned, and there in turn they deposit their spawn and die.

This rather peculiar trait of fish life has been doubted by many and denied by some. But any expert in the culture and production of young salmon will explain to you that this fact has many times been proven. They prove it in this way: At a salmon hatchery located on one stream the superintendent, before turning loose an immense school of young salmon, will mark several hundreds of the young fish by some peculiar mark. Another hatchery, located perhaps within a few miles of the first one, will also mark several hundred fish of its production by some different mark.

This practice is repeated each year as the young fish are liberated. From seven to ten years afterwards these fish, having attained their growth, return, and the fish marked with the mark of one hatchery return invariably to the stream on which they were produced, while the salmon bearing the mark of the other hatchery return to the other stream. The two streams may be very near to each other, but in the hundreds of fish so marked it is an almost unheard of incident that a fish which was marked in one stream will ever be found in the other stream. They travel in great schools, and by some instinct return in their age to the stream where they were born.

Now, the bill before this House provides that any person or persons who have established or may establish and maintain a fish hatchery in Alaska for the artificial production of salmon shall have certain rights not possessed by other people in relation to the salmon thus produced. It is very clear to me that a man who invests his time, skill, and money in the production of any useful article is entitled to greater rights in the article thus produced than the man who contributed nothing to the transaction.

Now, what are the extra rights conferred by this bill upon the man who puts his money into a fish hatchery on any stream in Alaska? Is he given all the fish in that one stream? No. He is, however, entitled to all the fish that that one stream may produce in excess of the normal product of that stream. In other words, this law gives him a title to what his own industry and enterprise has created.

Now, how does this law give the owner of the fish hatchery an opportunity to secure ten years from now the fish which are hatched this year at his hatchery? And this is the point in the story at which it becomes important to know the habits of the salmon in order to understand the provisions of this bill.

This bill gives the man who maintains the hatchery the exclusive right within a 1-mile circuit of the mouth of the stream on which his hatchery is located, and within this 1-mile circuit he is entitled to all the fish in excess of the normal product of the stream.

After the fish have become grown and are returning to their native spawning grounds this exclusive right around the mouth of the stream enables the owner of the hatchery to secure the mature fish which his own hatchery sent forth years before. The elements of "monopoly" do not enter into that transaction in any unfair sense any more than the exclusive monopoly of spending a dollar properly appertains to the man who earns the dollar.

Now, this bill is safeguarded in a number of particulars, chief among which is that the discretion for the giving of these grants or leases is vested in the Secretary of the Treasury. This discretionary power vested in him, together with the various limitations contained in the bill, are, in my humble judgment, sufficient safeguards against the possibility of the creation of any fish monopoly.

Now, a word or two in conclusion regarding the necessity of encouraging the artificial propagation of salmon in this region. If something is not done to encourage the artificial production of salmon on the Pacific coast, and particularly in Alaska, that fish will soon be exterminated. They are caught in that region by means of immense nets stretched across some well-known channel where the fish run. These are called "traps;" and in these traps they are caught, not by hundreds or by thousands, but by hundreds of thousands.

I have seen 80,000 salmon—not 80,000 pounds, but 80,000 fish—taken out of single trap in a single day. The fish weigh anywhere from 4 to 10 pounds and even higher. Now, when you consider that that is only the catch of a single trap in a single day, and that there are hundreds of traps operating throughout the long fishing season, you can begin to form some estimate of the immensity of this industry and also of the terrific slaughter of the fish.

And, as I said before, unless something is done to keep up the supply this fish, the most valuable of all the food fishes, will become a historic memory.

There are some people who insist that the proper way to regulate this matter is to stop the wholesale taking of these fish and prevent their destruction faster than they will naturally replenish. That seems to me a foolish and indefensible idea, to stop a profitable branch of human industry which is producing a food staple for the human family, when by a little artificial aid the industry may be allowed to go on and the supply may be kept up.

I wish to insert in the RECORD, as a portion of my remarks on this subject, a table of statistics which I clipped from the Mining Journal of Ketcikan, Alaska, of the date of May 3, 1902. This table shows the amount and the value of the salmon canned by the Alaska canneries in the year 1901, and also shows the number of institutions engaged in this branch of industry.

ALASKA'S SALMON FISHERIES.

The Mining Journal is in receipt of the report of Howard M. Kutchin, special agent, on the salmon fisheries of Alaska for 1901, which is more than usually replete with interesting and valuable information. It shows that the industry last year was in the hands of 30 companies and individual packers, operating 5[illegible] canneries and 12 salteries, not including several small concerns from which no reports were secured. The aggregate capitalization of the whole number is put down at $22,313,200, and the valuation of the plants is placed at $4,915,250.

The Alaska Packers' Association operated 20 of its 22 plants, and made a pack of 958,641 cases of canned and 2,883 barrels of salted salmon, of the aggregate market value of $3,272,940. The Pacific Packing and Navigation Company turned out a product of 656,861 cases and 208 barrels, with gross earnings of $2,174,628. The product of the independent concerns ranged from 46,700 cases, worth $163,450, down to a few barrels of salted salmon worth a few hundred dollars only. The entire market value of the season's output is stated at $6,926,167, the valuation in most instances being that given by the packers themselves, and where not so given calculated on a basis of $3.50 per case and $10 per barrel.

The license taxes payable to the Government on the entire product thus reported was $87,622.95, of which sum the Alaska Packers' Association was chargeable with $38,624.31, and the Pacific Packing and Navagation Company with $31,206.60.

The shipping employed in carrying on the business consisted of 110 steamers, 55 sailing vessels, and 1,777 lighters and small boats. The aggregate amount paid in wages was $2,320,645, and the total number of hands employed is put down at 11,696, of whom 4,584 were whites, 4,664 Chinamen, and 2,388 natives.

The following table, taken from Mr. Kutchin's report, shows the output in detail of the several canneries and salting establishments last year:

Report of salmon canneries in Alaska for the year 1901.

Name of cannery.	Owned by—	Location.	Cases.	Value.
Bristol Bay Canning Co.	Alaska Packers' Association.	Nushagak River.	.....	.....
Alaska Packing Co	do	do	180,080	$630,916
Arctic Packing Co	do	do	.....	.....
Do	do	Naknek River.	75,430	264,320
Guardian Cannery	do	do	.....	.....
Ugashuk Fishing Station.	do	Ugashuk River	40,864	110,029
Bering Sea Cannery	do	do	107,845	377,728
Point Roberts Packing Co.	do	Koggiung	.....	.....
Horseshoe Fishing and Mining Co.	do	do	31,740	110,090
Egagek Fishing Sta'n	do	Egagek	40,681	142,382
Chignik Bay Packing Co.	do	Chignik Bay	41,614	145,649
Alitak Packing Co	do	Alitak	.....	.....
Karluk Packing Co	do	Karluk	196,667	690,311
Alaska Improvement Co.	do	do	.....	.....
Arctic Fishing Co	do	Kussilof	31,082	108,787
Pacific Packing Co	do	Odiak	40,665	142,327
Pyramid Harbor Packing Co.	do	Pyramid Harbor.	30,709	107,481
Glacier Packing Co	do	Wrangell	59,027	177,081
Alaska Salmon and Fur Co.	do	Loring	89,423	265,839
Whalers' Chignik Cannery.	Pacific Packet and Navigation Co.	Chignik Bay	35,516	117,203
Hume Chignik Can	do	do	29,927	104,838
Orca Cannery	do	Orca	36,530	120,549
Kenai Cannery	do	Kenai	17,725	59,152
Whalers' Uyak Can	do	Uyak Bay	20,983	166,967
Hume Uyak Cannery	do	do	33,479	117,221
Hunters Bay Cannery	do	Hunters Bay	62,000	185,000
Nushagak River Cannery.	do	Nushagak River.	76,774	257,192
Quadra Bay Cannery	do	Quadra Bay	35,141	105,000
Petersburg Cannery	do	Petersburg	58,500	226,200
Sitkoh Bay Cannery	do	Sitkoh Bay	60,000	171,920
Santa Rita Cannery	do	Dundas Bay	21,750	70,000
Taku Fish Co. Cannery.	do	Port Snettisham.	14,574	47,712
Taku Pack. Co. Can	do	Taku Inlet	24,000	78,000
Chilkoot Cannery	do	Chilkoot River	19,397	79,858
Thlinket Gerard Pt. Cannery.	do	Wrangell	26,536	92,876
Thlinket Santa Anna Cannery.	do	Santa Anna Inlet.	24,983	87,440
Yes Bay Cannery	do	Yes Bay	29,736	87,500
Kvichak R. Can. No. 1	N. Alaska Sal. Co.	Kvichak River	23,300	81,550
Kvichak R. Can. No. 2	do	do	23,400	81,900
Naknek Cannery	Naknek Pack'g Co.	Naknek	41,000	136,400
Bristol Bay Cannery	Bristol Pack'g Co	Ugashuk River	11,400	38,970
Koggiung Saltery	Northwestern Packing Co.	Koggiung	5,500	15,400
Klawak Cannery	N. P. Trading and Packing Co.	Klawak	36,412	113,000
Nushagak Cannery	Alaska Fishermen's Pack'g Co.	Nushagak River.	38,724	135,450
Chuitna River Cannery.	Alaska Salmon Association.	Chuitna River.	11,480	40,342
Ketchikan Cannery	Fidalgo Island Packing Co.	Ketchikan	49,326	155,000
Taku Harbor Cannery.	San Juan Fish and Packing Co.	Taku Harbor	25,500	76,500
Ugashuk River	Red Salmon Packing Co.	Ugashuk River	8,500	28,000
Nushagak Cannery	Columbia River Packing Assn.	Nuskagak River.	24,284	86,612
Nushagak Saltery	Alaska Fishing and Packing Co.	do	5,287	17,000
Tonka Cannery	P. C. and N. P. Co.	Wrangell Narrows.	19,432	60,682
Kell Bay Cannery	Union Packing Co.	Kell Bay	20,989	63,000
Lake Bay Cannery	Cross Sound Packing Co.	Lake Bay	13,849	36,212
Metlakahtla Cannery	Metlakahtla Industrial Co.	Metlakahtla	23,000	69,000
Nushagak River Cannery.	Alaska - Portland Packing Assn.	Nushagak River.	20,667	74,400
Do	Alaska Salmon Assn.	do	17,700	63,720
Nushagak River Saltery.	C. E. Whitney & Co.	do	20,520	65,000
Ideal Cove Saltery	Muir Glacier Packing Co.	Ideal Cove	1,765	5,300
Saakaar Saltery	C. F. Brockman	Saakaar	525	2,320
Thorne Bay Saltery	R. C. Bell	Thorne Bay	1,480	4,835
Point Barrie Saltery	F. C. Sepp	Point Barrie	467	1,122
Etoline Island Saltery	J. C. Frey	Etoline Island	135	648
McHenry Inlet Saltery.	J. C. Calfbreath	McHenry Inlet	480	1,800
South Arm Saltery	Jacob Louth	Moira Sound	216	1,736
Eagle Harbor Saltery	Oliver Smith	Eagle Harbor	1,375	3,750
Copper Harbor Saltery.	Craig Millar	Copper Harbor	1,760	5,500
Pritchard's Cove Fishery.	Great Northern Fish Co.	Union Bay	.....	.....
Beechers Pass Cannery.	Royer-Warnock Packing Co.	Beechers Pass	.....	.....
Port Althorpe Saltery	Perry Hinkle	Port Althorpe	.....	.....
Bartlett Bay Cannery	Icy Straits Packing Co.	Bartlett Bay	.....	.....
Taku Point Fishery	do	Taku Inlet	.....	.....
Sundry (estimated)	Salteries not reported.	.....	5,000	17,500
Total	.....	.....	2,076,661	6,926,167

A glance at this table shows that there are 71 canneries reported (and possibly a number from which returns were not secured). These 71 canneries produced last year over 2,000,000 cases of salmon, of the value of nearly $7,000,000. I call attention to these facts to show what a gigantic industry this is, and the vast amount of fish being produced; and unless something is done in the line of encouragement for keeping up the supply there can be but one result in the near future, and that is the fish will be exterminated.

Mr. COWHERD. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Is there anything in existing law or in this bill that compels the man who puts up a cannery to maintain a hatchery also?

Mr. CUSHMAN. No.

Mr. COWHERD. Is not that the law of some States—either Oregon or Washington?

Mr. CUSHMAN. This is not the law in the State of Washington. I do not think it is in Oregon. Perhaps one of the Oregon members can inform the gentleman.

Mr. COWHERD. Ought it not to be included in the present bill—a provision that any man who puts up a cannery and destroys fish shall be compelled to maintain a hatchery at the same place?

Mr. CUSHMAN. That might be a good provision, but it certainly is not a necessary provision.

Mr. COWHERD. I have understood that was the law of Oregon or Washington. I have been told by persons who were interested and who were familiar with the situation in Alaska that that was the provision most needed there.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I do not consider it so. That might be a good provision—doubtless it would be, but it is not a necessary provision.

Mr. McCLEARY. Is it not required of owners of canneries that they put back four times the number of spawn that they take out fish in Alaska?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I never heard that such a regulation existed or such a law had been enacted. But be that as it may, we are now discussing the provisions of this bill before us. The provisions of this measure, in my judgment, will operate to replenish the rapidly disappearing salmon of Alaska. And it only gives the man who builds and maintains the hatchery a portion of what his own thrift produces. There is nothing more unfair in allowing the man who plants fish to reap a portion of the crop that he has planted than there is in allowing a man who plants a crop of wheat to reap all of that which he has sown.

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. PAYNE. I was going to make a suggestion. This seems to be an important bill and a bill that certainly has some merit, and which ought to be examined by the members. I was going to suggest to my colleague to let the bill go over until to-morrow morning, or some other day.

Mr. SULZER. Well, I consent to that under the circumstances, and ask to have it go over until Monday morning next.

Mr. PAYNE. Monday morning then.

Mr. SULZER. I will consent to let the bill go over until next Monday morning.

Mr. PAYNE. To remain in the same status as it now is, subject to objection.

Mr. SULZER. Let me respectfully suggest to every member here that between now and next Monday morning he get a copy of the report of the committee on this bill, and if he will read that report I know he will be in favor of this bill. It is one of the most instructive and interesting reports that has ever been made on this subject of salmon in Alaska. Its perusal will amply repay anyone for the time occupied.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to my friend just there that we have had such disastrous experiences in the waters of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands from the agents of the Treasury Department and our legislation all along that line that I have come to regard with something of caution any proposition to confer any rights up there, on anybody's report, without the fullest possible examination. Now, I am willing that the bill shall go over until Monday, so far as I am concerned, keeping the status that it now occupies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that the bill has no status now. It is not before the House. A request has been made for unanimous consent, and objection has been made.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, no; I ask unanimous consent that the bill be made a special order for next Monday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday next.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to his asking unanimous consent then.

Mr. SULZER. Subject to the objection of my distinguished friend.

Mr. CANNON. Or anybody else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. CANNON. I will look into the bill between now and Monday morning.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman will, and I know if he does he will favor the bill as heartily as I do.

BRIDGE NEAR OACOMA, S. DAK.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2510.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2510) extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Oacoma, S. Dak.

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the commencement of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near the village of Oacoma, in the State of South Dakota, authorized by the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge at or near Oacoma, S. Dak.," approved January 28, 1899, be, and the same is hereby, extended to July 1, 1903, and the time for the completion of said bridge be, and the same is hereby, extended to July 1, 1906.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from New York demanded the regular order, as I understood.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I withdrew that tacitly for this bill. It seems to be only a bridge bill; but I will call up that resolution immediately after the consideration of this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not understand the gentleman had withdrawn the demand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the rule on which the previous question was ordered yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the vote on the rule reported by the Committee on Rules at the last session, and the Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the rule may be considered as adopted, that the time may be extended to four hours, to be equally divided between the two sides, to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] on that side and myself on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the rule may be amended by extending the time for general debate to four hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Connecticut and two hours by the gentleman from Missouri, and that the rule as so amended be considered as adopted. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House numbered 178, have had the same under consideration, and report the following in lieu thereof:

"Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12704) to increase the subsidiary silver coinage, and after two hours of general debate the bill shall be read by paragraphs for amendment, and upon the conclusion of said reading the Committee of the Whole shall rise and report the bill with amendments, if any, to the House: Provided, That the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House to consider the said bill shall continue privileged each day until said bill is disposed of, not, however, to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or conference reports."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the rule.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 77, answered "present" 25, not voting 150; as follows:

YEAS—99.

Alexander,	Butler, Pa.	Draper,	Haugen,
Allen, Me.	Cannon,	Emerson,	Hedge,
Ball, Del.	Cassel,	Esch,	Hemenway,
Barney,	Connell,	Fletcher,	Henry, Conn.
Bates,	Conner,	Foerderer,	Hepburn,
Bishop,	Coombs,	Fowler,	Hill,
Blackburn,	Corliss,	Gaines, W. Va.	Howell,
Boutell,	Cromer,	Gardner, Mich.	Hull,
Bowersock,	Currier,	Graff,	Jack,
Brick,	Cushman,	Graham,	Jackson, Md.
Bromwell,	Dahle,	Greene, Mass.	Jenkins,
Brown,	Dalzell,	Grow,	Jones, Wash.
Burke, S. Dak.	Douglas,	Hamilton,	Knapp,
Burleigh,	Dovener,	Hanbury,	Lacey,

Lawrence,	Moody, N. C.	Payne,	Stevens, Minn.
Lessler,	Moody, Oreg.	Powers, Mass.	Sulloway,
Littlefield,	Morgan,	Prince,	Tawney,
Loud,	Morris,	Ray, N. Y.	Thomas, Iowa
McCall,	Mudd,	Reeves,	Tirrell,
McCleary,	Needham,	Roberts,	Vreeland,
McLachlan,	Olmsted,	Rumple,	Wachter,
Mann,	Overstreet,	Schirm,	Wadsworth,
Martin,	Palmer,	Shattuc,	Warner,
Minor,	Parker,	Smith, Ill.	Weeks.
Mondell,	Patterson, Pa.	Sperry,

NAYS—77.

Allen, Ky.	Gilbert,	McCulloch,	Shafroth,
Ball, Tex.	Griggs,	McLain,	Smith, Ky.
Bell,	Hall,	McRae,	Snook,
Bowie,	Hay,	Maddox,	Sparkman,
Brantley,	Henry, Miss.	Mahoney,	Spight,
Breazeale,	Jackson, Kans.	Mickey,	Sulzer,
Broussard,	Jett,	Neville,	Sutherland,
Brundidge,	Kehoe,	Newlands,	Swanson,
Burgess,	Kern,	Pugsley,	Thayer,
Burleson,	Kitchin, Claude	Randell, Tex.	Thompson,
Burnett,	Kleberg,	Ransdell, La.	Vandiver,
Caldwell,	Kluttz,	Reid,	Williams, Ill.
Candler,	Lanham,	Rhea, Va.	Williams, Miss.
Clayton,	Lester,	Richardson, Tenn.	Wilson,
Cochran,	Lever,	Robinson, Nebr.	Woods,
Cowherd,	Lewis, Ga.	Rucker,	Wooten,
Creamer,	Little,	Ryan,	Zenor.
De Armond,	Livingston,	Scarborough,
Finley,	Lloyd,	Selby,
Fitzgerald,	McAndrews,	Shackleford,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—25.

Bartlett,	Johnson,	Rixey,	Steele,
Cassingham,	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Robertson, La.	Stephens, Tex.
Conry,	Metcalf,	Ruppert,	Tate,
Evans,	Meyer, La.	Shallenberger,	Taylor, Ala.
Gaines, Tenn.	Miers, Ind.	Slayden,
Gibson,	Pierce,	Smith, Iowa
Irwin,	Pou,	Stark,

NOT VOTING—150.

Acheson,	Dick,	Kahn,	Russell,
Adams,	Dinsmore,	Ketcham,	Scott,
Adamson,	Dougherty,	Knox,	Shelden,
Aplin,	Driscoll,	Kyle,	Sheppard,
Babcock,	Eddy,	Lamb,	Sherman,
Bankhead,	Edwards,	Landis,	Showalter,
Bartholdt,	Elliott,	Lassiter,	Sibley,
Beidler,	Feely,	Latimer,	Sims,
Bellamy,	Fleming,	Lewis, Pa.	Skiles,
Belmont,	Flood,	Lindsay,	Small,
Benton,	Fordney,	Littauer,	Smith, H. C.
Bingham,	Foss,	Long,	Smith, S. W.
Blakeney,	Foster, Ill.	Loudenslager,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Boreing,	Foster, Vt.	Lovering,	Snodgrass,
Bristow,	Fox,	McClellan,	Southard,
Brownlow,	Gardner, N. J.	McDermott,	Southwick,
Bull,	Gill,	Mahon,	Stewart, N. J.
Burk, Pa.	Gillet, N. Y.	Marshall,	Stewart, N. Y.
Burkett,	Gillett, Mass.	Maynard,	Storm,
Burton,	Glenn,	Mercer,	Talbert,
Butler, Mo.	Goldfogle,	Miller,	Tayler, Ohio
Calderhead,	Gooch,	Moon,	Thomas, N. C.
Capron,	Gordon,	Morrell,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Clark,	Green, Pa.	Moss,	Tompkins, Ohio
Cooney,	Griffith,	Mutchler,	Tongue,
Cooper, Tex.	Grosvenor,	Naphen,	Trimble,
Cooper, Wis.	Haskins,	Nevin,	Underwood,
Cousins,	Heatwole,	Norton,	Van Voorhis,
Crowley,	Henry, Tex.	Otjen,	Wanger,
Crumpacker,	Hildebrant,	Padgett,	Warnock,
Curtis,	Hitt,	Patterson, Tenn.	Watson,
Darragh,	Holliday,	Pearre,	Wheeler,
Davey, La.	Hooker,	Perkins,	White,
Davidson,	Hopkins,	Powers, Me.	Wiley,
Davis, Fla.	Howard,	Reeder,	Wright,
Dayton,	Hughes,	Richardson, Ala.	Young.
De Graffenreid,	Jones, Va.	Robb,
Deemer,	Joy,	Robinson, Ind.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. GILL with Mr. ROBB.

Mr. BURKETT with Mr. SHALLENBERGER.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. CASSINGHAM.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. NAPHEN.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. CONRY.

Mr. HASKINS with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. CURTIS with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. CREAMER.

Mr. POWERS of Maine with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. DAYTON with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. SNODGRASS.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. STARK.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

Mr. REEDER with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. SKILES with Mr. TALBERT.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. HOLLIDAY with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

Mr. IRWIN with Mr. GOOCH.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. CLARK.

Mr. GORDON with Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. PIERCE.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey with Mr. MOON.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. FOX.

For this session:

Mr. METCALF with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

Mr. BULL with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT with Mr. MAYNARD.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. TATE.

Mr. BOREING with Mr. TRIMBLE.

Mr. MORRELL with Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. BELMONT.

Mr. DEEMER with Mr. MUTCHLER.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RUPPERT.

For one week:

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont with Mr. POU.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.

Mr. BEIDLER with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. DOUGHERTY.

Mr. GIBSON with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. GRIFFITH.

Mr. BATES with Mr. BELLAMY.

For ten days:

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. JONES of Virginia, until the 29th.

For this day:

Mr. OTJEN with Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. RIXEY.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. BUTLER of Missouri.

Mr. JOY with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. COONEY.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. BURTON with Mr. MCDERMOTT.

Mr. CAPRON with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. DICK with Mr. FEELY.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. FLEMING.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. GILLET of New York with Mr. FOSTER of Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. GLENN.

Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. LONG with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. LASSITER.

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. LATIMER.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. LINDSAY.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. WARNOCK with Mr. WILEY.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. SHEPPARD.

On this vote:

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. HITT with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS], and I desire to withdraw my vote in the negative and answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I have a telegram from Mr. BROWNLOW stating that he is ill, and desires me to pair with him. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and be recorded as paired.

Mr. PIERCE's name was called, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I notice that my name was read as paired with General GROSVENOR, of Ohio. I have voted "no" on this proposition, and I desire to withdraw that vote and be marked as "present."

The name of Mr. BARTLETT was called, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in his seat and listening to his name when it should have been called?

Mr. HAUGEN. I was not in my seat, but I was listening for my name and did not hear it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. HAUGEN, and he voted "aye," as above recorded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but I find I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH, and I desire to be recorded as present.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but I see that I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLLIDAY. I desire to withdraw that vote and be marked present.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 99 and the nays 75, present 23; the ayes have it, and accordingly the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of House bill 12704, to increase the subsidiary silver coinage, and the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. TAWNEY, will take the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12704) to increase the subsidiary silver coinage, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements, and thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding, and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, is hereby repealed.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all members who address the committee on this bill may be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That request will have to be made in the House.

Mr. HILL. I do not think there will be any objection to that when we get into the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done in individual cases by the committee, but general leave to print can not be granted by the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised last night when the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] objected to the consideration of this bill, and especially because of his reasons for objecting to it, for I find in the RECORD this morning that he declares it is a breach of good faith to bring this bill up for consideration on the ground that in the act of March 14, 1900, there was a distinct promise and agreement, forced by certain silver Senators in the Senate, that the bullion in the Treasury should be coined into silver dollars; that that promise or agreement was reached in order to strike out from the House bill of March 14, 1900, a provision stopping the coinage of silver dollars.

I will say to the gentleman that he has studied the RECORD to poor advantage; that there was no such provision embodied in the House bill. There was no such language, and is not now any such language in the act of March 14, 1900. The proposition to which he refers was in the war-revenue act, and the only promise—and I have taken pains to verify my statement this morning—the only promise that was made then in that bill was to attach the famous bimetallic amendment to the end of the act of March 14, 1900, and it stands there still, so that his charge that there is a breach of faith on the part of anybody is wholly unfounded, and there is no justification for it whatever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did not the gold-standard act, as it passed the House of Representatives, contain a provision for the stopping of the coinage of silver dollars?

Mr. HILL. It did not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the gentleman mean to say that under that act as it passed the coinage of silver dollars is to be continued?

Mr. HILL. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not examined it.

Mr. HILL. I thought the gentleman had not when he made the statement last night.

Mr. SHAFROTH. My impression is that that is the fact.

Mr. HILL. It is not the fact; neither of the statements contained in the gentleman's charge last night are correct. The House of Representatives was held up in 1898, and a provision compelling one million and a half silver dollars a month to be coined, or else no provision would be made for the expenses of the Spanish war. That bill was passed here along toward midnight, and I had the honor to be one of five who voted against that provision, distinctly understanding that the Congress of the United States was being held up by a few men to compel the coinage of silver dollars rather than provide for the expenses of the Spanish war. It is no breach of faith, Mr. Chairman, in no sense whatever.

Now, I notice, Mr. Chairman, that when the bill was called up the number of the bill was wrongly stated, and I desire, before proceeding to discuss the merits, to remove any possible misunderstanding in regard to what bill is now before the House of Representatives. On the 13th of January the Committee on Coinage reported a bill to accomplish two things.

First, to provide for the maintenance of the gold standard, and, second, to increase the subsidiary coinage. The part relating to the increase of the subsidiary coinage is the bill now before the House. The other bill provoked discussion and involved possibly certain political considerations, and in order to avoid anything of that kind and to meet the requirements of the Treasury Department with reference to a necessary part of our currency, the disputed part of the bill was cut out, and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures reported later so much of the measure as related to subsidiary coinage only. That is the bill we have now before us.

There is involved here no question of the exchangeability of the silver dollar, no question of the redemption of the silver dollar, no question of any provision relating to the maintenance of the gold standard directly, but simply a question of providing the country with a necessary portion of the currency called subsidiary coinage.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just at this point I would be glad if the gentleman would explain to the Committee of the Whole what is omitted from this bill which is contained in what is known as "the Fowler bill."

Mr. HILL. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is no relation whatever between the two bills, except that 14 lines of this bill are found among a large number of sections in what is known as "the Fowler bill." The two bills relate to entirely different subjects.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman state, then, what is omitted here from the original bill?

Mr. HILL. All the provisions relating to the exchangeability or the redemption of silver in gold. The bill before the House relates only to the question of subsidiary coinage.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Those omitted provisions are in "the Fowler bill."

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; the bill still on the Calendar—House bill 7645.

Mr. Chairman, the provisions of this bill are so absolutely innocent—and I will detain the House for only a short time in stating them—that when the minority of the Coinage Committee came to make up their minority report they did not even refer to the propositions contained in the bill now before the House. They expended their entire energy in controverting the proposition of the necessity of the exchangeability of the silver dollar in gold. It was therefore reasonable to suppose that when this bill should come up for action it would come up with the full consent and concurrence of the members of the minority. Its provisions are so plain and distinct that it is even questionable whether every man, no matter how strong a silver man he may be, may not happily and usefully vote for this bill. I remember that a day or two after the bill had passed through the committee——

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the bill provide for the repeal of the provision of law directing the coinage of bullion in the Treasury into standard silver dollars?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does it not also provide that the silver bullion in the Treasury may be converted, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, into subsidiary coin?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; so far as the public necessity may require.

Mr. COCHRAN. And does it not provide that silver dollars already in existence may be recoined into subsidiary coin?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; so far as the public necessities may require.

Mr. COCHRAN. And the gentleman is astonished that the minority is not perfectly satisfied with that kind of a bill!

Mr. HILL. I stated that when the minority made their report—and they had abundance of time to make it—they never referred in that report to a single provision or a single line of the bill which is now before the House. It was therefore reasonable to suppose that they had no objection to it; and a consistent silver man can not have any objection to it. Indeed, a day or two after the bill came out of the committee, I saw a paper published in Denver—the Denver News—containing large black scare headlines, in which it was charged that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] was opposing the coinage of silver. [Laughter.] I have here before me now a paper published in Alabama accusing me of having changed over from the gold standard to the silver standard, and declaring in an editorial a column and a half long that the Republicans had stolen the Democratic thunder.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me a word? I wish to say that that position of the papers in the State of Colorado arose from the fact that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] in introducing his bill entitled it "A bill to increase the subsidiary silver coinage," leading the people there naturally to suppose that they were going to get more and more silver out there. Therefore they concluded that the gentleman from Connecticut had become a great champion of silver. Out there they did not get any account of the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, this is purely an administrative measure, absolutely necessary for carrying on properly the business of the country, and it can be consistently voted for by every man. I do not care whether he is in favor of a single gold standard, of a gold and silver standard—either one. It being an administrative measure, I desire to read to the House the views of the Director of the Mint and the Secretary of the Treasury upon the question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman refer back to the first statement that he made, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HILL. The Director of the Mint writes me under date of March 20 as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, March 20, 1902.

Hon. E. J. HILL,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to our conversation upon the subject of legislation to authorize an increase in the coinage of subsidiary silver, I submit the following statement showing the stock of subsidiary coin in circulation outside of the Treasury on the 1st day of March for the last five years:

March 1, 1897	$60,246,493
March 1, 1898	64,618,802
March 1, 1899	69,496,609
March 1, 1900	74,341,322
March 1, 1901	80,853,107
March 1, 1902	83,441,791

This shows a net absorption by the country of nearly $5,000,000 per year. The act of March 14, 1900, authorized the use of bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, for this coinage, but limited the total stock in the country to $100,000,000. The stock in the country on the 1st day of the present month was $92,859,794, of which $9,418,003 was in the Treasury. These figures make it apparent that there must be further legislation at an early day. The stock in the Treasury at this time is always larger than in the more active season of trade, accumulating after January 1 and reaching its lowest point in the fall months. For several years the Treasury has been hard pressed by the fall demand and frequently obliged to fill orders in part only. Now that the new mint at Philadelphia is completed this difficulty will end if Congress will grant requisite authority to execute the coinage.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] last night said that we had $12,000,000 in the Treasury, and therefore needed no legislation on this subject. I want to call his attention to the fact that to-day of that $12,000,000 there are three millions that is worn and abraded and not fit for circulation, and that that amount is small compared to the average amount of worn and abraded coin in the Treasury. There is ordinarily from six to seven million of useless coin in the Treasury carried in this item of subsidiary coin on the daily statement which the gentleman holds in his hand.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The facts are, Mr. Chairman, that in 1893 there were but $2,500,000 in the Treasury of these silver subsidiary coins.

Mr. HILL. I admit it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, there was a demand at that time for silver, but now, when you have got $12,870,000, as shown by this morning's report, it shows there is no necessity for it.

Mr. HILL. The Director of the Mint goes on to say:

The present amount in the Treasury is not more than a fair stock to carry at all times. It is divided between the Treasury and nine subtreasuries, and comprises half dollars, quarter dollars, and dimes. A considerable portion of it is always worn and uncurrent, and the stock on hand can not be reduced far below what it now is without being broken in some of the offices.

I beg to submit that there is no occasion for limiting the stock of this subsidiary coin to a specific amount, making legislation repeatedly necessary. The demand is continuous, increasing with the population and business of the country, and there can be no difference of opinion about the necessity for meeting it or about the amount required from time to time, for it can only be put into circulation in response to a public demand and in exchange for legal-tender money. If the Secretary of the Treasury is given authority to meet the current demand, there is no way in which the discretion can be injuriously used.

The Treasury held on March 1, 40,132,145 fine ounces of silver, which is being reduced monthly at the rate of about 1,100,000 ounces in the coinage of silver dollars and to meet the current demand for subsidiary coin. At this rate the stock on hand will last less than two years, after which the Government will be obliged to enter the market as a buyer of silver.

I will state that the Acting Director of the Mint told me the day before yesterday that if this or some similar bill was not passed the mints of the United States would have to stop on the 1st day of November next making subsidiary coin. Continuing, he says:

If all of the bullion on hand were diverted to subsidiary coinage, it would, at the average rate of the past five years, last about ten years. But the increased population and business to be expected will enlarge the demand, and if our money should enter into general circulation in the Philippines and other Territories which are likely to use it this bullion would hardly last over six or seven years.

Under these conditions it would appear to be good business policy to hold the bullion remaining in the Treasury to meet the demand. No satisfactory reason can be given for continuing the coinage of silver dollars.

I want to say that this bill does not stop the coinage of silver dollars by law. It simply gives the Secretary of the Treasury discretion to do as he sees fit—to use the bullion for the dollar or to use it for the subsidiary coin, as in his judgment he thinks best. I want to add that in my judgment, if the discretion is given him, as a wise and prudent man he never will coin another dollar, but it does not require him to take that position.

Reading further:

The purchasing act of 1890 was an experiment, its advocates hoping that the demand created would advance the price of silver to its old parity with gold and free coinage be the result. The policy was a compromise between opposing opinions, was unsuccessful, and has been definitely abandoned. If this bullion was not in the Treasury, few would advocate its purchase for dollar coinage. It is in the Treasury, but may be diverted to fractional coin, and to do this will work a saving to the Treasury of approximately $20,000,000.

Respectfully,

GEO. E. ROBERTS,
Director of the Mint.

Approved.

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GROW. The subsidiary coin now are not the proportionate parts of the silver dollar.

Mr. HILL. No.

Mr. GROW. Why should not the subsidiary coin, while we are now dealing with that subject, be made equal proportions, two halves equaling the present silver dollar and four quarters equaling it, instead of being proportionate parts of 384?

Mr. HILL. For this reason the subsidiary coin is not full legal tender and you can not compel a person to accept it in satisfaction of a contract beyond certain limited amounts of $10 to $20. A dollar is legal tender, and, as I will show you by and by, Germany has adopted precisely the position which the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicates we should take, of recoining our legal-tendar dollar into token dollars on the same basis as the subsidiary coin; but we have carried the legal-tender dollar as a dollar of intrinsic value, which my friends on the other side thought by forcing the purchase of silver would ultimately bring it up in intrinsic value, or to the value at which we carried it nominally, and for that reason, the one being a token dollar and the other a full legal-tender dollar, the proportion in each is made to vary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why should you ever have that?

Mr. HILL. The reason that it should be changed is that the experiment that was made has been a total failure, as I will proceed to show you.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman does not understand my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will yield.

Mr. HILL. I will, after a while. I will yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROW. One other question. As we have the Philippine possessions now, we make a half dollar correspond with the dollar that is being used in the East Indies and in China; and would we not dispose of more silver out of the country that never would come back if our proportionate parts of the dollar were made in such shape as to meet that coinage?

Mr. HILL. I will take that up by and by. I think we would have the same experience as we had with the trade dollar. It would come back to us the same as that did. We would have to redeem it in gold as we redeemed the trade dollar in gold.

Mr. GROW. It did not correspond to any coined dollar.

Mr. HILL. I know it was larger, and more silver in it than any dollar we had.

Mr. GROW. It did not correspond with any coin in the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was interrogating you about the coining of the half dollars and the component parts of it now. Is it not a fact that up to 1853 we coined a half dollar, a quarter dollar, a dime, and a half dime, and made them full legal tender, as much so as gold and silver?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And did not all of those coins coined up to that date remain full legal tender down to June, 1874?

Mr. HILL. They did not "remain" full legal tender. They went out of the country full legal tender.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They were reported as having been here all the time. Now, why do you make this subsidiary coinage of less value?

Mr. HILL. For the simple reason that the experience of all mankind from that day to this has utterly repudiated silver money as a full legal tender, and almost every civilized nation on earth, as I will show you, has eliminated it from its system of currency; and the very thing which the gentleman from Tennessee cites of the minor coinage or subsidiary coinage being full legal tender up to 1853 is the best illustration of it, from the fact that it all fled the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will not agree to that as a statement historically true.

Mr. GROW. Is not that what we would like to have happen with our surplus silver?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. COCHRAN. I call the attention of my friend to the statement just made to say that the gentlemen on this side believe that by constant purchases of silver the price of it would be appreciated to parity with gold. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that every law authorizing the purchase of silver was a Republican law, and that the last one placed upon the statute book bears the name of the Sherman law, and was a Republican measure.

Mr. HILL. I have not the slightest dispute with the gentleman on that question, and if I had I should not inject it into this debate on the subsidiary coinage.

Mr. COCHRAN. But you said just now that such and such legislation would give us such and such results. I call your attention to the fact that this legislation has been resorted to here by Republicans, and not by Democrats.

Mr. HILL. We will see about that as we go along.

The last quotation I made from the Director of the Mint showed that this had been an experiment, its advocates hoping that the demand created would advance the price of silver to its old parity with gold and free coinage be the result. It seems to me that it is not inappropriate to refer briefly to the experience of the United States on that question. On February 28, 1878, the value of the silver in the dollar was 92¼ cents, and under the provisions of the Bland-Allison Act we went on to purchase silver, hoping to maintain the price or to bring it up to a parity with gold.

Under the provisions of that act we bought $308,279,261 worth, and continued to buy until July 14, 1890, when, the hoped for results not having been secured, we passed another law, called the Sherman law. Silver had then dropped to 83¼ cents in the dollar. Under that act we bought $155,931,002 worth of bullion, so that under the two laws we purchased $464,210,263 worth of bullion. We continued to coin up to the 1st of May, 1902, and are coining now, but the figures which I shall give you are all of them dated May 1 of this year. Under our purchases and coinage the value of the silver in our legal-tender dollar has gone from 92¼ cents down to 39.7 cents, and that is about what it is worth to-day. We have lost on this silver speculation, not between the face of the dollar and the bullion price, but we have actually lost on that silver which we have bought $282,950,000, having paid that much more for it than we would have paid for it if we had bought it on the first day of this month.

What is the situation now? On the 1st of May we had remaining bullion to the amount of $32,935,124, and the proposition of this bill is to coin that bullion, or to give the Secretary of the Treasury the power to coin that bullion into subsidiary coin rather than to continue to coin it into standard silver dollars.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to interrupt the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The gentleman in the opening of his speech referred to the fact that there was nothing contained in the House bill relative to the using of the silver bullion in the Treasury for subsidiary coinage.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, you stated this, that there was no agreement whatever between the Senate and the House except upon the bimetallic basis.

Mr. HILL. I say it now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to read you——

Mr. HILL. I do not want you to do so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is a statement.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman can read it in his own time. I stated distinctly that there was no proposition positively to stop the coinage of the silver dollar.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But there was a provision.

Mr. HILL. I object to you occupying my time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is the compromise upon this very matter.

Mr. HILL. That is a question that can be very easily determined by the members of the conference committee who are upon the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is the bill, and we have the Senate provision contained in it.

Mr. HILL. I have it.

Mr. Chairman, if we coin the remaining bullion now in the Treasury—$32,000,000 worth—making it into dollars, it will amount to $47,053,493 above what we now have, and will give a total, when the bullion is all exhausted, of $586,855,298, and the difference between the nominal and actual value will be $359,742,297, or so much pure fiat.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit me? I have not had the opportunity of hearing all of his remarks. I know he has gone into this question very carefully. What is his opinion as to the length of time that the bullion now in the Treasury, if coined into subsidiary coin, would meet the demands?

Mr. HILL. I will go into that very carefully soon, so that the House may fully understand what they are voting on.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman repeat the figures that he gave just a moment ago as to the excess?

Mr. HILL. Three hundred and fifty-nine million seven hundred and forty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-nine dollars and sixty-seven cents.

Mr. VANDIVER. Now, will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. VANDIVER. Do these dollars circulate in this country?

Mr. HILL. I will refer to that a little later on.

Mr. VANDIVER. Why not do it now?

Mr. HILL. I would rather not be diverted from the statement I am now making.

Mr. VANDIVER. A direct answer to the question would not take as much time as it takes to evade it.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, what has been the result of this kind of experiment, and what has been the effect on the circulation? I would like gentlemen on both sides to notice very briefly how much we have accomplished in this experiment or speculation which we have made and in which we have lost $359,000,000—an amount sufficient to irrigate the States of Colorado and Nevada, as those gentlemen want to have done now. If we could have saved this amount, we would have saved an amount that would have paid the expenses of the Spanish war, built the Nicaragua Canal, and the best navy in the world, if we had not adopted the foolish enactments which we have within the last twenty years.

The largest amount of silver dollars which have ever been in circulation under this experiment was in December, 1900, when we had $76,182,326 in use. The amount in May, 1892, was $69,403,330, about 12 per cent of the amount we have had coined. What has it cost us to get out the 10 per cent which we have in circulation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In computing the loss in the purchase of silver bullion and the coinage into silver dollars, will the gentleman tell us how much of actual silver was represented in the money which is to-day used by us as a part of our circulation?

Mr. HILL. There was on the 1st day of May $69,403,330 in circulation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But do not we also have silver certificates circulating as money?

Mr. HILL. We do, and these certificates would circulate just as readily if they were silver notes promising to pay a silver dollar with only an ordinary reserve of silver maintained against them, precisely as the greenback is a gold note with a gold reserve maintained against it. If the silver certificate was changed to a note, the great mass of silver could be sold and converted into gold and gold redemption of the notes maintained. Some have advocated this course. I do not, for I believe we can carry the silver with proper precaution and avoid this great loss.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Well, the gentleman admits that there are six or seven hundred million of silver represented; and that amount added to the coin is the circulating medium?

Mr. HILL. Not at all.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. What would the circulating medium amount to——

Mr. HILL. I am coming to that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If you did not have silver.

Mr. HILL. I would like to follow this through successively. Now, then, what has it cost to give circulation to 69,403,330 silver dollars which have been scattered broadcast all over this country? There have been transported over this country $600,608,000 free of cost, and all the result we have got in permanent circulation is $69,403,330. We have paid out at the expense of the United States Government $2.41 a thousand for hundreds of millions of dollars, which we have been carrying backward and forward over the United States, making a total——

Mr. COCHRAN rose.

Mr. HILL. I beg to be allowed to finish one topic at a time.

Mr. COCHRAN. I just want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the same thing which takes place in relation to the Government coinage and the interior of the country continually takes place between the Eastern bankers and their Western correspondents?

Mr. HILL. Absolutely not true. If the gentleman wants to prove that statement he can do it on his own time. The Government does not pay the transportation on——

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Connecticut misapprehends my question. I asked him if it is not true that the same thing takes place between the Eastern bankers and their Western correspondents?

Mr. HILL. I will take that up directly. I prefer not to answer that just now until I finish this topic that I am now on. The total cost to the United States for transportation of this silver to get 12 per cent of it into circulation was $1,450,813, and the cost of keeping in circulation $69,000,000 we have now outstanding has been $20.90 a thousand.

That is not all; that is the smallest part of it. Since the circulation of the silver dollar reached its maximum in 1900, it fell off, and in 1901 it increased a little. It increased $1,051,977, and what do you suppose it cost this Government to secure that increase in 1901 of one million and fifty-one thousand silver dollars? It cost $83.32 for every thousand dollars. So that every dollar—every silver dollar—that was added to the increased cirlation in 1901 cost the United States Government nearly 8½ cents apiece.

A MEMBER. How do you explain that?

Mr. HILL. By reason of the free transportation which the Government gives, it goes out and then right back again without the bags ever being opened. It is called for to pay debts. The Government is continually imposed upon day after day. We secured an increase in the circulation of silver dollars in 1901 at an expense of 8.3 cents on every dollar that was put into circulation. Is it not time this experiment was stopped? Is not the Director of the Mint correct in saying that there is no good reason to-day why another silver dollar should be coined?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I have already yielded too much, and my time is rapidly passing.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wanted to ask the gentleman if we do not have the same expense as to the subsidiary coinage as it is on the silver dollar?

Mr. HILL. Not at all; the subsidiary silver goes out and practically remains out. There is a slight change, but the gentleman himself would not for a moment ask such a question if he had examined the reports of the Treasurer of the United States. There is not any sort of comparison; we never have shipped $600,000,000 of subsidiary coin. The idea of its costing 8½ cents on the dollar to keep out subsidiary coin! Why, the gentleman, if he had examined the reports of the Treasury Department, would see that there could be no foundation whatever for such a question.

Now I come to another point in this matter. Is it any wonder, in view of the figures I have given of the absolute total failure of this experiment and the cost to the Government of 8½ cents on every dollar by which our circulation is now being increased, that the legal-tender dollar should go out? What has been the experience of other nations? I ask the gentlemen on this floor, if they have any interest in this question, to take the annual statistics of the monetary stocks of the different countries of the world, and they will find that Great Britain, Austria, Japan, Russia, Norway, Sweden, Spain, Switzerland, Servia, Roumania, Portugal, Cape Colony, Finland, Egypt, Denmark, Cuba, the South African Republics, Canada, and Australia, all of them, have absolutely eliminated the legal-tender silver coin from their currency and have none of it whatever to-day. The United States, with six hundred millions of it, have only got 12 per cent of the amount into circulation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not true that nearly every country the gentleman has enumerated, except Germany and Switzerland and Belgium——

Mr. HILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have just been informed by the Chair that I have but fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. COCHRAN again rose.

Mr. HILL. I decline to yield. I have already declined as courteously as I knew how.

Now, what shall we do with the 88 per cent of silver which is not in circulation? I will state what the bill proposes to do. On the 1st of May we had $32,935,124 worth of bullion. If coined into subsidiary coinage, it would make $50,320,608. We are compelled now by law to coin it into dollars at the rate of $1,500,000 a month. We might coin it into subsidiary coinage, which the people need and will circulate, instead of coining it into dollars, which they do not want and will not circulate; and the difference to the Treasury Department would be $3,500 every day in the year. That is simply the difference between coining that bullion into subsidiary coinage and coining it into standard silver dollars—$3,500 every day in the year.

A gentleman asked me a little while ago why we should not continue in circulation the silver certificates—whether they are not a part of our circulation. Yes; they are a part of our circulation; but it is not necessary to have in the Treasury the full amount of silver for those silver certificates any more than it is necessary to have in the Treasury the full amount of gold representing the greenbacks. If we take the course which Germany and other nations of the world have taken and recoin the silver dollars, the difference between the face value of that silver and the bullion value to-day would be $392,296,398, and the actual gain on recoinage would be $32,255,101.

The present legal limit of subsidiary coinage is $100,000,000. There is no reason why there should be any limit. The Acting Director of the mint advises me that the limit will be reached on the 1st day of November next, and that the mints will have to stop coining subsidiary then if the law is not changed. Now, what do we propose to do?

The amount of subsidiary coinage in circulation on the 1st of May was, in round numbers, $82,854,599. I will put the exact figures in the RECORD. The bullion could be coined into subsidiary coin, with the minting facilities we now have, in two years, and would make $50,320,608, making a total of $133,175,207. Can we absorb it? That is the whole question. Can we use it in the United States?

The Director of the Mint has shown that the normal increase is $5,000,000 annually, but in that normal increase he does not take into account Porto Rico; he does not take into account Cuba; he does not take into account the Philippine Islands.

I know there is a proposition pending in the Congress of the United States to have free and unlimited coinage of silver in the Philippine Islands. Sir, that would be a crime against civilization. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The last papers that came from Manila begged and pleaded that the first thing we should do there should be to withdraw the "bastard currency," as they called it, which they now have, and substitute American money. I know from personal observation there that American money is to-day in circulation. It would probably be a greater change in the commercial interests of the Philippine Islands to-day to put in any other form of currency than it would be to enact that American money should be legal tender there. I sincerely hope that no such proposition as I have just mentioned may be carried out, and if it is not we can put there from thirty to forty to fifty million dollars of American money, to our own advantage and the advantage of those people.

But we have in circulation $69,665,508 in silver certificates of the denomination of $1. If these were withdrawn, as they could be with great advantage to the country, from a financial point of view, taking into consideration the cost of circulation, as well as from a sanitary point of view, it would put all the bullion and twenty millions of silver dollars into circulation as subsidiary coin. Now, that is mere guesswork. The best way for us to judge as to what the United States can do with regard to the circulation of subsidiary coin is to see what other nations are doing. In 1878 we had $1.36 per capita circulation of subsidiary coin. Now we have $1.05. That is all.

Compare that with other nations. Great Britain has to-day $2.82; Denmark, $2.46; Switzerland, $3.24; Germany will have $3.50; Japan will have $2. With silver dollars in actual circulation it is doubtful whether we could expect to carry more than Japan. We ought to, a good deal more. That would be $2 per capita, and with a population of 85,000,000 in 1905, three years hence, when the bullion was coined, it would make $170,000,000 of subsidiary, or a recoinage of about $37,000,000 of the silver dollars in addition to the bullion.

Now, some gentlemen—the silver men—talk about the danger of eliminating our legal-tender silver dollar, when if you saturate this country with subsidiary, taking away only the one-dollar bills, you would still have 500,000,000 of silver dollars left. It is a common-sense proposition which this bill presents to you and not a political one in any sense whatever. Let us see whether we would be alone in carrying out this policy, and I want to call the attention of my friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], whose judgment I admire and whose honesty I respect, to this, and beg of him that he will not simply shut his eyes to everything that is going on around him and cling to his prejudices, but that he will read facts as they come along from day to day.

What are other nations doing? During the past five years the following changes have occurred—the world is not standing still: Austria has eliminated twenty-five millions of legal tender from her currency and concurrently increased her subsidiary coin from forty million to seventy-three million. Belgium has reduced her legal tender from fifty millions to thirty millions and her subsidiary from seven to four millions. France has reduced her legal tender—now note this—from four hundred and thirty-four million to three hundred and sixty-one million in the last five years and increased her subsidiary coinage from fifty-seven millions to fifty-nine millions.

Mr. GILBERT. You mean legal tender?

Mr. HILL. I mean legal-tender silver has cut it down from four hundred and thirty-four million to three hundred and sixty-one million. Russia has eliminated all her legal-tender silver and increased her subsidiary from forty millions to one hundred and two millions. Germany has reduced her legal tender from ninety-two millions to eighty millions and increased her subsidiary from one hundred and fifteen millions to one hundred and twenty-seven millions, and is recoining all the rest she has got into subsidiary coin.

By the convention of 1898 the Latin Union has begun the process, France agreeing to recoin 130,000,000 francs from 5-franc pieces, Belgium 6,000,000, Italy 30,000,000, and Switzerland 3,000,000. The only possible argument that can be advanced against this bill is the argument presented by the honest advocate of the silver standard, that by it the volume of silver dollars will be reduced, and from this he claims that the legal tender of the country will thereby be curtailed, and the commercial interests of the country injured. That is all that can be said.

Neither the statement nor the conclusion drawn from it is justified by the facts. With a subsidiary coinage of $3 per capita we will have left 502,967,007 silver dollars after this bill is in full effect. I am sorry to say that it is so. I wish it were not so; and I want the House distinctly to understand—and gentlemen on the other side—that when they fear that the silver circulation of legal tender is to be entirely eliminated a plain statement of facts shows that when the country is saturated with subsidiary coin up to the full amount of the average nations of the world we will still have over 500,000,000 of legal-tender silver dollars so long as the $2 bills remain outstanding.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. In just a minute. At the natural normal increase it would take a hundred years to eliminate that legal-tender silver from our circulation, and while some of us are young and active and vigorous, I doubt very much whether the results of a hundred years from now will affect any of us very materially. It may some of the gentlemen who are so vigorous on the other side of the House who are advocating the cause of silver.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, will the gentleman yield right there on his hundred-year proposition while I quote from his own report?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading):

> There is no question but that the convenience of the people of this country would be served by materially increasing the volume of subsidiary coin; and considering the requirements of those parts of the country where the silver dollar is preferred to its paper representative, your committee are of the opinion that if the policy of coining the bullion into subsidiary coin is followed by the recoinage of silver dollars into subsidiary coin not many years will pass before the entire volume will be disposed of.

Mr. HILL. Exactly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is that a hundred years?

Mr. HILL. That was a broad statement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is that a hundred years?

Mr. HILL. I have figured it out now accurately and brought it down to dollars and cents. There would be $502,967,007, and if the normal increase of five million a year be continued it would take a hundred years. As I said before, that eliminates the problem of the Philippine Islands, Cuba, Porto Rico, and so forth. That is a factor about which no man can do any more than guess.

Mr. FOWLER. And it eliminates the increase in population.

Mr. HILL. No; the increase in population is included. Now, another question. As I said before, the report of the minority was made on the first bill. They never referred to one of the provisions of the bill now pending. They took up and considered merely the question of exchangeability; but since this new bill was reported a report has been made bearing not at all upon the bill itself, but simply discussing the question of the withdrawal of the legal tenders.

Gentlemen, there is far more danger to this country and to the world to-day of inflation by reason of a glut of gold than there is of a scarcity of silver. The estimate of the world's production of gold the present year is $400,000,000, and I do not think that we need discuss this proposition on the basis that the business interests of the country are to be imperiled by the recoinage of the legal-tender silver dollar, which does not circulate and is locked up in the Treasury vaults.

The gentleman asked a question a little while ago in regard to the silver dollars. I will answer now from manuscript. What I would do, if I had the power, would be to abolish the silver certificates, except the five-dollar denomination, withdrawing all legal-tender silver dollars and lock them up in the Treasury against the five-dollar certificates, recoining the dollar piece as a token dollar, with limited tender qualities, for such dollar pieces as we needed for circulation, and holding the balance as a silver-bullion fund to be used for subsidiary, and redeeming the silver certificates, whenever they were presented for redemption, either in token dollars or in gold, at the will of the holder. That is what I would do.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did not the gentleman say that there is far more danger to the world, in his judgment, from a possible glut of gold than from any scarcity of silver?

Mr. HILL. No; I did not say that. I said there was far more danger of inflation from a glut of gold.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do you think that inflation by an increase of the quantity of gold would be harmful to the world?

Mr. HILL. Well, it would depend on circumstances. It would depend on the character of the inflation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, gold inflation.

Mr. HILL. I would prefer not to take my time now to answer that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Upon whom would the harm of this inflation fall?

Mr. HILL. I say I would prefer not to discuss that question. I would prefer to speak to the bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I understood you that you were willing to take the entire amount of silver certificates and the silver dollars and make them a direct charge upon the Government, payable in gold.

Mr. HILL. They are now.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. By law?

Mr. HILL. No; by practice, which is better than law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL. They are absolutely being so exchanged and have been ever since the gold standard was adopted, day after day, right straight along, and I want to say to the gentleman that one reason why I favor the exchangeability of the silver dollar for gold by law is the fear that at some time or other in the future there may be somebody in the Treasury Department who will stop that practice and bring a panic upon the country and put silver below par. That is one reason why I favor doing it by law. It is being done in practice every day, right straight along, and is the uniform current practice of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have never been able to get any such statement as that.

Mr. HILL. If you go to Mr. Roberts, United States Treasurer, he will make it to you.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He told me a month ago it was not the custom, and that they would not do it, and you could not exchange one money for the other.

Mr. HILL. I am advised by the Assistant Secretary that if the one and two dollar certificates were both taken away that probably 70 per cent would circulate as subsidiary coin and the other 30 per cent as silver dollars, and if that were done the result would be as follows——

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HILL. I would prefer not. We would then have $173,497,222 of subsidiary coin and 102,946,773 of silver dollars in actual circulation and $408,897,608 locked up in the Treasury.

Now, gentleman, I would be glad if I had the time to call your attention to just what Germany has done in this respect. We are not marking out a new course in which this Congress should go, but we are doing just exactly what other nations have done; exactly what Japan and Germany have done, who have sold very largely of their bullion, but are recoining the remainder. Now, I will read from report of the Director of the Mint:

> By the law of 1873 the German Empire adopted the gold standard. Good progress in this direction was made for several years, but, owing to the heavy fall in the price of silver, gold could only be purchased at a great loss, and the sales of silver were suspended by the Government in 1879 with the sanction of the imperial diet.
>
> Thus a large amount of silver thalers (1 thaler equals 3 marks, or 2s. 11d.) remained in circulation which, under the law of 1873, retained full discharging power the same as gold—i. e., the thalers were legal tender to any amount. The stock of thalers was somewhat reduced in subsequent years, but at the end of 1899, according to an official estimate, there were still 120,000,000 thalers left, equal to 360,000,000 marks.
>
> Therefore, although nominally the gold standard existed in Germany, a large amount of silver money enjoyed perfect equality with gold, and the standard was a limping one. When the sale of thalers was suspended in 1879 on account of the depreciation of silver, it was hoped that silver would recover, but the depreciation of this metal has continued ever since, and enormous loss would have resulted from selling the thalers, for while their face value is 2 shillings 11 pence, their market value is about 1 shilling 4 pence at a silver price of 27 pence per ounce standard.
>
> The new law provides for the abolition of the limping standard without any such loss by converting the thalers, which are legal tender to any amount, into imperial silver money, which is legal tender up to 20 marks (£1) only. This leaves the total amount of silver money practically unchanged, with this important difference, however, that when the last thaler has been recoined there will be no more silver money left which is legal tender to any amount. The whole of the silver money circulating in the Empire will then be "Scheidemuenze" (legal tender to £1).
>
> * * * * * * * * *
>
> The Imperial Bank has spared no effort to force its large stock of thalers into circulation, but they have invariably come back within a very short time.

The Government therefrom concluded that the public will not have thalers, a statement which has met with considerable opposition on the part of bimetallists in the imperial diet.

* * * * * * *

Article 4 of the new law fixes the maximum limit for the issue of imperial silver coins at 15 marks per head of the population of the Empire. The silver required for the fresh coinings is to be provided by melting down thalers, and to bring the imperial silver money up to 15 marks per head of the population the entire stock of thalers will have to be used.

The coining or recoining of the new issues of imperial silver money is to be spread over a period of about twelve years, and the yearly coinings are limited to 30,000,000 marks on the outside. It is not contemplated to exceed this figure in order not to interfere with the regular business of the mints.

Japan has done the same thing. It started in with 78,000,000 or 80,000,000 legal-tender yen. It sold 40,000,000 and is now recoining the remainder. They eliminated the one-dollar note, the one-dollar paper, both Germany and Japan, and coined the subsidiary coin. Rather than sell the remaining bullion and make a loss they are recoining it and putting it into circulation, where it remains, and so we would with much of it.

If we could do the whole thing it would be a happy day for us. But I do believe, I believe it just as honestly as my friend from Colorado believes he is right on this proposition, that we can carry with a reasonable degree of safety the enormous amount of silver we have got and not sell it as bullion, realizing the enormous loss which we have actually made. But if we will go ahead and recoin it and use the bullion in place of the dollars we can make 7 cents out of every dollar, and we can give the people of this country better satisfaction. If we eliminate the one and two dollar bills we would hurry up the process, but by this plan we could carry this enormous amount of silver until we can use it up in a legitimate and proper way, and it ought to be eliminated in some way or another. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COCHRAN. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, the very short time given us furnishes no one an opportunity to discuss the question at all; and it is reduced to the usual policy of cutting off debate when an important question comes up before this House——

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, there is no quorum in this Chamber, and this is a measure which ought to be discussed with the membership present.

Mr. BELL. I hope the gentleman will not cut that out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. COCHRAN. I make the point that there is no quorum in the Chamber.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question pending before the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. I rise to the question of privilege that a quorum should be present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it has been held to be the right of the gentleman. The Chair will count.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thought probably the Chair would count.

The Chairman proceeded to count.

Mr. HILL (during the count). While the quorum is coming in I would like to state that I understand that there is a desire for more time upon the other side of the House. I do not think we shall use it on this side. I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend the time for general debate one hour on each side. I will say I ask it more for gentlemen on the other side than for this. If there is no objection, I ask an extension of the time for one hour on each side.

Mr. MCCALL. That can not be done in committee.

The CHAIRMAN (after completing the count). There is a quorum present.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, as I before said, this resolves itself into the old practice of no time for debate when a real issue is presented in this House and unlimited time when there is nothing of importance before the House. Having only ten minutes, I can not undertake to even enter into the discussion of this bill; but I want to say that it is well known throughout the country that our friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] rides two hobbies. One is the ghost of the silver dollar, in one way, and the other is the bank's paper dollar, in the other. He never gains any faith in the silver dollar; he never loses any in the bank paper. I have no doubt that he is honest in his contention, but I wish to suggest to the gentleman that just such proceedings as he continues in this body has brought on pretty near every panic that this Government has ever suffered. They have been brought on by what Webster and other great statesmen designated as "currency tinkerers."

Now, Mr. Chairman, his arguments are a mass of figures thrown in the air and stirred up, and they are stirred up in such a way as to confuse the unthinking. He could take the same figures and apply them to gold. He could take the same system of figuring and show up in some instances as to bank paper; he could show the fact that currency for any Government is enormously expensive. If our friend, who is such an advocate and believer in national banking currency, will get down and investigate with the same acumen that he uses against the silver dollar he will find that the people of the United States have lost much of their earnings by national-bank failures, and yet they do not want to give them up. They are among the necessaries of civilization. They are necessary expenses, and if you will examine some of our deficiency bills you will see why they have been so large in this House in coining these gold certificates, in coining silver certificates. The Treasury Department gives us as the reason that we must make such enormous appropriations for the issuing of silver and gold certificates and United States notes that the life of them is only about four years.

It is not a question of the cost of the silver and getting it into circulation; it is not the cost of the gold certificate; it is not the question of the cost of the silver certificate. The question is, is it a good currency and the best that the experience of mankind up to this time has devised?

Now, the silver men are not agitating these questions. You have adopted a policy which cuts off the coinage of the silver dollar. It is the bank paper man; it is not the gold man. The gentleman from Connecticut has no more love for gold than he has for silver. Neither is sacred to him. There is only one dollar known to civilization that is sacred to our friend from Connecticut and those who lead with him, and that is a piece of bank paper.

Now, you may take the argument of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], and I will propose to him right here that if he will take the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury that I will agree, and I think I can guarantee that every man on this side will agree, to stop this debate this moment and vote upon the bill. The Secretary of the Treasury, July 30 last, said in his report that there was silver bullion enough uncoined in the Treasury to pay every outstanding note for its purchase and enough left as gain or seigniorage to coin nearly $20,000,000 in fractional or divisional currency. And the suggestion was made that we coin silver dollars enough to take up the Treasury notes outstanding, and that we apply the remainder, nearly twenty million to divisional currency. I am ready and believe every man on this side is ready to give you $20,000,000 in divisional currency and let the law stand as it is to-day.

But, sir, the object of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is to invade the domain of the existing silver dollar. He has, and his friends who work hand in hand with him have, three bills here, and this is the entering wedge. This is the least offensive to the country, and they only intend to pass this until after the Congressional elections, and then in the short session they propose to wipe out the greenback, to wipe out the Treasury notes, to wipe out the silver, and to put bank paper and a banking syndicate that will make the beef and the railroad trusts blush with shame, because it will be such a syndicate as was never seen before in this country, and it will be legislated upon the people by Congress itself.

Now, this bill, if the gentleman meant what he said, if he means that this is a harmless bill, why did he not say, in the language of the Secretary of the Treasury, coin the remainder of the dollars required to redeem the Treasury notes, and then you have enough to make nearly twenty millions in divisional coin, and coin that into divisional currency? That is what the Secretary of the Treasury said. The gentleman is not here for the purpose of coining divisional currency, he is here for the purpose of stopping the coinage of the silver dollar. He is here for the purpose of getting the right in the future of coining the silver dollars into divisional currency. We do not need the divisional coins. We do not need the divisional currency, but we would give you $20,000,000 of it.

There are four real points in this bill. The first is to remove the limit for the issuance of divisional coin and to permit the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to govern. With our long experience to guide the Secretary of the Treasury, I can see no valid objection to this change of existing custom, if the intention is in good faith, to coin what we might need only; but the onslaught by the Treasury Department for a number of years against the greenback, United States Treasury notes, and silver coin has destroyed our confidence in it. The second object is to coin what divisional currency may be needed out of the general stock of bullion on hand. I think that is quite proper under the circumstances, if the Treasury was limited to $120,000,000; but with the discretion given the Treasury, we fear it will coin $150,000,000 as a means of getting rid of our silver bullion.

The third object is to stop the further coinage of silver dollars. This I do not think wise. It is certainly not necessary, and it stops the expansion of our silver coinage while our population is constantly increasing, and it is a part of a plan to retire the silver dollar and Treasury notes and to contract the currency, and we think this is the real object of the bill. The Treasurer asked for $120,000,000 subsidiary currency. The enemies of the silver dollar want to set aside enough bullion to make more than $150,000,000 and to cease coining the silver dollar, merely to get rid of coining more silver dollars.

The Secretary of the Treasury says, in his annual report of June 30, 1901, "The stock of bullion acquired under the act of July 14, 1890, was 51,763,642 standard ounces. If enough of this were coined into silver dollars to take up the Treasury notes issued for its cost, there would still be remaining 15,539,345 standard ounces, which, converted into subsidiary coin, would give $19,321,113." If the aims of the majority of the committee were in good faith to give the relief demanded, they would comply with the request of the Treasurer, but their main object is to stop the coining of silver dollars.

It is suggested that the limit of divisional coin be raised to $120,000,000. The act of March 14, 1900, limits the stock of subsidiary coin to $100,000,000, and the Treasurer suggests a raise to $120,000,000. This, at the request of the Treasurer, would be granted without objection, but the majority of the committee seizes the opportunity and seeks to appropriate all of the silver bullion for divisional coin and stop the coinage of silver dollars. The recommendation of the Treasurer, November 1 last, was to coin silver dollars until the Treasury notes for its purchase is redeemed; then coin the remainder of the bullion into subsidiary coin, which would make a little less than $20,000,000 more than we could absorb for many years. Doubtless the Treasurer, in his zeal to stop silver coinage, would pile up enough divisional silver to last for a generation under the provisions of the present bill.

At the time of the report of June 30, 1901, the Treasurer said: "We have a stock of $8,464,829 in the Treasury not yet used." In the Treasurer's report of November 1, 1901, he says: "The demand for subsidiary silver coin led to shipments during the past fiscal year 6.94 per cent in excess of those of 1900." The amount in circulation June 30, 1900, was $76,294,050, and a year later $79,700,088. There is no such reflux of these coins into the Treasury as of standard dollars. The increase goes on with very slight breaks, and is about 7 per cent per annum.

A hidden object in this bill is to stop the further coinage of silver dollars, and to retire the Treasury notes without replacing them with silver dollars as the law now requires. In 1891 $45,336,000 in silver was coined, and a like number of Treasury notes redeemed, thereby avoiding a contraction.

The fourth objection to this bill is that in the future no silver shall be purchased for divisional coin as heretofore purchased, but as the Government requires such it shall melt the silver dollars out of circulation and put them into subsidiary coin.

The real object of this bill is: First, under the guise of increasing the divisional currency, to stop the coinage of silver dollars; secondly, to start a raid on the coined silver and have it thrown into the melting pot and give the open field to the bankers and bank paper.

This bill will tie up what silver bullion we have for subsidiary coin, two-thirds of which is wholly unnecessary. Then the currency tinkerers will soon come along with a bill to melt down our standard silver dollars and coin them into Philippine dollars. The banking element is determined that the silver dollar shall give way to bank paper. This element is so restless under our easy money condition that it has the Calendar lined with bills, which when passed will legislate them into a money trust so flagrant that the sugar, beef, and railroad trusts will become absolutely respectable.

The Secretary of the Treasury says that on November 1 the aggregate gold in the Treasury was $542,831,849. That was never before equaled in our annals, and only for a few months some years ago has any other government ever held so much of the precious metals.

In 1901 the mints coined $136,340,781.58. The net increase of bank circulation was $99,339,457, and the per capita in circulation increased from $26.50 in July, 1900, to $28.52 to October 1, 1901, notwithstanding our great increase in population. This was the largest circulation we have ever enjoyed in actual money and bank paper in gross or per capita during our whole history, and with it we have had the greatest prosperity that we have ever enjoyed.

The Secretary of the Treasury says, in his report of November 1, 1901:

> Although the United States led the world last year in the production of gold, our imports of that metal exceeded our exports by the sum of $12,866,010. The stock of gold coin in the country, including bullion in the mints, at the close of the fiscal year, was estimated at $1,124,652,818, and the stock of silver coin at $610,447,025; United States and Treasury notes, $388,285,518; bank notes, about $360,000,000.

Why is it that the money-changing element begins to tinker with the currency every time that money becomes abundant and prosperity rife? Why is it that their move is invariably to contract the volume of all currency except national-bank notes? Why is it that their every move is to increase bank paper? Does the proposition admit of argument? Is not the cause self evident?

The money holder and dealer are affected as much by a superabundance of money as the farmer or manufacturer is affected by a great abundance of his product. The more money there is on the market in proportion to the demand the lower the price for money, just as a great crop lowers the price of cereals.

An abundant supply of money benefits the masses of the people, just as a great crop benefits the people at large. Then should the banking element be permitted to constantly keep a money famine in existence, that the owners of money may benefit at the expense of the general prosperity?

No one here can be fooled as to the object of this bill. The main object is not to increase divisional currency. There are many millions of subsidiary coin in the Treasury unused and can not be used before the December session. The subsidiary item is put forth to muddy the water while the money changers stop the further coinage of silver now going on and until they pass a provision for melting silver dollars in the future for the subsidiary coinage instead of purchasing silver for this purpose, as has always been done heretofore. It is one of the chronic contraction policies ever waged against the people as soon as they obtain a fair supply of money.

It behooves all of us to carefully look over our present condition and the probable changes of the near future. Every country in the world during the past three or four years has been running every powder mill, gun factory, navy-yard, etc., to its full capacity preparing war material; that quite a half million men of this country and of Europe have been transferred from the productive forces to the consumers; that the Spanish and Boer wars and the disturbance in China have made an unprecedented demand for our manufactured and food products, and for our horses and mules; that we have had several phenomenally large crops, and our gold production has surpassed anything ever dreamed of before; that Congress greatly increased bank paper by granting the privilege of issuing currency to the full limit of the United States bonds deposited and by allowing national banks to form on a capital of $25,000.

All of these things taken together have given us a phenomenal prosperity. It has given us such a balance of trade that we not only retained all of the gold we coined, but retained many millions imported from abroad. A change may come over our conditions; our crops may be short; peace abroad may cut off our great horse, mule, and food-product market. This would throw the balance of trade less in our favor, if not against us; would render much of our labor idle, prices would fall, and the tramp of the work hunter would be heard in the land again.

The unprecedented outburst of inventive genius, the matchless supply of labor-saving machinery, and the development of the world's resources have established standards of living that require higher wages, constant employment of labor, and remunerative business to insure peace and tranquillity throughout the country. A skilled laborer to-day earns as much in a day as a like laborer did in a week a century and a quarter ago, and has as many or more comforts to-day than the nobility had a hundred and twenty-five years ago, and his expense of living is quite as much for one day now as it was for a week a hundred and twenty-five years ago.

Sir Richard Arkwright, who did so much to establish the factory system, earned his bread in his younger days by shaving his fellows at a penny each. James Watts, inventor of the steam engine, celebrated his independence when his wages were raised to 12s. per week, less than $3 per week. Less capable artisans earn more in a day now. Those were days of low wages, cheap living, and a great scarcity of money. Sir Robert Peel, one of the first printers of calico, had quite a contention with his partner, William Yates, as to whether he should pay him for board and lodging $1.96 or $2.20 per week. They compromised on $2.08. This would not now pay for board and lodging in a third-class hotel for more than one day.

The equilibrium between money and property and the prices of labor and the expenses of living must ever be kept in mind, not according to past, but according to present conditions. The large amount of money among us for the past three years has given a great stimulus to business, to the employment of labor, to the increase of production, and to the free exchange of property. You disturb the present fortunate equilibrium and you will detrimentally affect production, labor, and exchange of property and general prosperity.

The present very favorable condition would withstand the check in silver coinage and the small shrinkage, but with a shortage of crop, peace in South Africa and the great loss of consumers we would soon receive, pacification in the Philippines and a large crop abroad, checking or turning the balance of trade against us, this check in the flow of currency would add to our troubles.

This bill, however, is but the beginning of one of those recurring policies of contraction preceding a panic. I have no doubt but this bill will be followed next session, after the fall elections are over, by the passage of the bankers' bill, retiring the greenbacks, the Treasury notes, and the silver dollars, and then with the first shake of confidence bank paper and loans will be curtailed, labor will be discharged, a panic will be precipitated, and another train of squalor, misery, and loss of property will lie at the doors of the pestiferous "currency tinkerers."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HULL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12648) establishing a regular term of United States district court in Roanoke City; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 14189) to permit the occupancy of the public-printing building by the Grand Army of the Republic.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 5913. An act granting a pension to Cherstin Mattson.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11535. An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14018. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COINAGE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], but before he enters upon his remarks I make the point that there is no quorum in the Chamber, and I call attention to the fact that the rule ought to be obeyed by the Chairman in making the count and stating whether there is a quorum here or not, and not have the count made as it was the last time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN). The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. COCHRAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is there a quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is counting to ascertain whether there is a quorum present. [A pause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I suggest that there are no doubt lightning calculators available, paid out of the contingent fund, who might facilitate the movements of the Chair. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that there are no arithmetical machines in the House. [Laughter.] [A pause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

Mr. DALZELL. The regular order is to count whether there is a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] has been recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, the action of the Committee on Rules in reporting this Lilliputian financial measure to the House is a very apt illustration of the ancient fable of the mountain that labored and brought forth a mouse. The Committee on Banking and Currency, after a great deal of labor, has reported to this House a bill providing for a complete reorganization of our national banking and financial system, and which has come to be known as the Fowler bill. This bill, if enacted into law, would provide for the most radical departure from all our previous policies upon these questions that has ever been offered to the country. The Fowler bill, which yet remains upon the Calendar of the House, provides for the establishment of a board of governors in lieu of the present Comptroller of the Currency to have general executive control of our banking system.

It provides for great clearing-house associations established in appointed districts and operating with governmental powers. It provides for the retirement of the Treasury notes as credit money, the absolute cancellation of a large number of them, and the transfer of the rest of them into gold certificates. It provides for the establishment of great monopolistic banking corporations, operating from money centers, with branches scattered all over our own country, our possessions and dependencies, and if so desired, in foreign lands as well. It abandons our present policy of requiring the payment of national bank notes in lawful money only, and that they shall be secured by the deposit of Government bonds, and permits the issuance of hundreds of millions of bank notes based upon the faith and credit of the banks alone, and provides further that they shall be payable specifically in gold.

It provides for the redemption of silver dollars in gold at the option of the holder, the abandonment of their further coinage, and also for their final coinage into subsidiary coin. But the bill before the House now is not that bill. The chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures has also reported to this House and has now upon its Calendar a bill which provides for the redemption of the silver dollars in gold, for their recoinage into subsidiary coinage at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the abandonment of their further coinage; but this is not that bill.

And, finally, the Committee on Rules has laid before the House this small fragment of the entire bill, and which provides only to increase the volume of subsidiary coin by coining the silver bullion in the Treasury and the silver dollars now issued into subsidiary coin at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury. So this financial legislation, which started out with promise of revolutionizing and reorganizing our entire monetary system, has so shrunken, perhaps in view of the approaching Congressional elections, that the bill which we now have before us contains only one small part of one section of a great financial bill that originally contained 23 sections. But, Mr. Chairman, this bill is, in my judgment, the sharp end of the legislative wedge by which they hope to drive home to the heart of the American people the entire monopolistic plan which is embodied in the so-called Fowler bill.

This bill is a "John the Baptist" in legislation, so to speak—a forerunner of a much greater bill which is to follow.

This bill is but one short step in a long legislative journey upon the financial question which those who are in control of financial legislation in this House would have Congress and the American people travel. Although the bill which we are now considering is only a small sliver of the entire financial plank which has been proposed, and does not go so far as did the original bill reported to the House January 6 by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which provided for the redemption of silver dollars in gold, it does, in fact, attempt to accomplish the same end by providing for the coinage of the silver dollars into subsidiary silver.

In the speech of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures delivered in this House on May 9, 1902, in speaking of the entire Fowler bill, he says, in reference to that portion of section 22 which provides for the coinage of silver dollars into subsidiary silver: "The committee believe that with our rapidly increasing population the whole amount can in time be converted into change money and held in daily use among the people, and with the greenbacks retired, and with no bank notes below $10, and silver certificates restricted to $5, it can be safely carried," and indicates further that the difference between the plan of redeeming the silver dollars once and melting the same and selling it as was done by Germany, and that of coining the silver dollars into subsidiary silver amounts to a matter of $300,000,000 in saving to the Government, if the plan of recoinage of silver dollars into minor coins is adopted.

This plainly shows that by this plan of converting the silver dollar into subsidiary coin they hope to accomplish the destruction of the silver dollar as real money and transform it into a token money which is redeemable in gold as completely as though they declared in this act that the silver dollar shall be specifically exchangeable for gold upon the option of the holder of the silver.

After a study and contemplation of the principles involved and the purposes proposed in the completed Fowler bill, which has been sought to be given to the American people in sectional doses from time to time in this Congress, since the powers that rule it do not seem to be willing to attempt at this time to apply the entire treatment with one radical operation, there ought not to be any misunderstanding as to the primary motive which has been behind all of the continued assaults upon the real money of the American people for a quarter of a century. There is no longer any deception attempted upon the part of those who are continually pressing for greater personal privileges. It is the last ditch and the last fight for complete corporation control of the financial system of the Government.

The battle has really never been as to whether our standard of value should be gold or silver or paper; whether our money should be yellow money or white money or green money. The real battle has been as to whether the money of the country should be issued and controlled by the General Government as declared in the Constitution, or whether it should be issued by private corporations for personal profit, power, and privilege. The gold standard has been our established measure of value for a quarter of a century, and in 1900 we declared that the obligations of this Government should be specifically payable in gold; but that was not satisfactory to those who would surrender to private corporations the illimitable power and profit of controlling the monetary system of the country.

What have they been fighting for? They have been fighting for the priceless privilege of controlling the volume of currency necessary to carry on the business of the richest, the most powerful, and the most commercial nation upon the face of the globe, and this prize is worth the battle of more than a quarter of a century which it has cost them if they shall finally win. Those who support the financial plan proposed in this bill are constantly contending that we can not legislate value into a dollar; that we can not legislate a nation into wealth, and that we ought not to attempt to legislate money into men's pockets, but corporations possessing special privileges have been steadily legislating the wealth of this country unto themselves.

They know the value of legislation upon the financial question and the ability to control it, for they have eaten of the fruit thereof, and if they shall succeed in their declared purpose of fixing upon the statute books of this nation the plan proposed in the Fowler bill they will, with one stroke of the Presidential pen which shall approve that bill, have legislated more power and more profit into the hands of private corporations than a million of honest men could possibly earn in a lifetime of toil.

He that does not know that with the years which are beginning the present century we have come to face a new condition both in the business and the commercial world is dead to what is passing before him, and he that does not see that we must take political action upon it is blind to the portents of the future. Syndicates and monopolistic combinations of one character or another have sprung up almost as in a single night until, like some deadly nightshade, they shadow all the land. They seek to control our State and national legislatures, if necessary to the accomplishment of their purposes.

Nay, more, it has been openly charged in the public press that they attempt at times to even soil the sacred ermine of our courts, and if their growing power is not in some way checked they may yet lay the ax at the roots of the very tree of liberty itself. They long ago found that if by means of legislation they could limit and control the volume of commercial commodities in this country they could, to a certain extent, control the price of those commodities to the public as measured in money. They also know that if by means of legislation they can limit and control the volume of money in this country or its credit substitute they can just as surely control the value of this money as measured in labor or commodities, for the great law of supply and demand, acting upon the money, the labor, and commodities at one and the same time controls alike the value of each.

And thus behind the bulwark of the tariff has grown up the industrial trust which seeks to control the price of the products of labor and of industry to the public. And now behind the protection of this so-called Fowler bill it is proposed to build up a banking trust, which by means of branch banks will rapidly absorb and centralize the banking business of this country into the large money centers and which will be more powerful than either the industrial trust or the transportation trust, because it will underlie and support them both.

In order to concentrate into the hands of a few the power to convert into a commercial asset the productive capacity and profit of this great nation of 80,000,000 people, it is necessary to organize three kinds of trusts. First, it is necessary to monopolize and control the industries of the nation, and we have in the past five years accumulated more monopolistic combinations and industrial trusts than any other nation ever accumulated in five hundred years. Second, it is necessary to control the means of transportation, whereby the products of industry and of labor are transported from one section of the country to the other, for, as our Interstate Commerce Commission has stated, it is within the power of the modern railroad trust to make or mar the fortune of any man engaged in any line of business, and not satisfied with having so merged the railroad systems of this country that five or six great corporations practically control them all, they have also gone out upon the great highway of the sea and propose to form a great ocean transportation trust as well.

Mr. KLEBERG. In that connection, will the gentleman allow me to ask whether a number of bills looking to the regulation of railroads have not been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce which have never been taken up and considered by the majority of the committee?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can not state of my own knowledge, but I think such is the fact.

Mr. LESSLER. Does not the gentleman know that an effort was made by the majority in the last Congress to secure the adoption of a constitutional amendment which would have permitted the Government to deal with this question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; and I think that those who made the effort knew very well that it was not possible to secure such an amendment, having offered it for political effect only.

Mr. Chairman, I can not yield longer, as my time is short.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. Is not this bill another step in the course of the Republican party to create a money monopoly for the benefit of a few and against the inalienable rights of the many?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is what I have been trying to demonstrate.

Mr. SULZER. Then no man opposed to monopoly can consistently vote for this bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is my position.

And the third great source or power and profit will be to control the money and banking interests of this country. For to control the money of a people is to control the means whereby they live, the means whereby they educate their children, and whereby they maintain their independence—that spirit of individualism and American independence upon which the perpetuity and foundation of popular government must finally rest.

The provisions of this bill which we are now considering, and which empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to coin the silver dollars into subsidiary silver, have not been suggested or requested by any Department of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint have recommended that the 15,000,000 ounces of silver bullion now in the Treasury in excess of that required for the coinage of sufficient silver dollars to redeem the balance of outstanding Treasury notes of 1890 might profitably be coined into subsidiary money. This amount of silver bullion converted into subsidiary coin would give us an increase of about $20,000,000 of such money.

The Secretary of the Treasury further suggests that the limit of the country's stock of subsidiary coin should be raised to $120,000,000, which is sound policy, and there is no good business reason that can be given in opposition to this recommendation. But this reasonable recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury will never satisfy the advocates of a system of branch banks and a monopoly of credit money. The advocates of the Fowler bill are logical in their attempts to have the Government retire from circulation as money all the silver certificates, silver dollars, greenbacks, and Treasury notes, to-day amounting to something like $900,000,000 of real money. They know that the vacuum in our money supply which will be thus created will have to be supplied by an equal volume of credit money to be issued by the banks through their branches.

They are anxiously urging this legislation which fosters the addition of hundreds of millions of bank-made credit money to our money supply to avoid a vindication of those who oppose currency monopoly in this country. Eastern bankers, Secretaries of the Treasury, Comptrollers of the Currency, Southern Democrats, and Western Populists are all agreed as to the fact that there is a constantly growing demand for an increase in the volume of our currency as the country increases in population and expands in commerce. The sole question for us to determine now and the only one open for discussion is of what kind of money shall this increase consist?

I have pointed to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has not recommended the legislation offered in this bill, and its advocates are soon going to find that the great mass of the small, independent bankers all over the country are not in favor of the monopolistic principles involved in the Fowler bill. They are holding meetings of bankers' associations, especially country banking institutions, and discussing this great question and condemning the cardinal principles which underlie this whole policy. Out in western Iowa the other day, in the city of Council Bluffs, there was held a convention of bankers of that State, and this proposed legislation was thoroughly discussed, and after sounding a note of warning as to the inflation and overloaning and ballooning of credit that had been going on for the past two or three years, they passed this resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention of bankers that the proposed banking legislation now under consideration by Congress, known as the Fowler banking bill, will not tend, if enacted into law, to advance the best good of the business interests of the people of this country, especially that feature of the bill relating to branch banking, and we hereby request our Senators and Representatives from this State to use their influence against the enactment of this proposed bill into law.

A very large interstate convention of bankers of Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma was held at Kansas City a short time ago, and after full discussion of this question the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That the members of this association have carefully listened to the recent discussion of the subject of branch banks, as advocated by the able gentlemen from the East, and combated by some of the ablest and best-known members of this State association and of our neighboring State of Nebraska, and we hereby affirm our unswerving allegiance to that view of the proposition which condemns it in all its forms as being unpatriotic, un-American, unbusinesslike, and as tending to establish a monopoly from the great and honored business of banking in the hands of a few millionaires, to the exclusion of the men of the West, old and young, who have labored so faithfully and well to make our banking system what it is to-day, the best in the known world.

The Missourians, at their meeting, also adopted resolutions condemning the establishment of branch banking, declaring it to be unwise, unsound, and detrimental to the banking interests of the United States.

Men of national reputation addressed this assembly of representative bankers from the great Central West. Among them Mr. Henry W. Yates, of Omaha, Nebr., a well-known advocate of the gold standard, whose views upon this new financial legislation is given in the extract below, taken from the report of the proceedings:

We are all conscious of the weaknesses which prevail in our banking system, and we are desirous of having them removed and the system strengthened and improved in any manner that good judgment and wise experience will dictate. But it does not follow from this that we should conclude that our banking system is so utterly bad that the only remedy for the situation is its entire extinguishment and the creation in its place of another system. This is what I believe would result from the passage of a law which would establish among us the monarchical British and continental systems of large central banks with numerous branches.

The passage of the pending bill, by destroying the harmonious relations which now exist in our banking world and by threatening the existence of our present organized banks, would not only be disastrous to the banks concerned, but it would be a national calamity.

He is again quoted upon this subject in the public press as follows:

Branch banks was the subject for discussion at the first joint session held in the afternoon of the first day of the convention. In this discussion Mr. Horace White, of New York, supported the proposed amendment which would authorize them, and I opposed it. The vote taken at the close of the discussion was unanimous against branch banks, and the resolution to that effect which has been published was the result of the vote taken at the separate sessions of the associations represented held the following morning.

The asset-currency discussion came on at the second joint session, in which ex-Comptroller of the Currency Eckels supported that proposition and ex-Comptroller Dawes opposed it.

The vote taken at the close of the discussion was equally as emphatic against asset currency as the previous vote had been against branch banks, but the separate action taken in the latter case could not be repeated, for the reason that no further meetings were held.

And I, along with the other members from Nebraska, have received the communication below from the executive board of the bankers' association of our own State:

NEBRASKA BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
Omaha, Nebr., May 24, 1902.

Hon. A. C. SHALLENBERGER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the executive council of this association on the 21st instant the following resolution was adopted, and I was requested to send you a copy:

"Resolved by the executive committee of the Nebraska Bankers' Association, That we are opposed to the branch-bank feature of the Fowler currency and banking bill now pending before Congress, and we earnestly urge the Senators and members of Congress to uncompromisingly oppose the same."

Yours, very truly,

H. R. GOULD, Secretary.

Having determined that 95 per cent of the business is now transacted upon credit and without the use of money, the advocates of this asset banking currency seem to be convinced that it will only be a short time until we will find the need of any real money at all entirely unnecessary. The only consistent interpretation that can be put upon the teachings of those who make these continued onslaughts upon our stock of actual money is that as the demand for money increases all that we will have to do will be to put a little more stretch upon the elasticity of its credit substitute.

Blow the bubble a little bigger and no one will ever ask if its material substance will stand the strain. But the sequel of this specious tale of the beauties of credit money has often been told in ruin and desolation to those nations who have listened to the siren song of him who sings that there will be no date of payment. In the certainty of its convertibility into actual money lies the essence of the value and the honesty of the bank note.

And unless this convertibility is sure and certain beyond all fear or doubt it may become as uncertain in value as a political promise. It has been the fate of all bank notes that have ever been issued upon other securities than that of a deposit of a reasonable amount of the coin of redemption itself, or a substitute that can be instantly converted into the money of redemption, that sooner or later that doubt has arisen with a consequent unsettling of values and loss and disturbance of business. The plan proposed by the advocates of this bill, and also the Fowler bill, is to retire all the Government credit money and all standard silver dollars which now form an integral part of all bank reserves.

The necessary consequent that follows is that all reserves will then have to consist entirely of gold coin. The bank notes are not made a legal tender to any but the banks themselves, and any money that can be refused by a creditor of a bank in time of peril is not to be considered as any part of its reserve fund. The inevitable result would be that our silver must be redeemed in gold or a robbery of many millions will be perpetuated by the Government upon the holders of this kind of money by allowing it to depreciate in their hands.

Of course by so doing the Government will have only gotten rid of the paper gold notes to be in turn mulcted with the silver gold notes. The other horn of the dilemma will be to redeem the silver in gold once and then sell it upon the market and pocket a loss of many millions; and this is what will inevitably happen if we make the $500,000,000 of silver dollars redeemable in gold and retire the Treasury notes, because the banks will otherwise use the silver dollars for drawing the gold from the Treasury for export as they have hitherto used the Treasury note.

Supporters of the Banking Committee's plan have said that it would be a good thing to agree to a law to compel the banks to hold their entire reserve in gold, as that would please the opposition by imposing a hardship upon the banks, but the advocates of this feature have evidently not made an examination as to the amount of gold now held by the banks and available for their use under the system of complete gold reserves.

The national banks alone hold deposits approximating $3,000,000,000, to secure which with a legal reserve of 25 per cent would require $750,000,000. There was $194,000,000 of gold in all the national banks July 15, 1901, according to the report of the Director of the Mint, or less than one-third the amount of gold required should the reserves be required to be held entirely in gold. There are now over 4,000 banks of issue, and more than 5,000 State and private banks which we may presume will also rapidly become banks of issue if there is sufficient profit in the plan proposed and the attractive inducement is offered of making money upon their assets and drawing interest upon it.

So that the actual amount of gold reserve that would be required under this bill for the deposits alone may be fairly figured as larger than all the gold now in circulation in this country. And if the depositors' reserve was provided for there would still be no coin behind the prospective note issues. There are those who would be reckless enough to count the gold in their tills twice—once as depositors' security and again as note holders' security; but this is the acme of financial folly, built upon the faint hope of never having to use the reserve for both purposes at the same time.

That plan of gold note issuing that fails to take most carefully into consideration the amount of gold actually pledged for the redemption of the notes and for that purpose alone may speedily lead us into paths beset with greater trials than we have yet experienced. In order to escape perhaps an imagined evil we may fly to others we know not of. It has been the contention of the advocates of our present policy in regard to the payment of Government notes that it is dangerous to allow the gold reserve beyond our greenbacks and Treasury notes to fall below the $150,000,000 mark, or about a 40 per cent reserve.

By what sort of reasoning can we arrive at the specious conclusion that a 5 per cent reserve fund deposited with the Government will be sufficient when it is made specifically payable in gold? If the Secretary of the Treasury thinks it is necessary to divorce the note issuing from the fiscal department of the Treasury and set aside a specific reserve of gold for the redemption of our Treasury notes, how much more important is it for him to require the banks to do the same thing? He will find plenty of precedent for such a plan among the powerful financial nations of Europe.

With the pressure for furnishing the gold both for export and for hoarding placed upon the banks, as they see their gold pile diminishing they will have but one remedy to renew their store and to stop the endless chain. The Secretary of the Treasury has himself in the past pointed out their inevitable action. It is to call in loans, hold all the gold they may get thereby, deny new extensions, contract their note issues, thereby shutting off the siphon by which the gold metal is most readily drawn from them. The effect of such action will be a sharp shrinkage in our system of credit which will inevitably affect our values in just such proportion as that credit shall have been most highly utilized.

Banks now have no trouble with the demand for gold for export or for hoarding in times of panic, because they hold within themselves the option whether they will supply that demand or not. When they are bound by contract to supply the gold whether convenient or not, it may be another story. The element of absolute safety should be the paramount consideration in any note-issuing policy, but it is the fate of all bills that ask for special privileges that questions of political expediency often override questions of soundness and stability. The claim can not be made with any degree of truth that there is a lack of banking facilities anywhere within the nation.

The proposition to allow all the small banks in the country to share in the profits of credit-note issuing seems to be a rather cheap bid to catch votes for an otherwise unpopular measure. It is claimed by the advocates of the notes of issue that in comparison with other forms of money they have to a greater extent the peculiar quality of elasticity, ebbing and flowing with the tide of business. Elasticity has a suggestive and pleasing sound, but elasticity in note issues is largely mythical under legal regulations.

Banks being conducted solely for private gain will, under a profitable system, continue to issue notes as long as the public will absorb them until the limit is reached. The fact that expansion would go on until a financial explosion would take place has compelled every nation to establish a dead-line limit beyond which expansion is impossible. When that limit is reached elasticity is only possible in one direction—that of contraction; and when contraction sets in there is only unlimited elasticity in the realm of credit and in the direction of constantly shrinking prices.

It is proposed as a recompense for the Government in part insuring the note holders against loss that it shall be given a first lien upon the assets of the failed bank, but the inequality in this provision lies in the fact that while this is a sweet sauce for the note holders, it is decidedly cold victuals for the depositor. At present the depositor often gets little enough from the failed bank, but with the entire amount of the capital stock appropriated to secure the notes he would often fare far worse.

The difficulty which the Treasury Department encountered during the last panic and the idea that the incubus of providing gold for export and for hoarding can be unloaded upon the banks seem to be the principal reasons advanced for the present agitation for this experimental banking policy. At present the notes of the bank are simply payable in lawful money. This acts as a complete check against their being used to gain gold for export or for hoarding. In times of panic gold is always hoarded. Everyone knows there is not enough for all, so each one gets and keeps all he can.

The principal difference between the present plan and the old State bank issues, under which suspension of payment by individual banks was the order of the hour, is the fact of the General Government's supervision and guaranty and making them indirectly legal tender to the Government for all purposes except duties upon imports. This only raises the hope that, as at present, they will never be asked to redeem them at all except as they become worn or mutilated. But all this will not make the act of redemption any easier. It only raises the hope that it will never be demanded. This is the only reasonable solution of the plan of those who advocate making gold alone the final money of payment in this country and the use of credit bank notes to entirely supply the vast volume of trade that must continue to expand to illimitable proportions, if the seeming destiny of this great country is to be finally fulfilled.

The policy of this Government should not be to contract the volume of its money by legislation, but rather to expand it, because only by building the base of its redemption money as broad as possible can it build the largest superstructure of safe credit. The plan proposed by the Committee on Banking and Currency is entirely experimental. Its policy is one of monopoly and concentration. Its chief supporters complain that it is not as centralizing in its tendency and absolutely monopolistic in its note-issuing powers as they would make it were it not for political expediency.

The chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures has said that he would prefer a bill which would limit the note-issuing power to a few large and highly capitalized banks, with branches all over the country, absorbing through its tentacles the profit that now remains to the individual banks in the small communities. Indeed, he has said that he would himself prefer one great bank alone in New York City to monopolize the entire note-issuing function of the Government. The policy has never been demanded by any political party or platform. It is purely an imperialistic financial policy.

The policy of monopoly in note issue, underlies and supports every empire of Europe. It is the banking policy of the Empire of Russia, of the Empire of Germany, of the Empire of Austria, and of the Empire of Great Britain, attempted to be applied to free America. It is not the policy of the Republic of France, which is the soundest financial government of Europe; which has always made it the foundation of its financial policy to accumulate as much as possible of real money, both gold and silver, as a base upon which to build the superstructure of her credit. There is no demand for it from the people, and to pass it now, between elections, when the people have had no opportunity to register their judgment and their verdict upon it at the ballot box, would be an act of political injustice which has no parallel in all our history upon financial questions, unless we except the act of the demonetization of silver itself. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], but before he proceeds I wish to make the point that there is no quorum in the House to hear the gentleman discuss this bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TAWNEY). The Chair will count the Committee of the Whole. [A pause.] There is a quorum present. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] will proceed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is a great surprise to me, and doubtless to others—I am sure it is to my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]—that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, with the vigilant assistance of the gentleman from Missouri, has been unable thus far to keep a quorum in this House to listen to anybody discuss this question. It is a remarkable thing that while we have here before us a bill involving the destruction of the existing silver dollar—a full legal tender for any sum—the grinding of those dollars into subsidiary coins of limited legal tender "for $10 in any one payment," the seats in this House have been vacant to-day, when members know that this effort is but the entering wedge to turning this country over to the national banks for our paper money hereafter, and to further deprive the people of their Constitutional right to have "money," real money—gold and silver. Into subsidiary coin must go the silver dollar now doing full money duty, while to the national banks—panic makers—we must soon go for our paper money.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] seems to have been able to apply a narcotic to the other side of the House, most of whom are now absent, when he said this was an "innocent measure." He has lulled. They are sweetly smoking or sweetly sleeping in the lobby, waiting to strike the fell stroke on the roll call. I turn back the pages of history and recall the time when the very idea of turning over the issuance of paper money of this country to the national banks not only secured a vigilant attendance to this historic Hall, but almost caused a rise "to arms" for liberty and country, and Andrew Jackson was their leader. Yet here is a bill, the purpose of which, not denied by the gentleman who reports it, is to destroy existing silver dollars, and its companion piece, the Fowler bill, is to retire all greenbacks and paper money and drive the people over to bank issues for paper money.

Mr. Chairman, I will read presently only a sentence from one of the gentleman's many long and elaborate speeches made in this House, covering, all told, as I count them, about 25 or 30 pages of the RECORD. Yet in the discussion of this question here to-day the gentleman has succeeded in closing the months of the members of this House to the extent of allowing them only a puny little two hours, one hour on a side, for the discussion of this great question. He has discussed his side of the case fully, but we are denied a chance to do so.

Mr. Chairman, what do the many speeches of the distinguished gentleman contain? Here is the gist of this bill found in a speech which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] delivered here on the 11th of March, 1902, which will be found on page 2814 of the RECORD. I will read a part:

From the report made it is evident that there is need for an increase in the volume of subsidiary coin in circulation to meet the needs of commerce, and in the judgment of your committee no wiser use can be made of the stock of bullion on hand than to turn it into subsidiary coinage as needed, giving the Secretary of the Treasury a free hand in reducing from time to time the volume of silver certificates or silver dollars now in circulation or lying idle in the vaults of the Treasury.

The report (No. 1425) on the Fowler bill, page 8, says:

The total amount of silver dollars and silver certificates in circulation was, on January 1, 1902, $532,955,428.

This money is "in circulation," yet it must be withdrawn from "circulation," although "necessary to the daily transactions of the business of the country," as the Fowler bill report states, page 8. I will insert the language of the bill we are now considering, introduced March 18, 1902, and reported to the House March 20, 1902:

A bill (H. R. 12704) to increase the subsidiary silver coinage.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements, and thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding, and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, is hereby repealed.

This bill, No. 12704, is the first section of the original Hill bill (reported to the House January 13, 1902), which I will insert in my remarks:

A bill to maintain the legal-tender silver dollar at parity with gold and to increase the subsidiary silver coinage.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements, and thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding, and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, is hereby repealed.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to maintain at all times at parity with gold the legal-tender silver dollars remaining outstanding; and to that end he is hereby directed to exchange gold for legal-tender silver dollars when presented to the Treasury in the sum of $5 or any multiple thereof; and all provisions of law for the use or maintenance of the reserve fund in the Treasury relating to United States notes are, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, hereby made applicable to the exchange of legal-tender silver dollars.

About this bill the Report No. 32, page 9, says:

Your committee believe that this bill should be adopted—

First. Because it will stop the further coinage of the legal-tender silver dollar.

Second. Because it will increase the volume of subsidiary coin, which is greatly needed.

Third. Because it will in time reduce the volume of legal-tender silver, without loss to the country.

Fourth. Because it will make every legal-tender dollar in the United States the equivalent of gold, and make more sure and certain the maintenance of the gold standard as declared by the act of March 14, 1900.

This last section is omitted in the bill pending, but is in substance included in the Fowler bill, which is to follow this. I am informed, at all events, it has been reported to the House for passage.

The whole policy or purpose of this bill is to destroy the "money" of the Constitution and, more, rob by law the people of the "right" they had until 1873 to take their bullion to the mints of this country and demand that it be made into their own money.

But not satisfied with destroying that right by Republican legislation, the great majority now in power come here and try to finish up the job by destroying the "existing" full legal tender silver dollar and turning the masses over a great ocean of subsidiary limited tender—"chicken feed," Mr. Chairman, as they called it in the Coinage Committee meetings—and that, too, is the money that they say the people use, the farmers use, the laborers of this country use.

That is what they "get" as their wage money, while the wealthy class get the gold—the best. Why pay them in the cheap money or in limited tender?

No, you do not pay them gold, and you know it, but you save that for the upper class, who do not work; neither do they spin, for they have theirs laid up safe and secure in gold, and when they are paid they demand gold and get it.

You are destroying this dollar that the people love and always have in time of peace and war, and are turning it now into limited tender, when you know, Mr. Chairman, as is shown by the letter which I have from the Director of the Mint of May 15, that we have "silver bullion now in the Mint which, if made into silver dollars, the seigniorage would be $14,128,369, and if made into subsidiary coinage, $17,385,484," without touching a single silver dollar, without interfering with the circulation of money that is silver at all. The Secretary says we only need an increase in subsidiary coin of $20,000,000 more—total, $120,000,000.

The whole object is to try to make out that we need more subsidiary silver coinage, which I neither deny nor admit; but admitting that we do, and I am willing to admit it for the sake of argument—and if we need it I want it—pray tell me where is the wisdom of coining up that which is already money—that which pays our Navy, that which pays our Army, that which pays our farmer, that which pays the members of Congress, who, many of whom, as usual, are now out of their seats and a lot of whom should be out of Congress for neglecting the constitutional rights of the people—bimetallism being one, being ground into powder here to-day.

We pay ourselves with it. Why should we destroy the existing silver dollars when we have the seigniorage lying there that is a "commodity" on the market, a menace to the silver market, that is a menace, Mr. Chairman, to the raising of the price of silver by the coinage? Why not coin this seigniorage and throw it into circulation, take it off the market, that it may itself become a valuer of values, instead of being, as it is, valued by existing money—always as if it were on the market. What is the meaning of and what is seigniorage?

(1) A charge made by a government for coining bullion bought for that purpose.

(2) The difference between the cost of bullion purchased by a government for coining and the nominal or face value of the same when coined. (Webster's Unabridged Dictionary.)

This gain or seigniorage evidently indicates so much of the bullion owned by the Government as should remain after using a sufficient amount to coin as many standard silver dollars as should equal in number the dollars represented by the Treasury notes issued in payment of the entire quantity of bullion. (President Cleveland's veto message, March 31, 1894, p. 4101.)

Mr. Chairman, I will insert a table taken from the Treasury Circular No. 99, issued November 15, 1901, showing that in July, 1901, we had in actual "circulation" of silver dollars $66,921,323, and of silver certificates (which represent silver dollars) $429,643,556; and yet it is said, "Down with the silver dollar; it will not circulate."

I will insert the table here:

July 1, 1901.

[Population, 77,754,000; circulation per capita, $27.98.]

	General stock coined or issued.	In Treasury.	Amount in circulation.
Gold coin, including bullion in Treasury	$1,124,639,062	$247,811,938	$629,790,765
Gold certificates			247,036,359
Standard silver dollars	520,399,941	23,835,062	66,921,323
Silver certificates			429,643,556
Subsidiary silver	89,822,771	10,587,557	79,235,214
Treasury notes of 1890	47,783,000	258,462	47,524,538
United States notes	348,681,016	16,635,610	330,045,406
Currency certificates, act June 8, 1872
National-bank notes	356,821,502	8,631,386	345,190,116
Total	2,483,147,292	307,760,015	2,175,387,277

Ah, Mr. Chairman, they say we need more subsidiary silver coinage. Then why not make it in full legal tender if the masses of the people of this country are the users and you say they want it? We had coined in half dollars, quarters, dimes, and half dimes $77,015,348.50—"struck" from 1792 to June 1, 1853—all full legal tender—just as much so as our gold or silver dollars were, and they remained so down to June, 1874. I will insert a table here showing this:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1899.

SIR: As requested by you, I append herewith a statement of the coinage of fractional silver (excluding 3-cent pieces) from 1792 to June 1, 1853, and the coinage of silver dollars from 1792 to February 12, 1873.

Coinage of fractional silver, 1792 to June 1, 1853:

Half dollars	$36,492,644.50
Quarter dollars	4,006,595.50
Dimes	4,016,731.10
Half dimes	1,899,377.40
Total	77,015,348.50
Silver dollars, 1792 to February 12, 1873	8,031,238.00
	85,046,586.50

Respectfully,

GEORGE E. ROBERTS,
Director of the Mint.

Hon. J. W. GAINES, House of Representatives.

In addition to this we had oceans of fine legal-tender foreign silver and gold coins, which were "money" down to 1857 and possibly later.

Here is one of the records of the Coinage Committee hearings. I will read a part of a statement printed therein which says "the dollar pieces therefore actually perform a useful function in our circulation." And yet they do not circulate! This is found on page 57 of the hearings before the Coinage Committee, placed in the hearings by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], who was not content to omit it. He thus preserved it for use to-day. And yet this distinguished son of Connecticut not only wants to stop the silver-dollar coinage, but he wants also to destroy those in existence—"in circulation."

Away back yonder when we were building our Constitution, the great men, understanding then what nature's money was, what the money of the common law was, what the money of the colonists was, what the money of the confederation was, what the money of the Revolution was, what should be the "money" of the Constitution, used the word "money" as meaning "gold and silver." They said Congress shall have the power to coin "money"—this "money"—"gold and silver" and more—"the States shall not make anything but gold and silver tender in payments of debts." They used the disjunctive "or"—"gold or silver or copper"—and not the conjunctive "and" at first, but they debated it for days and days, and finally they tied the two together and said "gold and silver," and who, Mr. Chairman, was one of the great men at that marriage, August 18, 1787?

The Hon. Roger Sherman, of the great State of Connecticut. He, in conjunction with that great jurist and patriot, James Wilson, of Pennsylvania, incorporated everlastingly into the Constitution these words: "Nor make anything but gold and silver coin a tender for debts." Yet the distinguished son of Connecticut, not content with destroying the conjunctive "and," not content with severing the ties which his great ancestor, I presume, was wise enough to place in the Constitution, wants now to wipe from the face of our Republic every silver dollar—divorce silver from gold and the people too—but "what is the Constitution" amongst Connecticut people——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] controls the time.

Mr. COCHRAN. It will have to be additional time if that is allowed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope my friend from Connecticut will lend me some of his time to talk about his distinguished "ancestors" in Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. I will state to the gentleman that I asked for additional time, but the gentlemen on the other side objected.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, at this point I renew my request for unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be extended one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri must recognize the fact that the House has fixed the time for general debate on this bill, and it is not competent for the committee to change that order.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then I ask that the committee rise informally and that we deal with that in the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Chair will remember, and I know my genial friend from Connecticut will, that he has made a great many speeches on this subject, that this side of the House has not had a chance nor have they discussed this question, and that we even went so far a few days ago as to permit him to place in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, his great speech on this subject to people in New York.

Mr. Chairman, under the rule, by way of extending my speech, I will insert my remarks before the Coinage Committee when both the original Hill bill and a similar bill pending, introduced by the Hon. Jefferson Levy, were under discussion. I then said:

Mr. Chairman, I have stated before that I am against both of these bills here, and shall be against either if reported to the House, because I am firmly convinced that under the Constitution we have no power or right to demonetize either gold or silver or both. I am convinced that under the Constitution the two are tied together; that under the Constitution, and as treated when the Constitution was framed, the word "money" meant and should now mean and be "gold and silver;" that during the discussions on that subject it was clearly demonstrated that the word "and" was used and to be used conjunctively and not disjunctively, and that Congress has no power by a statute to disjoin or untie the two, or, as Webster says, "displace either."

In thus contending, Mr. Chairman, I am supported by the greatest legal minds this country has ever produced, if not by the adjudications of the courts of this country.

Now, I desire to read just a few words from a speech of Senator HOAR in the Senate on August 15, 1893, which saves me the trouble of reading the original authority he cites in showing "money" to mean gold and silver, not gold or silver, from a constitutional view. After saying "gold and silver" is "nature's money," he said:

You may drive out nature with your legislative fork, but again and again she comes running back. This doctrine is recognized in the Constitution: "No State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender." "No State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts."

That the words "money" and "gold and silver" were regarded as equivalents in constitutional meaning is shown by the fact that the Constitution makes a separate provision as to bills of credit and does not include them in the sentence which applies to money. It is not gold or silver that a State may make a legal tender—

So said also Senators JOHN T. MORGAN and George Gray in the same debate. Here is a direct confession and authority, Mr. Chairman, that the States have the right to make gold and silver legal tender. They have no right to make either one or the other legal tender. They (the States) can make and have made both gold and silver tender by statute.

Senator HOAR continues:

It is not gold or silver that a State may make a legal tender, but gold and silver, the legal value of which, by another clause of the Constitution, is to be determined by Congress.

The "legal" value, mark you, of the two is to be controlled by Congress.

Senator HOAR further says:

Chief Justice Ellsworth and his associate—

His associate who signed the report, I may add, was Roger Sherman, who suggested the use of the words "nor make anything but gold or silver a tender in payment of debts" to the Convention, and they were from the great State of Connecticut, from which our learned friend Mr. HILL hails—who represented Connecticut in the Constitutional Convention, in their report to their constituents of the proceedings of the Convention, say that the new Constitution provides that no State "shall make anything but money a legal tender for the payment of debts," showing that, in their judgment, the word "money" and the words "gold and silver" are identical or equivalents.

On May 29, 1787, Mr. Charles Pinckney laid before the convention a "Plan for a Federal Constitution," in the eleventh article of which it was ordained that—

"No State shall * * * make anything but gold, silver, or copper a tender in payment of debts." (Elliott's Debates, p. 71.)

On August 6, 1787, the committee on detail reported a draft of a constitution, in the thirteenth article of which the identical phase was copied, except that the word "specie" was substituted for "gold, silver, or copper" (p. 459).

On August 18 Mr. James Wilson, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, moved jointly the adoption of the phrase "nor make anything but gold and silver coin a tender for debt" (p. 620).

September 12 the committee on style reported a draft and had transposed this provision to section 10 of article 1 identically as it had been, except the word "or" was used (p. 706).

September 17 the Constitution was finally engrossed and signed and the word "and" again inserted between "gold" and "silver," the convention again repudiating the disjunctive (p. 755).

The meager Journal does not show any discussion on this point; but on August 28, when the section defining treason was being considered, in the draft presented the two constituents of the crime "levying war" and "adhering to the enemy" were connected by the conjunction "and," when, on motion of Mr. Madison, it was changed to "or," thus showing that the convention had in mind the wide difference in meaning between the conjunctive and disjunctive. The only time the phrase in section 10, article 1, was ever especially discussed was just ten days before, to wit, August 18, and the convention therefore had it in mind, and so the language finally adopted could not have been accident (p. 564).

We know gold and silver both were "money" at common law, and the Constitution continued them so, and the States, too.

Senator HOAR continues:

Alexander Hamilton considered this question in his great report on the mint and the coinage.

Senator HOAR then goes on and shows, Mr. Chairman, that he (Hamilton) so treated money as gold and silver combined. We all know that in the great mint report that he wrote and submitted to Mr. Jefferson they put the unit on both metals; and here are his reasons. Mr. HOAR is still quoting Hamilton's words, approved by Jefferson, as follows:

To annul the use of either of the metals as money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from the comparison of the benefits of a full with the evils of a scanty circulation.

Either means one of two. Money means gold and silver. Here we see both Hamilton and Jefferson treated and called the two metals gold and silver as "money"—the "money."

Now, gentlemen, just to the extent that you burden gold with silver you increase the demand for gold—the disuse of silver and the unnecessary use of gold. You increase use of gold, and to that extent it takes more of the products of the sweat and muscle of this country to buy a dollar's worth of gold or a gold dollar, and hence prices go down just in proportion as you intensify the demand and increase the uses of gold.

Daniel Webster declared more than once—

Says Senator HOAR—

and with great emphasis, that the Constitution requires the coinage of both metals; and it would be a disobedience to our constitutional duty were Congress to discard either.

And so said the lamented lawyer and statesman, A. H. Garland, to me often and once in a letter.

Now, Mr. Webster, not only in the Senate, but as an advocate in one of his great cases, said that Congress had no power to stop the coinage of gold, nor did it have the power to stop the coinage of silver, and if it could stop either, it could stop both, and thus rob the people entirely of the money of the Constitution. Yes; Mr. Chairman, I submit, rob them of the money of the common law, the money of our colonial fathers, the money that the colonists had the right to have and have coined as colonists, and to take at their sweet will to the mints of England and coin free, and in America, as they claimed, and rightfully.

And I maintain that history proves the fact that they were denied this "right," and we rebelled; that when we wrested our independence from England we brought the common law and statutes to this country that suited us; and the law of that country then was that the people had the right to take their precious metals to the mint and have them made into money whenever they chose—not leaving it to the discretion of the King, or, if you please, to the discretion of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury (whether he is Democrat or Republican), or any President, to say when the people—you or I—shall have money, and when we shall or shall not have our precious money metals coined into money. That would have been slavery, not liberty.

Senator HOAR had in this speech already said:

I have been, ever since I was old enough to have an opinion on the subject, a bimetallist. I think that is true of all the American people down to 1873, with a very few exceptions. But it has been the bimetallism of Alexander Hamilton, of Washington and his Cabinet, of the framers of the Constitution, of the members of the First Congress, and of the Constitution of the United States.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, all our great financial authorities of both parties, from the framers of the Constitution, from Alexander Hamilton, and Jefferson, and Webster, and Calhoun, and Benton, and Chase, and Fessenden, Federalists and Republicans, Whigs and Democrats, down to the disturbed period which followed the war, have agreed upon this policy.

That is, Mr. Chairman, "bimetallism" planted in the Constitution. Senator HOAR continues:

There were differences which divided political parties. Whether Congress should authorize a paper currency, under careful safeguards, redeemable in coin, or should leave that to State discretion or to private enterprise, was a question which divided parties and made and unmade Presidents and Administrations. But down to the year 1873 it never was heard in this country that the legal tender and the standard of value should be anything but gold and silver; nor was it ever claimed until 1873 that both gold and silver could not be relied upon to perform this service.

I have no doubt that the Committee on Coinage, who reported and enacted the statute of 1873, were actuated solely by a conscientious desire for the public good. * * * They selected for their single standard what was then the cheaper metal, then gold, a metal not only then the cheaper, but of which a large and constantly increasing supply was confidently expected.

Mr. Chairman, I may add gold was in 1873 cheaper than silver.

Mr. Chairman, you know well that Mr. Gage said, in my cross-examination of him, that to make gold contracts produced a disparity between the two coins. He said it distinctly, and we have here his exact words. I asked him the distinct question. And yet we are not only permitting gold contracts to be made throughout this country, but give the maker of these contracts the sovereign's right to say what shall and what shall not be "tender" in the payment of his particular debts, when you deny that even the States have the power to say what is and shall be tender.

In this bill you are going still further, and making silver dependent entirely upon gold, thus intensifying and magnifying and strengthening the power that would disparage silver and produce a disparity—the very thing that this bill proposes to prevent, but, in fact, creates more machinery that encourages disparity.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the way you are undertaking to inaugurate and to perpetuate a parity is the very means to superinduce, intensify, and magnify a disparity; and the proof in this case clearly discloses the fact, and our common experience and common sense teach the truth of my contention. I regret now my time has expired. I wanted to speak on another branch of this bill, but that has been so fully treated in the argument of my friend Mr. SHAFROTH, which I indorse.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will suspend for a moment. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course he did.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time comes out of that belonging to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the committee now rise.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, some time ago I asked unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended. That request was refused on the other side. I understand now that if the committee rises it will be impossible to secure a quorum of the House. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to allow the time for general debate to expire, and then that we all be liberal in granting extensions of time under the five-minute rule within the committee without going through the formality of extending the general debate by the vote of the House. We can do that in committee, and I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the very limited time assigned me will prevent me from going into this question as thoroughly as I should like to do. I regard this as one of the most important bills that has come before the House at this session for the reason that it is the initial legislation looking toward a radical change in our entire financial system, and I am amazed that only two hours should be allowed for the discussion of so important a question.

I have listened with great interest to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] in his clear statement of the nature and purpose of this bill. As he states, the bill is illusory in the presentation of its purpose. Whilst the ostensible purpose of it is to increase only the subsidiary coinage of the country, which now requires about $20,000,000 more, the real purpose is to retire all the silver by changing that silver into subsidiary coins, overloading the Treasury with them, and creating later on a demand for the sale of that coin as bullion.

Now, we have to-day in this country about $1,100,000,000 of gold, a little over $600,000,000 of silver, and a little over $600,000,000 of greenbacks and national bank notes. The silver, therefore, constitutes nearly one-third of the present money volume of the country. And I ask any man of judgment in this House whether this country has more money to-day than it needs for the transaction of its business? Would any gentleman in this House to-day vote to retire one-third of the money of this country? And yet this bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury practically that power, for if he carries out the purpose of this bill, he can turn every dollar of this $600,000,000 of silver into subsidiary coin, and that coin, recollect, has only a limited tender quality.

Now, what is the difference between money of limited tender and money of full legal-tender quality? Why, the difference is that the money of full legal-tender quality will satisfy all debts in any amounts, and it will also serve as the basis of credit issued by the banks. Full legal-tender money alone constitutes the reserves of the banks. Subsidiary coinage does not form a part. National bank notes do not. It is only the gold, the silver, and the greenbacks that constitute legal-tender money, and can constitute any part of the reserves of a bank. Of this total of over $2,000,000,000 of money that we have in the country, a little over one-half is in the pockets of the people. You can not diminish the amount that is in the pockets of the people, for experience has shown that that amount is essential for the transaction of their current business in the small transactions of life.

About $1,000,000,000 or a little less is in the banks, and constitutes their reserves. For every dollar of legal-tender money in a bank it is authorized under the law to issue credits from $6.50 in the country banks to $4 in the city reserve banks, the reserve in reserve city banks being fixed at 25 per cent of deposits and in other banks at 15 per cent. It is upon this $1,000,000,000 of legal-tender money in the banks that they write upon their books in the shape of credits to their customers five times that amount, or $5,000,000,000, against which their creditors draw by check, and this constitutes the check and deposit part of the credit system of the country, the part of that system which gives to every dollar of legal-tender money an efficiency on the average of $5 in the exchanges.

If you reduce the amount of legal-tender money in the country, the amount in the pockets of the people remaining the same, the reduction in legal-tender money must be in the reserves of the banks; and for every dollar of legal-tender money withdrawn from the banks you must contemplate the withdrawal of $5 of bank credits. If, then, you prepare for the retirement of $600,000,000 of legal-tender money, you provide for the reduction of five times $600,000,000, namely, $3,000,000,000 of bank credits. Are you aware that the great crisis of 1893 was caused by a reduction of the bank credits of this country only two or three hundred million dollars? Do you realize the effect of the diminution of the reserves—the bank reserves of New York?

Mr. FOWLER. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that the reserves increased $20,000,000?

Mr. NEWLANDS. But I am talking of the effect of reducing credits. The credits were diminished to the extent of two or three hundred million dollars, and that is what caused the panic. The bank called upon its debtors, its debtors called upon their debtors, these called upon others, and thus the call for money spread over the entire country and resulted in a general liquidation of property all over the land. Why, should the statements of the banks of New York be published next Saturday showing a reduction of the bank cash of $10,000,000, then immediately there would be a reduction of the credits of those banks of fifty millions, five times the amount of the diminution of the cash—enough, perhaps, to create a panic in the great city of New York, with its vast money resources.

Now, then, every dollar of legal-tender money being the basis of $5 of bank credit, when you convert five or six hundred million dollars of legal-tender money into money of limited tender you must contemplate the retirement of $3,000,000,000 of credit. The credits now given by all the banks of the country make a credit of $5,000,000,000, and these credits issued by the banks are the basis of other credits. The wholesale merchant who receives credit from the banks extends credit to his customers. So the wave of credit stretches out to the farthest boundaries of the Republic. Credit built up upon credit. Yet these gentlemen, these tinkers of our financial system, would gradually reduce the base while they contend that the superstructure will remain the same.

Let us go back to our history immediately following the war. We had issued greenbacks during the great civil war. We passed through that war successfully. We were a reunited people, with vast resources and a great future, and every expectation has been vindicated by history. With a population of 30,000,000 (which has increased in forty years to 75,000,000) there was no reason at all for discouragement, no reason for distress. Everybody was hopeful. What took place? Our currency tinkers started in with their legislation. They commenced the retirement of the greenbacks, which were legal-tender money. Every dollar of greenbacks counted in the bank as a part of the reserve and on every dollar they could support $5 of bank credit. They substituted bank currency, which itself is a credit, not real money, and which can not be made a part of the reserve, and upon which no bank credit can be issued. What was the result? The crash of 1873, the effect of which was not entirely removed twenty years later. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill has upon its face the appearance of innocence, but I see upon it insincerity. If it had only provided for the subsidiary coin to meet the wants and convenience of this Government, then I would quickly vote for it; but as it is, I see danger in the bill. I realize this is only the skirmish line of the first fight of a war on our various moneys that is ahead of us. There is a bill from the committee in which I have the honor to sit which may not come up at this session of Congress, but which will doubtless come up at the next session. The purpose of these two bills pending, as I see it, is to destroy all the money of this country except two kinds, gold and bank notes. There is no necessity for this bill. It is insincere; and to show the reason why this bill should not become law, I desire to give some statistics. The Secretary of the Treasury only asked that we increase the subsidiary coin from $100,000,000, under present law, to $120,000,000; but this bill goes further and makes our wants unlimited. But as I was about to say, to show the lack of necessity for additional subsidiary coin, I now give some statistics.

Of all the general stock of money issued by the Government I find there are 537,000,000 of silver dollars, and of that amount $13,000,000 are in the United States Treasury, only 3½ per cent of the total amount of silver money being in the Treasury, the balance of it being in circulation among the people as silver dollars and silver certificates based on silver dollars. Out of $346,000,000 United States notes outstanding only $8,000,000 are in the Treasury, all being out circulating among the people of this country, except the 2½ per cent of it which lies in the Treasury to-day. This class of money, commonly called "greenbacks," is a form of currency that some of our Republican friends are very hostile to.

Of the general stock of $32,000,000 Treasury notes, these notes being based on or covered by silver bullion stored in the Treasury, issued by the Government, there are $95,000, or only 2½ per cent of the total amount now in the Treasury, the balance being out in active circulation.

The general stock of subsidiary silver in the United States to-day is $95,000,000 ($100,000,000 being authorized by the present law), of which amount there are to-day in the Treasury $12,807,000, or 13 per cent of the total amount. Therefore it will be seen that there is one-seventh of this class of money left idle in the Treasury of the United States. My friend from Connecticut, Mr. HILL, made the statement that there were two or three million dollars of that worn-out silver.

Mr. HILL. To-day there are three million, so I was told at the Treasury this morning. The ordinary stock of worn out and abraded is about five to seven millions.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. That looks unnecessary. Why do they not recoin the money as fast as received, and put it into circulation again?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman from Georgia must remember that it is coming into nine different subtreasuries all the time, and is gradually accumulating. Then it is recoined and sent out. It is not as though it was all centered in Washington. These figures cover all the nine subtreasuries throughout the country.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. I accept that statement. But we want money that is needed for circulation, money that the country seeks. The silver certificates are desirable while the subsidiary coin is not desirable, only to the extent of making change. This bill is unnecessary. It is a step to divert the coinage of the bullion in the Treasury from silver dollars into subsidiary coin.

The worst aspect of the bill is that it strikes at the silver dollars, and aims eventually to melt them down and recoin them into subsidiary coin.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman a question right there, for I know he is honest?

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Which would the gentleman rather have in his country, a single silver dollar that will not circulate or two half dollars and seven cents besides that will circulate?

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Oh, the way the gentleman puts the question, if the silver dollar would not circulate I would take the half dollars, but that is not the case.

Mr. HILL. Absolutely, because the bill limits the recoinage of the silver dollars to the public requirements, and the Secretary of the Treasury has no power to go beyond what the public demand.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. But the silver certificates against the silver dollars are the most desirable currency, and only 2½ per cent of the silver certificates are lying idle in the Treasury and the balance are eagerly sought for and taken up by the people, while you have 13 per cent of the subsidiary coin in the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury only asked for $120,000,000, and I would be willing and glad to vote for that. I desire to submit the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made to this Congress December 2, 1901, relative to subsidiary coin.

